Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Notice, order for service of, whether extends limitation—Limitation, commencement of—Affidavit of service of notice, filing of, whether step-in-aid of execution.

An order for the service of a notice made by a Court to which the notice is sent by an executing Court for service, has not the effect of extending the period of limitation prescribed by Article 182, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, for making an application for execution of a decree. [p. 2, col. 1.]

The filing of an affidavit of service of notice in the Court to which the notice is sent by the executing Court for service, is not a step-in-aid of execution of the decree [p. 2, col. 2.]

Limitation does not run from the date when the execution case is disposed of, but from the date of presentation of the application for execution. [p. 2, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the Additional District Judge, 24-Pargannas, dated the 18th September 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of that District, dated the 10th June 1918.

Babu Sarat Ohandra Mukerjee, for the Appellant.

Babu Hiralal Sanyal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the decree-holder against an order refusing execution of his decree on the ground that his application is barred by limitation. The following are the dates necessary to understand the points which have been urged at the hearing of the appeal. The decree was passed on the 10th July 1908 and an application for execution was made in 1911 with which we are not concerned. Then a second application was made in 1914. On the 18th January 1915, a notice was filed for service on the judgment-debtor, under rule 22 of Order XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the 22nd of January 1915 that notice was signed by the Sheristadar of the third Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipur. As the judgment-debtor resided in the town of Calcutta that notice was forwarded to the clerk of the Small Cause Court of Calcutta on the 22nd January and was received by him on the 23rd January 1915 for service. On the 25th January 1915, the clerk of the Small Cause Court ordered the notice of the proceedings to be served and the notice was served on the judgment-debtor in Calcutta on the 27th January 1915. On the 23th January 1915 the decree-holder's identifier made an affidavit of service in the Small Cause Court and that affidavit was forwarded with the return of service to the executing Court at Alipur. In the Alipur Court the 2nd of February had been fixed for the hearing of the execution case. On that day the case was adjourned to the next day when it was dismissed for want of prosecution. The present application for execution was filed on the 25th January 1918. The question, therefore, is whether any act was done on or after the 25th January 1915 from which the period of limitation under Article 182 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act can be held to have commenced to run. Three points have been raised on behalf of the appellant. The first is that limitation should run from the 25th January 1915 when the order for service was passed by the Small Cause Court. The second is that the filing of the affidavit on the 28th January 1915 was a step-in aid of the execution from which the period of limitation should commence and thirdly, that limitation should run from the 2nd February 1915 when the Court passed an order on the application for execution.

As regards the first point, reliance is placed on the case of Ratan Ohand Oswal v. Deb Nath Barua (1) where it was held that the date of issue of notice was the date when the Nazir of the Court made over the process to the peon for service. As regards the meaning of the word "issue" in clause (6) of Article 182 of the Indian Limitation Act, reference may be made to sections 27 and 28 of the Code of Civil Procedure and also to Order V, rule 21 and the following rules. There it is clear that the Court which issues a notice or summons is the Court having jurisdiction in the matter and not the Court to which the notice or summons is sent for service. In the present case the issuing Court is the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipur and not the Court of Small Causes in Calcutta. We cannot say that the notice can, under any circumstances, be said to have been issued on any date subsequent to its leaving the Court that was executing the decree, that is to say, the 22nd of January 1915. In the case relied on, the Nazir who made over the process to the peon for service was the Nazir of the Court executing the decree. What was held in that case was that the date of issue was the date on which the notice actually left the Court and that is the view we take in the present case. The notice actually left the Court of execution on the 22nd January, and the fact that in the Court of service it was made over to the peon on a later date cannot extend the period of limitation.

As regards the second point, it turns on the meaning of the expression "Applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution or to take some step.

in aid of execution" in clause 5 of Article 182 of the Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act. On behalf of the appellant, great reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in the case of Pran Krishna Das v. Protap Ohandra Dalal (2). In that case it was held that filing an affidavit to prove service on the judgment-debtor of a notice issued under Order XXI, rule 22 of the Civil Procedure Code was equivalent to applying to the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. At first sight this case seems to support the appellant's contention, but the facts in the present case are clearly distinguishable. In the first place the affidavit of service was never filed by the decree holder, and secondly, it was not filed in the proper Court as defined in Explanation 2 of Article 182. But in any case, we cannot hold that the filing of the affidavit in this case can be treated as an application to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution. As was pointed out in the case of Sarat Kumary Dassi v. Jagat Ohandra Roy (3) the question whether an application in aid of execution has or has not been made is a pure question of fact. In this case, the lower Appellate Court, as a final Court of fact, has held that neither a written nor an oral application was made along with the affidavit. Having regard to this finding it is unnecessary to consider the many cases cited on both sides in which certain acts by the judgment-debtor in execution proceedings were held to amount to an application to take a step-in aid of execution. If no application was made, the period of limitation cannot be extended by any act that was done.

As regards the last point, it seems obvious that if on the date of hearing the case no application by the decree holder to the Court can be implied, that date of hearing cannot be substituted for the date of the application. In the case to which we have already referred, namely, Sarat Kumary Dassi v. Jagat Ohandra Roy (3), it was held that the 3rd March 1893, that is, the date when the order was passed on the application for execution, could not be treated as the date of the application which had, in fact, been made on the 11th January 1893 as there was nothing to show that there was any fresh application made on the 3rd March 1893. Also it was pointed out in the case of Madan Mohun Dey v. Ganga Ohandra Roy (4) that the time runs from the date of the presentation of the application and not from the date on which the application is disposed of by the Court.

We, therefore, hold that this appeal fails on all the three points urged before us and is dismissed with costs.

We assess the hearing fee at five gold mohurs.

Appeal dismissed.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 20, applicability of—Hundi paper, signed but left blank, delivery of, effect of—Attachment of unsigned stamp, without authority, effect of—Estoppel.

The estoppel arising from section 20 of the Negotiable Instruments Act can only be applied to the paper or papers which the signature covers. The delivery of a hundi paper signed but left blank cannot be taken to give prima facie authority to make thereon a negotiable instrument outside the maximum value covered by the stamp by attaching thereto other unsigned stamps. [p. 4, col. 2.]

The delivery of several signed stamps separately does not give prima facie authority to stick them together for the purpose of a single instrument. It is only when the signature is across two or more stamp papers pasted together showing thereby that the several stamps have been united with the sanction of the person making the signature, that section 20 will govern as one transaction an instrument engrossed upon the joined papers. [p. 4, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Akola, in Civil Suit No. 94 of 1914, decided on 25th February 1916.

Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. Lal Mohan Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, Musammatt Sitabai and her adopted son Radhakisan, a minor under her guardianship, brought the suit giving rise to this appeal claiming Rs. 5,476.4 as due from the 1st defendant as the drawer, and the other defendants as the indorsees of a hundi for Rs. 5,000 dated the 19th July 1913 purporting to be payable in 61 days, i. e., on the 13th September 1913. The 1st defendant alone contested the suit, the other defendants remaining absent. The contending defendant urged that, taking advantage of his possession of signed hundi papers made over to him in blank, the defendant Aidan had drawn the hundi without authority and fraudulently and that the apparent drawer had received no consideration for the same.

In reply the plaintiffs denied all knowledge of the alleged circumstances under which the hundi was drawn, and pleaded sections 29 and 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, as applied to Berar, as entitling them to recover against the contending defendant. The lower Court decided the suit upon the above statutory estoppels, finding that the 1st defendant had in fact made over to the defendant Aidan, a hundi broker, hundi papers, and holding that the former could neither dispute the authority of Aidan to draw the hundi nor dispute the receipt of consideration. The Judge held, however, that, in the absence of any agreement, interest could only be claimed under section 80 of the above enactment. In accordance with these findings the plaintiff Radhakisan being found the sole owner of the firm to which the hundi was indorsed, was given a decree for Rs. 5,308.5.6 with costs and future interest. From this decree the 1st defendant has made the present appeal, and the ground urged by him amounts to this that section 20 of the above Act has been incorrectly applied to this case.

There was a marked want of intelligence upon the part of all concerned in dealing with this case. A mere perusal of the plaint, pleadings and judgment creates the impression that the Court was dealing with a hundi drawn on a single stamp paper. But that is not the case. The hundi is written across three stamp papers, only one of which is signed. The following diagram will explain this, the English words being a translation of the Guzrati in which the hundi is written :—

Hundi stamp of Rs. 3	Hundi stamp of As. 12	Hundi stamp of As. 12.
-------------------------	--------------------------	---------------------------

Sagatmal please accept the hundi
as drawn.

Hundi sold by Deokisan Aidan to Raghunathdasji Rampratap of Aidan.

A hundi for Rs. 5,000 one-half of which is rupees two thousand five hundred double thereof being the full amount of this hundi drawn by Nainsukhdas Gokuldas of Khamgaon (in Nainsukhdas Gokuldas of Khamgaon) in favour of Deokisandasji Aidan of Akola payable within 61 days from Ash Sudi 15 after being satisfied as to the identity of the person. Dated Saturday Asarh Sudi 15 S. 1970—19th July 1913.

The 1st defendant is bound by the signature on the centre paper 'Sagatmal', which is made by his authorised representative. But under each side of this paper are pasted two other hundi stamp papers which are not found to have been delivered by him to Aidan and the affixing of which enabled Aidan to draw a hundi for a sum which exceeds by more than six times the maximum sum covered by the signed paper. I am of opinion that the lower Court was wrong in applying section 20 of the Negotiable Instruments Act to these unsigned attachments. It is not alleged that there is any usage which excludes hundis in Barar from the operation of section 20, and we may, therefore, apply it. Section 20 reads thus:—

"Where one person signs and delivers to another a paper stamped in accordance with the law relating to negotiable instruments then in force in British India, and either wholly blank or having written thereon an incomplete negotiable instrument, he thereby gives prima facie authority to the holder thereof to make or complete, as the case may be, upon it a negotiable instrument for any amount specified therein and not exceeding the amount covered by the stamp. The person so signing shall be liable upon such instruments, in the capacity in which he signed the same to any holder in due course for such amount; provided that no person other than a holder in due course shall recover from the person delivering the instrument anything in excess of the amount intended by him to be paid thereunder."

Now whether we look at the language of the section, or of the whole enactment, or of the Indian Stamp Act or of the Rules made thereunder, the words "a paper stamped" mean a single sheet of paper having engraved or embossed on it or affixed to it, a revenue stamp; and though the Stamp Act and the rules thereunder allow the joining together of two or more stamp papers for the engrossing thereon of a transaction requiring the aggregate value of the stamp used, and, except in the case of hundi paper, allow the writing area of a single stamp paper to be increased by the attachment of plain paper, it is clear that the estoppel arising from a signature under section 20 can only be applied to the paper or papers which it covers. The delivery of a hundi paper signed but left blank cannot be taken to give prima facie authority to make thereon a negotiable instrument outside the maximum value covered by the stamps by attaching thereto other unsigned stamps. The delivery of several signed stamps separately does not give prima facie authority to stick them together for the purposes of a single instrument. It is only where the signature is across two or more papers pasted together, showing thereby that the several stamps have been united with the sanction of the person making the signature, that section 20 will govern as one transaction an instrument engrossed upon the joined papers. Any other view of the law would open a wide door to fraud, and destroy commercial confidence. Prima facie, if the decision of this suit is to rest on the application of section 20 aforesaid, then the plaintiff-respondent could get no more than the maximum of Rs. 800 covered by the only paper which is signed; provided he is an indorsee in good faith. But it would not be just to either party to decide a case so imperfectly pleaded and tried upon a technical ground of that kind. The finding of the Court that the 1st defendant gave signed papers to Aidan cannot apply to the unsigned paper pasted to each side of the signed paper. The addition must have been made at the time of drawing the instrument, when the amount of consideration was settled and there is neither admission nor proof that the 1st defendant delivered to Aidan wholly blank stamp papers, with authority to paste them on to signed papers. Nor could the delivery of unsigned papers raise any presumption under section 20. The case must go back as wrongly decided on a preliminary ground, namely on the assumption that section 20 applies to all the three papers of the hundi in suit.

The appeal is allowed; the decree of the lower Court is reversed and the case remanded to that Court for fresh trial and decision with advertence to the above remarks, as between the 2nd plaintiff and the 1st defendant only. The appellant will be given a refund certificate. His other costs here and hitherto and the claim of the plaintiff to costs against him will abide the result. This judgment does not affect the lower Court's decree against the defendants who have not appealed.

Appeal allowed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 114—Registered letter returned to sender as having been refused by addressee —Presumption.

Where the addressee of a letter containing a notice to quit, sent through the Post Office by registered post refuses to take delivery, a Court would be entitled, under section 114 of the Evidence Act, to presume that the letter reached him in the ordinary course. The fact that the letter was returned to the sender, not through the Dead Letter Office but as a letter which the addressee had refused to accept, would not destroy the presumption.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Hooghly, dated the 1st January 1916, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Court, at Howrah, dated the 10th September 1914.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 7th June 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif at Howrah. The plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their title and for ejectment of the defendant after service of notice to quit under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The first Court gave the plaintiffs a decree. The second Court reversed that decision acting on the decision of this Court in the case of Gobinda Chandra Saha v. Dwarka Nath Patita (1). Of course, the decision in each case must depend on the particular facts proved in that case. One must first look into the facts proved in each case and then apply the law. In this case, the evidence proves that the notice was placed in a registered cover addressed to the defendant at his residence. It was taken to the Post Office, registered there and left in the custody of the Postal authorities. Therefore, under the provisions of section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act, the letter having been properly placed in the custody of the Post Office, the Court might presume that that letter reached the defendant. The Post Office returned the letter, not through the Dead Letter Office but as a letter which the defendant had refused to accept. It seems to me that that portion of the evidence does not, in any way, destroy the presumption that the Court might make under the terms of section 114 of the Evidence Act, that that letter having been duly posted, in the ordinary course of business, reached the defendant. It is trifling with the facts of this case to come to the conclusion that proper service of the notice through the Post Office has not been made. Each case must stand on its own facts. In this case, the only conclusion that a reasonable Judge must come to on the facts proved is that the letter containing the notice to quit having been duly committed to the charge of the Postal authorities for delivery to the defendant in the ordinary course reached the defendant. That being so, I think the service of the notice to quit has been properly proved. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge must, therefore, be set aside and the decision of the Munsif restored. The appeal must be allowed, with costs, both in this Court and in the Courts below.

Trust, private—Debttar estate—Shebait, failure of line of—Founder, right of, to appoint Shebait—Removal of Shebait, suit for, maintainability of—Administration of trust—Misconduct of trustee—Discretion of Court—Trustee, whether can purchase trust property—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, applicability of, to private trust.

The rule embodied in section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be extended to private trusts. [p. 11, col. 1.]

Where the line originally indicated by the founder fails the founder or his heir has the right to nominate the shebait, and this principle applies equally to private and public trusts. [p. 11, col. 1.]

The founder or his heirs may also sue for the enforcement of the trust, for the removal of the old trustee, for the appointment of a new one and may thereby secure the proper administration of the trust and its properties. Whatever restrictions may have been prescribed by the Legislature as to the mode of institution of such suits in respect of public trusts, the rights of the founder of a private trust and his heirs remain unimpaired. [p. 11, col. 2.]

On the analogy of the well settled principle of English Law the view may be maintained that in respect of a debttar in India the founder or his heirs may invoke the assistance of a judicial tribunal for the proper administration thereof on the allegation that the trusts are not properly performed, and the case is strengthened when the management would under the terms of the trust vest in the plaintiff as the founder's heir, on a vacancy caused by the removal of the actual incumbent for misconduct. [p. 12, col. 1.]

Attorney-General v. Dedham School, (1857) 23 Beav. 350; 53 E. R. 138; 113 R. R. 169; 26 L. J. Ch. 497; 3 Jur. (N. S.) 325; 5 W. R. 395; Biddia Soonduree v. Doorganund, 22 W. R. 97; *Kazi Hassan v. A trustee cannot purchase trust property directly or indirectly from himself or at his own sale. The rule is universal that, however fair the transaction, the cestui que trust is at liberty to set aside the sale and take back the property. The law does not stop to enquire into the fairness of the sale or the adequacy of the price but stamps its disapproval upon a transaction which creates a conflict between the self-interest and the integrity of the trustee and this principle is equally applicable to the case of a purchase made by the shebait at a sale publicly held or held at the instance of a Court in execution of a decree against the debttar estate. [p. 13, cols. 1 & 2; p. 14, col. 2.]

The question as to whether there are sufficient grounds for the removal of a shebait is within the sound judicial discretion of the Court. In such a case the Court is guided by considerations of the welfare of the beneficiaries and of the trust estate, and also of a clear necessity for interference to save the trust property. [p. 18, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, dated the 23rd December 1915.

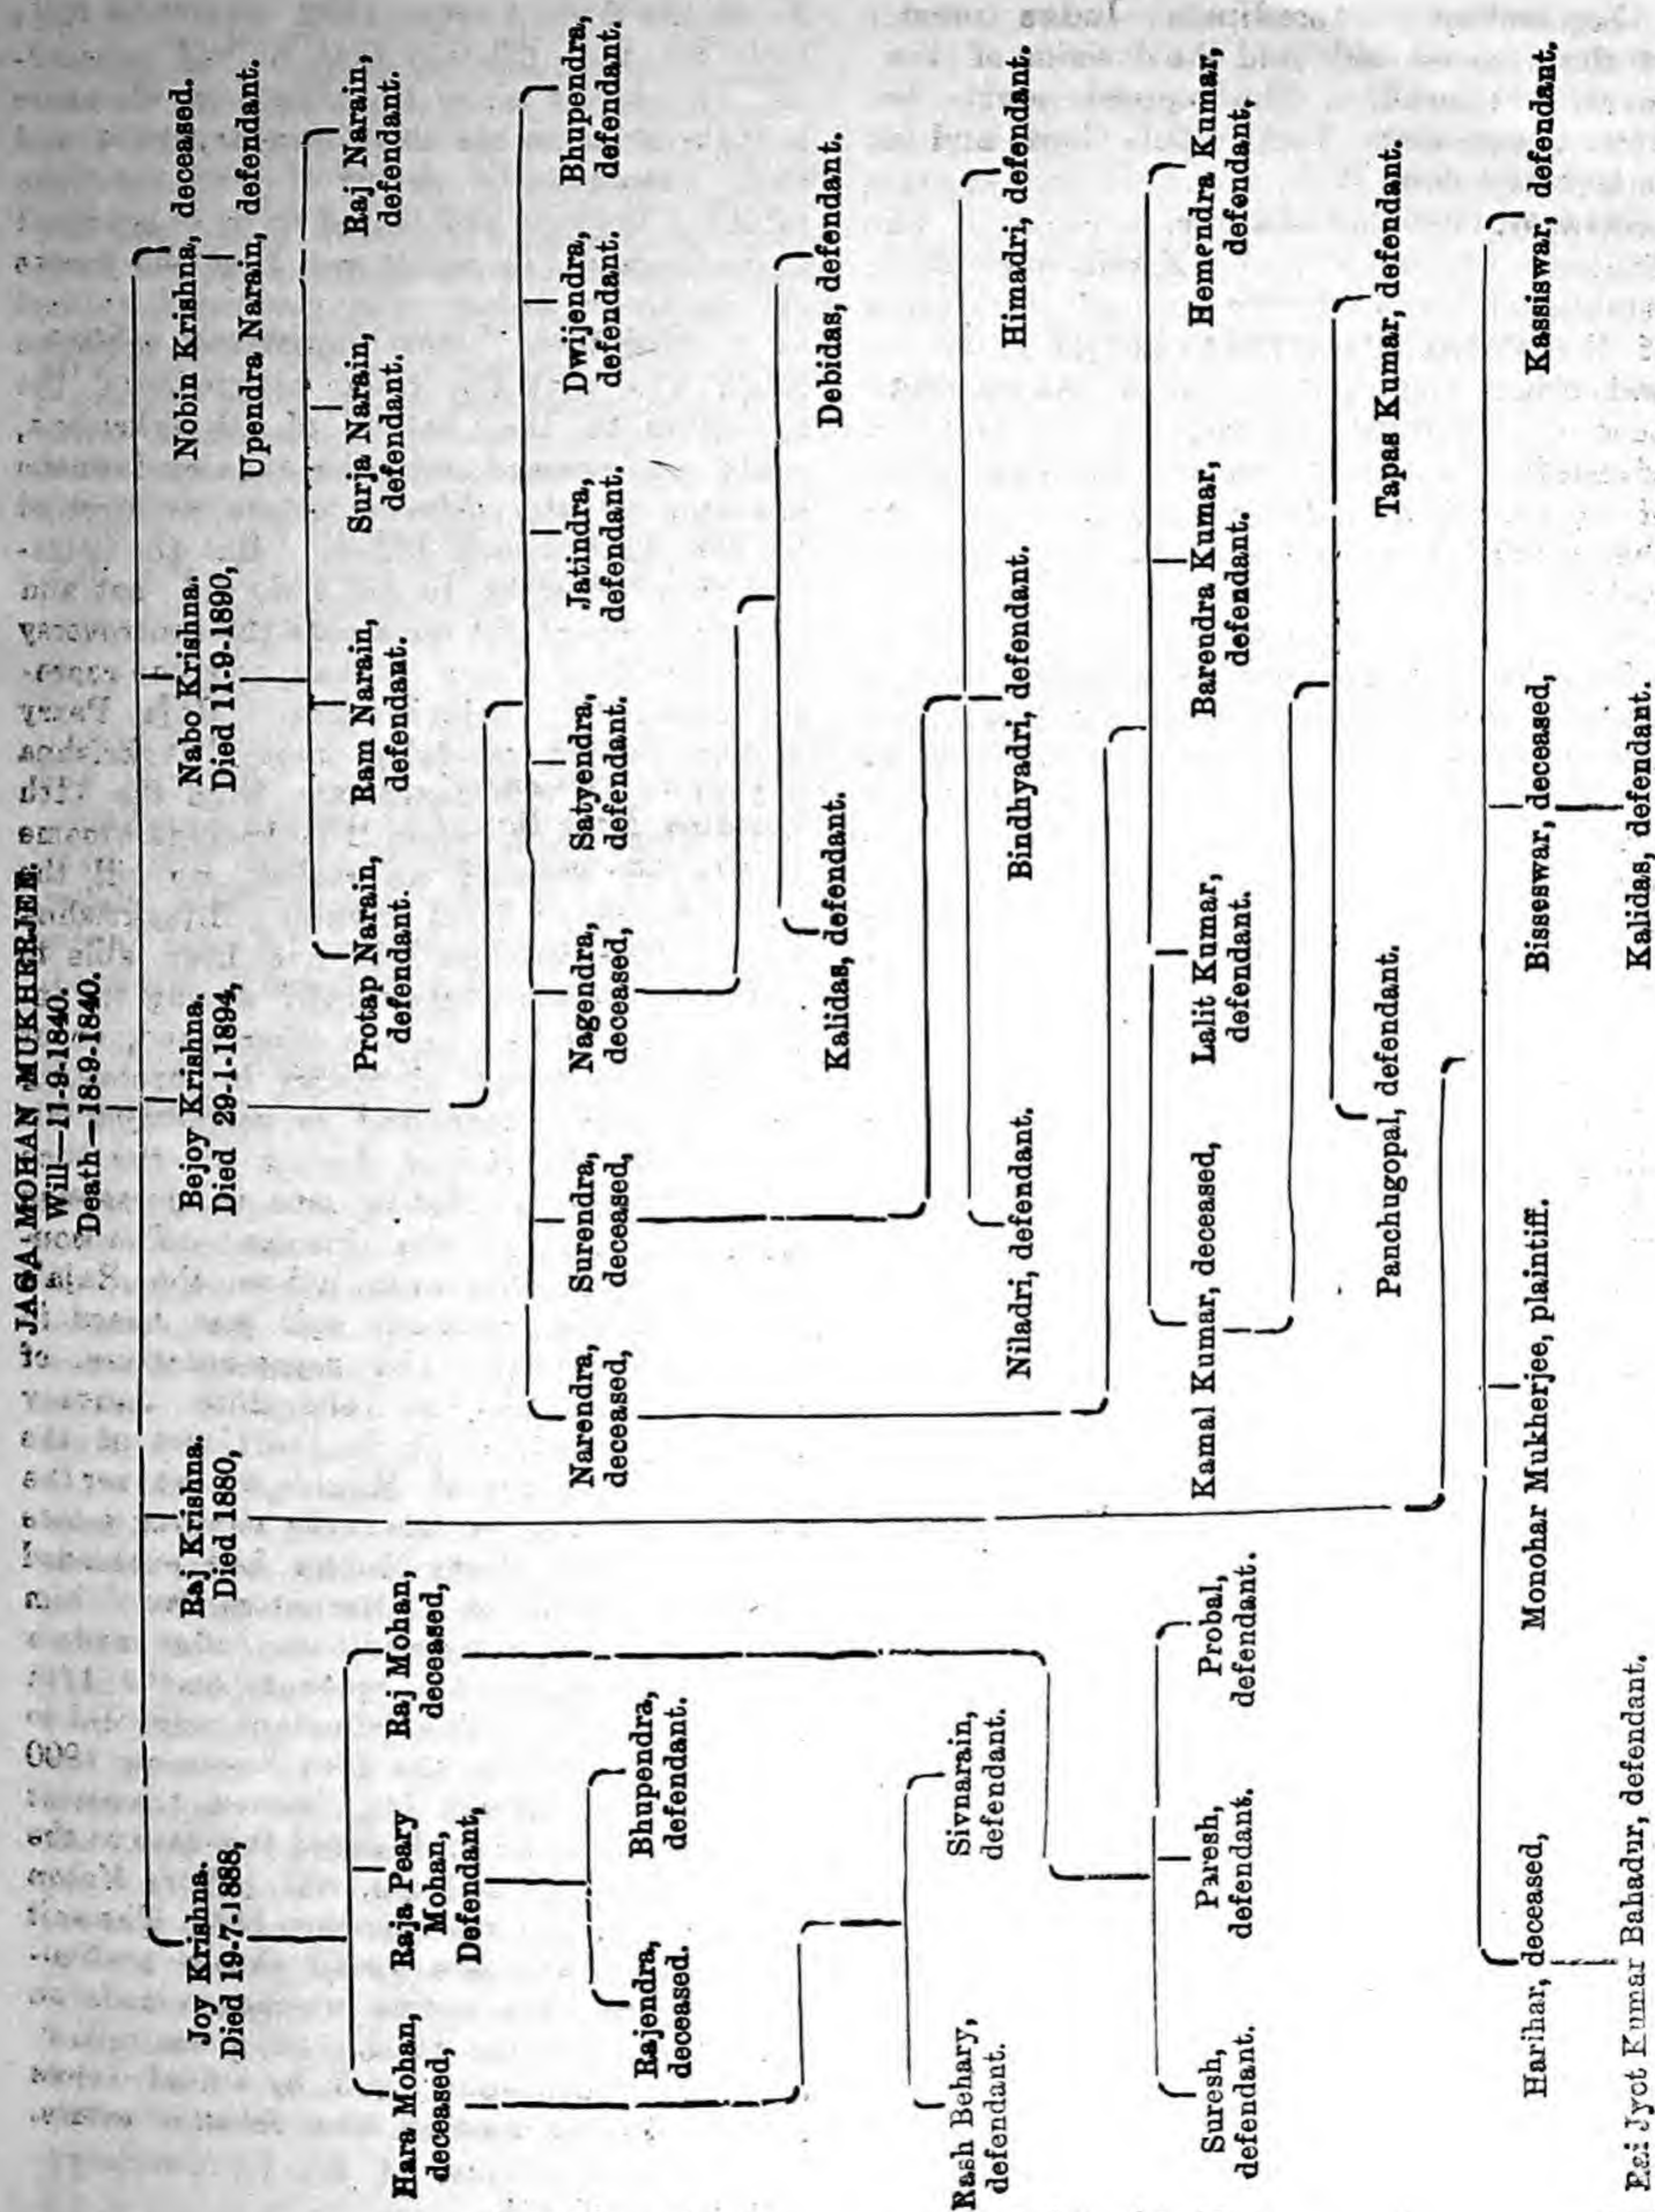

Mr. N. Sircar (with him Babus Biraj Mohan Mozumdar, Hiralal Chakravarti, Taradas Chatterjee, Sailendra Nath Chatterjee and Pramatha Nath Banerjee), for the Appellant.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Surendra Nath Roy, Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter, Babus Haradhan Chatterjee and Kumar Sankar Roy), for Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Respondents.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarti (with him Babu Bijoy Kumar Chatterjee), for Defendant No. 3, Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for the construction of a Will, for the administration of a trust (private debttar) created thereby, for the removal of the trustee, for the appointment of a new trustee or receiver, for declaration that an execution sale of a portion of the trust estate held on the 14th January 1913, when it was purchased by the son of the trustee was invalid and inoperative, for proper investment of a sum of Rs. 11,500 alleged to form part of the trust estate, and for other incidental reliefs. The Subordinate Judge has found in favour of the plaintiff upon several of the questions in controversy, but he has dismissed the suit on the ground that the allegations of misconduct have not been established and the plaintiff is not entitled to ask for the removal of the trustee. To appreciate the substantial points in dispute, between the parties (whose relationship will appear from the annexed genealogical table), it is necessary to consider briefly the history of the trust which, since its foundation, has formed the subject of many proceedings in Court.

MANOHAR MOOKERJEE v. PEARY MOHAN MOOKERJEE.

MANOHAR MOOKERJEE v. PEARY MOHAN MOOKERJEE.

Jagomohan Mookerjee, the common ancestor of the parties to this suit, made a testamentary disposition of his properties on the 11th September 1840, and died a week later. By this Will, he dedicated certain properties to the sheba or worship of two Thakurs, Sridhar and Gopaleswar Siva, established by him, the annual celebration of the Durga Paja, the Sradh of ancestors, and other pious acts, such as the maintenance of childless widows, the construction of roads for public use and the excavation of tanks. The testator also provided for the order of succession to the office of shebait among his own descendants. The first *shebait*s were his eldest son, Jaykrishna Mookerjee and Haranath Chatterjee (not a member of the family). Haranath died on the 29th January 1862, and thereafter Jaykrishna continued as sole shebait till his death on the 19th July 1888. Rajkrishna who, according to the Will, was to have followed Jaykrishna had died in 1880. Consequently Jaykrishna was succeeded by his step-brother Nabakrishna who died on the 11th September 1890. On his death, the succession opened to his brother Bijaykrishna. Raja Peary Mohan, the second son of Jaykrishna opposed Bijaykrishna and threw every possible difficulty in the way of his obtaining possession of the debuttar estate and collecting the rents. After the usual preliminary contest in the Revenue and Criminal Courts, on the 10th June 1892, Bijaykrishna instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hughli to establish his title to the office of shebait under the Will of the founder. The suit was defended by the Raja, who denied the genuineness of the Will and the existence of the debuttar. On the 29th January 1894 the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit, and on that very day Bijaykrishna died. Raja Peary Mohan preferred an appeal to this Court on the 25th January 1895 (as apparently some considerable time was taken up by proceedings for amendment of the decree) and joined as respondents the sons of Bijaykrishna who had been appointed executors to the estate of their father under his Will. In the memorandum of appeal, he challenged the factum and validity of the debuttar and completely repudiated the trust created by his grandfather. The appeal came to be heard before Maclean, C. J. and Banerjee,

J. on the 21st August 1898 when the Raja took up the position that he had succeeded as shebait upon the death of his uncle Bijaykrishna on the 29th January 1894 and that, consequently many of the questions raised in the suit had ceased to be of practical importance. The result was that the decree of the Court below was confirmed subject to modifications. One important variation made was that the then respondents, the executors to the estate of Bijaykrishna, could not proceed with the enquiry into the accounts of the debuttar estate as directed by the Subordinate Judge. But the litigation thus brought to an end, did not and obviously could not terminate the controversy between Raja Peary Mohan and the representatives of Bijaykrishna. Raja Peary Mohan had successfully kept Bijaykrishna out of the debuttar estate from the 11th September 1890, when Bijaykrishna became entitled to succeed as shebait, up till the 29th January 1894, when Bijaykrishna died. Bijaykrishna had not been able to collect more than Rs. 4,607 during his incumbency; he had, on the other hand, spent considerable sums of money in protesting the debuttar estate and in performing his obligations as shebait during all the time that Raja Peary Mohan was in possession and enjoyment of the income. The consequence was that even before the Raja's appeal in the previous suit was heard in the High Court, the representatives of Bijaykrishna had, on the 25th January 1897 instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Hughli to recover the sum of Rs. 77,964 from the debuttar estate to which Raja Peary Mohan had succeeded as shebait, or in the alternative, from him personally. The Subordinate Judge made a preliminary decree for accounts on the 17th February 1899. The defendant appealed to this Court, and on the 28th November 1900 Banerjee and Brett, J.J., directed the plaint to be amended, and remanded the case to the Court below for a fresh trial [Peary Mohan Mukherjee v. Narendra Krishna (1)]. The suit was re-tried, with the result that a preliminary decree for accounts was again made on the 10th February 1902. This was followed on the 30th June 1903 by a final decree for Rs. 45,960 against the debuttar estate.

MANOHAR MOOKERJEE v. PEARY MOHAN MOOKERJEE.

Raja Peary Mohan appealed to the High Court, with the result that the decree of the Subordinate Judge was confirmed on the 24th February 1905 by Hose and Pargiter, JJ.: Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendra Nath Mukerjee (2). The Raja was not satisfied and appealed to the Privy Council. On the 16th December 1909 the Judicial Committee dismissed the appeal and the judgment delivered by Lord Macnaghten commented upon his wrongful acts: Peary Mohan Mukerjee v. Narendra Nath Mukerjee (3). The decree-holders promptly applied for execution on the 1st May 1910 to realise a sum of Rs. 83,548 inclusive of interest and costs in all the Courts. They claimed that the costs of the Court of first instance were realisable out of the debuttar estate, while the costs of the appeals to the High Court and the Privy Council were realisable from the judgment-debtor personally. Raja Peary Mohan took various objections to the execution on the 27th July 1910, including an objection that he was not personally liable to pay the costs of the High Court and the Privy Council. These objections were overruled by the Subordinate Judge on the 3rd December 1910. Raja Peary Mohan appealed to the High Court against the decision imposing a personal liability on him, and obtained an order for stay of proceedings during the pendency of the appeal. No appeal was preferred against the order overruling his objections to execution against the debuttar estate. The result was that while execution against him personally was held up by order of the High Court, it proceeded against the debuttar estate, and an order for the sale was made by the Subordinate Judge on the 10th January 1911. Further objections were taken to the execution on the 13th January 1913, with a view to vary the order in which the attached properties were to be sold, but they proved infructuous. On the 14th January 1913, the most valuable of the properties comprised in the debuttar estate, namely, a four fifth share of lot Bahirgora was put up to auction and was purchased by Bhupendranath, one of the Raja's sons, for a sum of Rs. 1,56,600. The appeal preferred by Raja Peary Mohan against the order for personal execution was heard in this Court by Jenkins, C. J. and Ray, J. on the 23rd March 1913, and was dismissed on the ground that, under the terms of the decree of the High Court and of the Privy Council, he was personally liable for the costs awarded thereby. The Court pointed out that there was nothing inconsistent in the fact that the claim sought to be enforced had been decreed against the debuttar estate with the direction that the shebait should be personally liable for the costs of the litigation conducted by him on behalf of the Thakurs.

Meanwhile, on the 17th February 1913, that is, about a month after the sale of Bahirgora in execution and its purchase by the son of the shebait, Monohar Mookerjee, a grandson of the founder and the eldest surviving son of Rajkrishna, had instituted the present suit for administration of the trust estate. The principal defendants were Raja Peary Mohan in his capacity as shebait as also in his personal capacity, and Bhupendranath his son who had purchased Bahirgora. The plaintiff further joined as pro forma defendants members of the various branches of the family, all descendants of the founder Jagamohan Mookerjee. The suit was defended by the Raja and Bhupendranath. The former challenged all the material allegations in the plaint, while the latter alleged that as he had purchased Bahirgora for himself with his own money, the property in his hands could not be declared to be trust property. The fourth defendant, Pratapnarin, the eldest son of Nabakrishna, also filed a written statement, which does not require further consideration; no relief is claimed against him and he has died during the pendency of this litigation. The following thirteen issues were raised on these pleadings:

1. Has the plaintiff right of suit and cause of action?
2. Has this Court jurisdiction to try this suit? Is the suit maintainable in the way in which it has been framed?
3. Has the plaintiff the right to maintain this suit under section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code?
4. Is the plaint sufficiently stamped?
5. Is the suit barred by limitation, estoppel and acquiescence?

MANOHAR MOOKERJEE v. PEARY MOHAN MOOKERJEE.

6. Is the plaintiff as the next presumptive shebait for the time being entitled to the declaration sought for by him, and was Bhupendranath Mookerjee (defendant No. 3) colluding with Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee (defendants Nos. 1 and 2) in the purchase of the debuttar property or was he an innocent purchaser for value without the knowledge of the Raja's wrongdoings?

7. Are the allegations of misconduct made by the plaintiff against defendant No. 1 true? If so, are they sufficient to justify the latter's removal from the shebaitship?

8. Is the plaintiff entitled under the terms of the Will of the late Babu Jagomohan Mookerjee to ask for the removal of the defendant No. 1 from the shebaitship and for the appointment of another trustee in his place, and to have a scheme for the execution of the trust prepared by the Court?

9. Whether the defendant No. 3 purchased the debuttar property at the auction sale as a mere benamdar for Raja Peary Mohan Mookerjee?

10. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the declaration that 12-annas, 16 gandas of Bahirgora with Chakran purchased by defendant No. 3 at auction is debuttar property still?

11. Whether the defendant No. 1 can be restrained from withdrawing the surplus sale-proceeds deposited in Court in execution case No. 52 of 1910?

12. What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to?

13. Which of the parties has under the terms of the Will of late Jagomohan Mookerjee the best claim to the shebaitship of the Thakurs and the debuttar estate? Is defendant No. 4 the best entitled to claim them as Jaishta Putra of the Bansha?

The Subordinate Judge has found against the plaintiff on the second part of issue No. 1, on the first part of issue No. 6, and on issues Nos. 7, 8 and 10, but in his favour on the first part of issue No. 1, issues Nos. 2, 3, 5, second part of issue No. 6, issues Nos. 9 and 13. On these findings, the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit with costs.

In support of the present appeal, preferred by the plaintiff, two substantial grounds have been urged, namely, first, that in the circumstances disclosed in the evidence, notwithstanding the sale of the Bahirgora in execution and its purchase by the son of the shebait with funds supplied by his father, the property should in law be still regarded as part of the trust estate, and, secondly, that in view of the past conduct of the shebait in relation to the debuttar estate and his present position which involves a clear conflict of duty and self-interest, he should be removed from the office of shebait. On behalf of the respondent shebait the validity of these contentions has been questioned, and it has been urged in addition that the plaintiff is not competent to maintain the present suit. On behalf of Bhupendra, the son of the shebait, the finding of the Subordinate Judge that he was not the real purchaser has been assailed, and an endeavour has been made to support the decree on the ground that he is entitled to the protection enjoyed by a bona fide purchaser for value. The reasons assigned by the shebait to justify the decree made by the Subordinate Judge have also been reiterated on behalf of Bhupendranath, though as purchaser he is not directly concerned with the matters raised therein. The questions which emerge from the elaborate arguments addressed to us by the several parties may be conveniently examined in the following order:

(i) Is the plaintiff competent to maintain the present suit?

(ii) What is the true nature of the purchase of Bahirgora in execution by Bhupendra and what is the legal effect thereof on the debuttar estate?

(iii) Have sufficient grounds been established for the removal of the shebait?

As regards the first question, the defendants have contended that as the plaintiff has no present interest in the debuttar estate, he is not competent to maintain this action. No authority has been cited in support of this argument, but reference has been made to section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section, it is conceded, is applicable only to trusts created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature; suits in respect of alleged breaches of such public charities may be instituted, either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust who have obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General. The defendants respondents have laid stress on the fact that the object of this restriction was to prevent the institution of an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits against the trustees of a public charity by individuals interested in the trust: Sajedur Raja Chowdhuri v. Gour Mohun Das (4), Budree Das v. Ohooni Lal (5), D'Oruz v. D'Silva (6), and they have pressed us to extend, to private trusts by way of analogy, the rule embodied in section 92, and to hold that, as in the case of public trusts so also in the case of private trusts, the interest of the plaintiff in the trust, sufficient to qualify him to maintain his suit, must be an existing interest, not a mere contingency nor the mere possibility of succession to the managership of the trust properties. Mohiuddin v. Sayiduddin (7), Budh Singh Dudhuria v. Niradbaran Roy (8). But we cannot accept the contention of the respondents as well-founded either on authority or on principle. In the case before us, according to the Will of the founder, the plaintiff stands, after Raja Peary Mohan, the next in order among persons entitled to succeed to the office of shebait, as (Bansher Jaishta Putra) the eldest male member among the descendants of Jagomohan Mookerjee; as such, he is clearly competent to maintain this suit. It is not necessary for our present purpose to recapitulate all the rights of the founder of a charitable trust or of his heirs in relation to the trust. The authorities are clear upon the point that, in certain events, for instance, where the line originally indicated by the founder fails, the founder or his heir has the right to nominate the shebait or have vested in him the shebaitship, and this principle is applicable equally to private and public trusts: Sital Das Babaji v. Pertap Ohunder Sarma (9), Raj Krishna Dey v. Bipin Behari Dey (10), Boidyo Gauranga Sahu v. Sudevi Mata (11). Analogous to this doctrine is the principle that the founder or his heirs may sue for the enforcement of the trust, for the removal of the old trustee, for the appointment of a new one and may thereby secure the proper administration of the trust and its properties. Whatever restrictions may have been prescribed by the Legislature as to the mode of institution of such suits in respect of public trusts, the rights of the founder of a private trust or of his heirs remain unimpaired. Such right of suit by the founder or his heirs is recognised in a long series of decisions: Bhurruck Chunder Sahoo v. Golam Shuruff (12), Mohesh Chunder v. Koylash Ohunder (13), Biddia Soonduree v. Doorganund (14), Sheoratan Kunwari v. Ram Pargash (15), Giyana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi v. Kandasami Tambiran (16), Sathappayyar v. Periasami (17), Gajopati v. Bhagavan Doss (18), Ganapati Ayyan v. Savithri Ammal (19). As Lord Mansfield, observed in St. John's College v. Toligton (20) a charitable foundation, so far as it is charitable, that is, so far as it is formed to give effect to a charitable purpose in reference to property provided by the founder, is the creature of the founder. He has the right to determine, when the charitable foundation is established, the mode in which the foundation shall be governed and its revenues applied, and the law reserves to him and his heirs or appointees certain permanent functions with a view to prevent what is called by Holt, C. J., "all perverting of the charity": Phillips v. Bury (21). This right, according to Lord Hardwicke, has its origin in "the property of the donor and the power which every one has to dispose, direct and regulate his own property": Green v. Rutherford (22). Under the Law of England it is well-settled that if a private person is the founder of a charitable corporation, then he and his heirs are the visitors, and it is only where the line of heirs of a private founder has become extinct, or where they cannot be found or are incompetent to act, that the visitatorial power devolves on the Crown. Attorney-General v. Gaunt (23), Attorney-General v. Dedham School (24). We are of opinion that on the analogy of this well-recognised principle, the view may be maintained that in respect of a debttar in this country, the founder or his heirs may invoke the assistance of a judicial tribunal for the proper administration thereof on the allegation that the trusts are not properly performed; and the case is strengthened when the management would, under the terms of the trust, vest in the plaintiff as the founder's heir, on a vacancy caused by the removal of the actual incumbent for misconduct: Biddia Soonduree v. Doorganund (14); Kazi Hasan v. Sagun (25), Prosunno Moyee Dosse v. Koonjo Beharee (26), Ram Narain Singh v. Ramoon Paurey (27). We hold accordingly that the plaintiff is entitled to maintain the present suit.

As regards the second question, three points require examination, namely, first, who supplied the purchase-money; secondly, if the purchase-money was supplied by Raja Peary Mohan, can the validity of the sale be successfully impeached, as between the debttar estate on the one hand and the nominal purchaser on the other; and thirdly, if the sale can be impeached, on what terms should the property be restored to the debttar estate.

As regards the first of these points, it has, in our opinion, been conclusively established that the purchase-money was supplied by the Raja. The property was knocked down to Bhupendra on his bid of Rs. 1,56,600. Rs. 40,000 which was slightly in excess of one-fourth of the purchase money, was deposited on his behalf forthwith. The chalan shows that the deposit was made by Kanti Chandra Rarhi the Raja's Am Moktear. Bhupendra admits that he received on the date of sale Rs. 37,400 from his father. Raja Peary Mohan confirms this statement and adds that this was part of money which had been received by him about that date from his Zemindari is Sagar Islands. Bhupendra states that, in order to make up the sum of Rs. 40,000, he borrowed Rs. 2,600 from an officer of his cousin Prabal Chandra Mookerjee, who confirms the allegation and adds that he was repaid the loan two or three days later. The balance of the purchase-money Rs. 1,16,600 was deposited on the 28th January 1913 with a chalan, which sets out the numbers of the currency notes. There were ten notes of Rs. 10,000 each and sixteen notes of Rs. 1,000 each, besides sixty notes of Rs. 10 each. The whole of this money has been traced to the Raja. It is proved that Bhupendra obtained Rs. 1,16,000 from the Bank of Bengal on a deposit of Government securities for Rs. 1,30,000. These securities stood in the name of Raja Peary Mohan up to the 9th January 1913, and were thereafter endorsed by him in favour of Bhupendra who pledged them with the Bank on the 25th January 1913. An account was opened by the Bank with Bhupendra on that date; this was closed on the 3rd February 1914. There is thus no escape from the position that the whole of the purchase-money was supplied by the Raja to Bhupendra. Bhupendra states, in the course of his deposition, that he had in his possession Rs. 55,000 which he had kept concealed from his father. If this be true, his position is certainly not improved; if he applied money, which belonged to his father, to make the purchase, the property would clearly belong to his father. There is also the significant circumstance that Bhupendra had no separate funds of his own and that father and son lived as members of a joint family. On these facts, it is not very material to discuss the motive which actuated Raja Peary Mohan when he made over to his son Bhupendra the sum of money with a view to purchase the property Bahirgora. An elaborate story has been developed to the effect that this payment was made in pursuance of a scheme for a special testamentary gift in favour of Bhupendra contained in a Will executed by Raja Peary Mohan on the 5th June 1912. But this Will has been superseded, and after the institution of the present suit, Raja Peary

MANOHAR MOOKERJEE v. PEARY MOHAN MOOKERJEE.

Mohan has executed a deed of settlement, on the 27th October, 1913. We cannot also overlook the fact that the theory of a special gift in favour of Bhupendra who was to receive the Zemindari of Sagar Islands (a property which, it is alleged, might, for its preservation, entail heavy and unexpected expenditure on the owner) does not fit in exactly with the gift of a large sum of money for investment in the way of purchase of a property for more than its full value. But whatever motive may have inspired the Raja, the facts remain incontestable that he was the shebait of this property, that it was brought to sale in execution of a decree liable to be satisfied partly from the debuttar estate and partly from himself, and that at the execution sale which took place it was purchased by his son Bhupendra with funds entirely supplied by him.

As regards the second point, the plaintiff-appellant has contended that, as between the debuttar estate and the shebait, the sale of Bahirgora is inoperative in law, on well-recognised principles of Equity Jurisprudence. In support of this position, reliance has been placed upon the cases of Campbell v. Walker (28), Lacy, Ex parte (29), James, Ex parte (30), Bennett, Ex parte (31), Randall v. Errington (32), Sanderson v. Walker (33), Downes v. Graebrook (34), Farrar v. Farrar (35) and Baroda Prasad Banerji v. Gajendra Nath Banerji (36). These cases, it has been argued, recognise what must now be regarded as an elementary rule, namely, that a trustee cannot purchase trust property from himself or at his own sale. The law does not stop to enquire into the fairness of the sale or the adequacy of the price, but stamps its disapproval upon a transaction which creates a conflict between the self-interest and the integrity of the trustee. The respondents have not disputed the correctness of this rule, but have urged that a trustee for the sale of property cannot himself be the purchaser of it, because no person can at the same time fill the two opposite characters of vendor and purchaser and that consequently the disability, does not apply to a case where, as here, the property is publicly sold by a Court in execution of a decree. The respondents have further contended that in cases of purchase at execution sales, the same principle should be applied as governs a purchase of trust property by a trustee from his cestui que trust: Denton v. Donner (37), Luff v. Lord (38); in other words, such a transaction should not be pronounced inoperative, but should only be jealously scrutinised, so that if it is impeached by the cestui que trust, the trustee must show that there has been no fraud or concealment or advantage taken by him of information acquired by him in the character of trustee and that the consideration paid was adequate Dougan v. Macpherson (39). The question thus raised is of great importance and requires careful examination.

It is regarded as a principle of fundamental importance in English Equity Jurisprudence that a trustee for sale is absolutely and entirely, disabled from purchasing the trust property, directly or indirectly. The rule is universal that, however fair the transaction, the cestui que trust is at liberty to set aside the sale and take back the property. Weighty reasons have been assigned by eminent Judges in support of this rule. If a trustee were permitted to buy in an honest case, he might buy in a case having that appearance, but which, from the infirmity of human testimony, might remain undetected: Bennett, Ex parte (31) (Eldon, L. C.); in other words, the ground of the rule is that though you may see in a particular case that the trustee has not made an advantage, it is impossible to examine sufficiently in ninety nine cases out of a hundred whether he has made an advantage or not Williams v. Scott (40). It is equally well settled that a trustee for other purposes than for sale cannot purchase the property where the purchase would conflict with his duty respecting it or his position in regard to it; but in this class of cases, there is no absolute rule against his purchasing the trust property from his cestui que trust, although Courts of Equity always regard such transactions with the utmost jealousy and will not hesitate to set them aside if their fairness is not conclusively established. The controversy before us has centred round the question, which of these principles governs the present case. Now, it is perfectly plain that the sale in this case was not by a cestui que trust to the trustee. As Sir Arthur Wilson pointed out in delivering the opinion of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Hemanta Kumari Debi (41) though there is no doubt that an idol may be regarded as a juridical person, capable as such of holding property, it is only in an ideal sense that property is so held, for the possession and management of the dedicated property must, in the nature of things, belong to the shebait, whether the religious dedication is of the completest kind known to the law or is of a less strict character. Consequently, when a shebait purchases debuttar property it is a purchase by a person who is the custodian of the property and who is charged with the duty to preserve it for the benefit of the endowment. In a case of this description, if the purchase were allowed, precisely the same mischiefs would result as have been apprehended by eminent Judges in cases of purchases of trust properties by trustees for sale. Indeed, the mischief might be of a more aggravated character, less likely to be discovered and rectified, as, unless the shebait was removed, it might be impossible to determine the impropriety of the transaction and the injury inflicted thereby on the debuttar estate. If the contrary view prevailed, it is not inconceivable that an unscrupulous shebait, anxious to seize a particular portion of the debuttar estate for his personal use, might, notwithstanding ample funds at his disposal, be encouraged to borrow money in the character of shebait, allow a decree to be passed against him, acquiesce in the consequent execution sale, and ultimately purchase the property in his private capacity. The true nature of a scheme of this character, elaborately planned and carefully carried out, would never be unraveled, except probably by a person intimately acquainted with the minutest details of the administration of the debuttar estate. On the other hand, if the shebait were allowed to bid, his interest would be to secure the property at the lowest price, and if he became the purchaser, an application to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularities in the proceedings would obviously be out of the question. In our opinion, no difference should, in this class of cases, be made in the application of this principle, by reason of the fact that the purchase is made at a sale publicly held or held at the instance of a Court in execution of a decree against the debuttar estate. This view is supported by principles adopted in cases of the highest authority.

Reference may be made, for instance, to the decision of the House of Lords in York Buildings Co. v. Mackenzie (42). The appellants in that case were an insolvent company and their estates were sold by order of the Court of Session at a public judicial sale to satisfy creditors. The procedure at such sales was to set up the property at a value fixed upon by the Court, which is called the upset price and which is founded on information procured by the common agent of the Court, who has the management of all the outdoor business of a cause. The respondent was the common agent in that cause, and he purchased for himself, at the upset price, no person appearing to bid more, and the sale was confirmed by the Court. In the course of eleven years, the purchaser in possession expended large sums for building and improvements. There was no question as to the fairness and integrity of the purchase, but the appellants sought to set aside the sale and to have the estate sold anew on the ground that the respondent (the common agent in Court, on behalf of all parties, to procure information and attend the sale) was in the nature of a trustee and so disabled to purchase. The case was argued before the House of Lords for sixteen days, by Counsel of the highest eminence, with exceptional ability and learning. The appellants contended that the common agent was under a disability to purchase, arising from his office; that the rule was founded on reason and nature and prevailed wherever any well-regulated administration of justice was known; that the disability rested on the same principle which dictates that a person cannot be both Judge and party and serve two masters; that he who is entrusted with the interest of another cannot be allowed to make the business an object to himself, because, from the frailty of human nature, one who has power will be too readily seized with the inclination to serve his own interest at the expense of those for whom he is entrusted; that the danger of temptation does, out of the mere necessity of the case, work a disqualification, because nothing less than incapacity is able to shut the door against temptation where the danger is imminent and the security against discovery great; "that the wise policy of the law had, therefore, put the sting of disability into the temptation, as a defensive weapon against the strength of the danger which lies in the situation;" that the parts which the buyer and seller have to act stand in direct opposition to each other in point of interest, and this conflict of interest is the rock for shunning which the disability has obtained its force, by making that person who has the one part entrusted to him incapable of acting on the other side. This argument was fortified by references to the Roman Law, showing clearly that the same principle had a deep and firm foundation in that system and was most extensively applied, as for instance, to guardians, tutors, curators procurators, judicial officers and all other persons who had a concern in the disposition and sale of the property of others, whether the sale was public or private, judicial or otherwise (Dig. Lib. 18 tit. 1, Ch. 34, lib. 18, tit. 1, Ch. 46 and lib. 26, tit. 8, Ch. 5). The respondent admitted the general principle, but denied its application. The House of Lords set aside the sale and ordered the purchaser to account for the rents and profits, with a liberal allowance to him for his permanent improvements. The judgments delivered by the House of Lords are not set out in the report by Brown but the opinions of Lord Thurlow and Lord Loughborough, L. C., as also the interlocutors of the Scotch Judges whom they reversed will be found in the report by Paton. This decision carried the doctrine to its full extent and later decisions, as will presently appear do no depart therefrom.

In Grover v. Hugell (43) Sir John Leach, M. R., had to deal with a case where, on the sale for redemption of land tax of the glebe of a rectory, the rector himself had become the actual purchaser in the name of his curate. He held that the sale could not be sustained in a Court of Equity and observed as follows: "The general rule in Equity is that a man cannot place himself in a situation in which his interest conflicts with his duty. The duty of the rector was, to obtain the best possible price for the land sold; and his interest as purchaser was, to pay the least possible price. It is no answer to say, that the superintendence of the Commissioners would secure a full price. The sale is to be by public auction and before two of the Commissioners or some person appointed by them; and their approbation of the sale is required by the Act; but still the duty of the rector was to give his aid to the procuring of the best possible price." The same principle had been enunciated by Sir Thomas Plumer, M. R. in Stratford v. Twynan (44) though he held that an execution creditor was not a trustee within the meaning of the rule and was not incompetent to purchase at the sale held by the Sheriff of the property seized in execution. The decision in Guest v. Smythe (45) recognises the same rule, though the Court of Appeal did not adopt the view of the Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly) that the purchaser in that case (the Solicitor, not of a party to the suit but of some creditors of the mortgagee, one of whom had obtained a decree for administration of the mortgagee's estate) stood in a fiduciary relation and was disqualified in the same way as a trustee would have been. An instructive case came before the Court of Appeal in Nugent v. Nugent (46). The Court of Appeal unanimously affirmed the decision of the primary Court, Nugent v. Nugent (47) that a Receiver appointed by the Court cannot purchase the property of which he is Receiver, without leave of the Court, even where the sale is made, not in the action in which he was appointed, but by a mortgagee selling with leave outside the action. Cozens Hardy, M. R. observed that the Receiver was in a fiduciary position and held that, in dealing with this class of cases, the Court does not proceed upon the footing that there has been fraud or improper concealment or any special advantage taken by the Receiver; it proceeds upon the general rule that, in cases of this kind, the purchase ought not to be allowed at all, because it is a dangerous thing to allow, as in most cases it is impossible to ascertain whether the Receiver has or has not taken undue advantage of his position. The Master of the Rolls declined to go into the question whether, under the special circumstances of the case, there was any great probability of fraud. Fletcher Moulton, L. J. observed that the general principle which actuates the Court in deciding its procedure in matters of this kind is that nobody must allow himself to get into a position where his interest conflicts with his duty. The Court carries out this principle, not by examining each particular case and weighing the details of the conflict between interest and duty, but by certain prohibitions with regard to persons who hold positions in which such a conflict might arise, and the Court has been very severe in past times in the rules which it has made for this purpose. Buckley, L. J. adopted the same view and observed that a person standing in a fiduciary relation cannot be allowed to put himself in a position in which his interest and his duty may conflict; if he does so, it is not necessary to show that he acted contrary to his duty; the Court will not allow him to buy, if the position is such that he might be guilty of a breach of his duty. Reference was made in support of this view to the decision of Sir Michael O'Loughlen, M. R. in Alven v. Bond (48). It was ruled in that case that a purchase by a trustee at a sale, under the decree of the Court, of property with which he is connected by virtue of his office, cannot be sustained, if made without the sanction of the Court or the assent of the parties interested, but concealed from both. In answer to the argument that the proposed order for cancellation was one which no other Judge had ever ventured to make, the Master of the Rolls replied that it was not the introduction of a new doctrine into a Court of Equity and referred to James, Ex parte (30), where Lord Eldon, L. C. had pronounced against the validity of such a transaction on the ground "that no Court is equal to the examination and ascertainment of the truth in much the greater number of cases." Precisely the same view had been taken by Sir William McMahon, M. R., in White v. Tommy (49) and by Sir Edward Sugden, when Lord Chancellor of Ireland, in Boddington v. Langford (50): [See also Hamilton v. Young (51)].

It will be observed that reference is made in some of these judicial decisions to purchases by persons in a fiduciary relation with the leave of the Court. It is important to bear in mind that even in cases where the transaction is not absolutely prohibited, this leave of the Court must be obtained before the sale takes place. In Lewis v. Hillman (52), Lord St. Leonards said: "I should lay it down as a rule that ought never to be departed from, that if an Attorney or agent can show that he is entitled to purchase, yet, if instead of openly purchasing, he purchases in the name of a trustee or agent, without disclosing the fact, no such purchase as that can stand for a single moment. Such a transaction, to stand, must be open and fair, and free from all objections." These observations were referred to with approval by Lord Cairns in McPherson v. Watt (53), "an Attorney is not affected by the absolute disability to purchase which attaches to a trustee. But, for manifest reasons, if he becomes the buyer of his client's property, he does so at his peril. He must be prepared to show that he has acted with the completest faithfulness and fairness; that his advice has been free from all taint of self-interest; that he has not misrepresented anything, or concealed anything, that he has given an adequate price and that his client has had the advantage of the best professional assistance, which, if he had been engaged in a transaction with a third party, he could possibly have afforded. And although all these conditions have been fulfilled, though there has been the fullest information, the most disinterested Counsel, and the fairest price, if the purchase be made covertly in the name of another, without communication of the fact to the vendor, the law condemns and invalidates it utterly." See also Luddys Trustee v. Pearl (54), Farmer v. Dean (55).

The principles thus recognised by English Equity Jurisprudence have been adopted by the Courts of the United States as founded on manifest reasons of justice and good conscience, and one of the most familiar doctrines of the law of trusts recognised there is stated to be that a trustee cannot in his private capacity purchase trust property at a sale held in execution of a decree made against himself as trustee. The leading decision on the subject is the classical judgment of Chancellor Kent in Devoue v. Fanning (56), where he held that a trustee cannot become the purchaser at a judicial foreclosure sale of the trust property, unless he is expressly allowed to do so by the Court; it makes no difference in the application of the rule that the sale is at public auction, bona fide and for a fair price. This was emphasised by Chancellor Walworth in DeCaters v. DeOhaumand (57) where, in answer to the contention that if the trustee had not bid, the price would not have been enhanced, he quoted the language of Lord

Eldon in James, Ex parte (30), "it is better for the general interests of justice that in some cases a loss should be sustained by the cestui que trust than a rule should be established, which would occasion loss in much more numerous cases." The same rule was affirmed in Chapin v. Weed (58), where the principle was stated to be that a trustee cannot become the purchaser, for his own benefit, of the property assigned to him in trust, and he cannot become such purchaser, even though the sale is a judicial one, made without the contrivance or procurement of the trustee, unless by the order of sale he is expressly allowed so to purchase. The question was elaborately examined by the Supreme Court of the United States in Michoud v. Girod (59) and the rule was affirmed that a purchase by an executor, through a third person, of property of the testator is void, though the sale was held at a public auction, judicially ordered, and the evidence showed that fair price was paid. The Court has approved of this doctrine in later cases: Magruder v. Drury (60), U. S. v. Carter (61). But, in one jurisdiction (Texas), the view has been maintained that the trustee may purchase the trust property at a judicial sale, which has been brought about by a third party, which he has taken no part in procuring and which he could not have controlled: Allen v. Gillette (62), Starkweather v. Jenner (63). This, however, is regarded as in the nature of a deviation from the well settled rule; it has been restricted to cases of quasi trustees and has not been applied to trustees proper (Story on Equity Jurisprudence, 1918, 446, and Pomeroy on Equity Jurisprudence, 1918, sections 958, 1052, 1078). We hold accordingly that where a decree has been obtained against a shebait as representative of the debuttar estate, he is not competent, without the leave of the Court, to purchase the debuttar property in his personal capacity.

In view of this conclusion it is not necessary for us to investigate whether the debuttar estate has suffered a pecuniary loss by the sale of the property in question; but we may state that there is no reason to apprehend that the property has not been sold for its full value. The assertion of the defendants that the property has been sold for about double its real value is, however, not so clear. Reference has been made to the annual income of the property, stated to be about Rs. 4,500 a year, and on this basis the contention has been put forward that the price paid at the sale is much in excess of its market value; but it must be remembered that the bid sheet makes it abundantly clear that the competition was keen and more than one bidder, including the representative of the Mahanta of Tarakeswar, offered sums in excess of a lakh and a quarter. Indeed, a nephew of the defendant offered Rs. 1,29,400. It thus seems probable that we do not know enough about the property and that its potential value is much higher than what is indicated by its present income.

The question next arises as to the terms on which the property should be directed to be held as part of the debuttar estate, notwithstanding the sale. It is manifest that the sale cannot be set aside in so far as the execution creditor is concerned. His decree has been satisfied and there was no misconduct on his part which could prejudice his position. When the property reverts to the debuttar estate, the surplus sale-proceeds must plainly be returned to the shebait. The consequence will be that the shebait will be deemed to have satisfied the decree obtained by the representative of Bijay Krishna and will be entitled to be reimbursed out of the debuttar estate on this basis. The materials on the record are, however, not sufficient to enable us to determine this matter finally, and the question of the precise amount which the shebait is entitled to realise out of the debuttar estate, on the footing that he has satisfied the claim of the execution creditor, must be investigated in a supplementary proceeding; when such enquiry is held, it must be borne in mind that the decree for costs of the High Court and the Privy Council was realisable from the shebait personally.

We have finally to deal with the third question, namely, whether sufficient grounds have been established for the removal of the shebait. No useful purpose would be served by an examination of decided cases to determine what constitutes a sufficient reason for removing a trustee. The matter is peculiarly within what is called the sound judicial discretion of the Court. The Court is guided by considerations of the welfare of the beneficiaries and of the trust estate; and there must be a clear necessity for interference to save trust property. In the case before us, the plaintiff-appellant has urged that the conduct of the shebait, during many years past, has been detrimental to the best interests of the debuttar estate. Stress has been laid on the circumstance that upon the death of Nabakrishna on the 11th September 1890, Raja Peary Mohan seized the debuttar estate in assertion of a hostile title and successfully kept Bijay Krishna, the lawful shebait, out of possession. The result was that the debuttar estate became involved in ruinous litigation. The suit instituted by Bijay Krishna on the 10th June 1892 did not terminate in the trial Court till the very date of his death; and though thereupon Raja Peary Mohan himself became entitled to succeed as shebait, he still persisted in his repudiation of the Will of his grandfather and of the debuttar created thereby, and preferred and prosecuted an appeal in the High Court on that basis. Good sense prevailed, however, in the end, and the decree of this Court made on the 24th August 1898 recognised the validity of the debuttar. But it was impossible that the debuttar estate could be freed from the risks of litigation by this belated repentance on the part of the Raja. The representatives of Bijay Krishna instituted their suit on the 25th January 1897, for enforcement of their claim against him and the debuttar estate in his hands. This was inevitable and their claim had to be resisted. This expensive litigation lasted, as we have seen, for very nearly thirteen years, till it was terminated by the decree of the Privy Council on the 10th January 1910. Then followed as a corollary the equally inevitable execution proceedings, which ended in the sale of the most valuable property included in the debuttar estate on the 14th January 1913, and we cannot overlook the fact that the sale was precipitated, as the execution against the Raja personally was held up. It is indisputable that this misfortune is ultimately traceable to his inveterate hatred of Bijay Krishna, the result, we were told, of an old family feud. But whatever motives might have actuated him, we are concerned only with the result of his acts. The consequence has been that, while during the time of his father, out of the receipts of the debuttar estate, savings were steadily effected and were invested in Government securities and landed properties, so as to raise the annual income from Rs. 4,000 to Rs. 10,000, during his time, by reason of his unwise acts, the debuttar estate has been involved in successive protracted litigations, is now burdened with heavy debts, and has lost the most valuable portion of its assets. We are thus driven to the conclusion that his connection with the debuttar estate has been singularly unfortunate and has led to the most unhappy results. But this is not all. Events have so shaped themselves that a situation has arisen which involves him in clear conflict of duty and self-interest. In the view we have taken, the property sold in execution must be restored to the debuttar estate, while the shebait must be reimbursed to an extent which requires judicial determination. Further, the evidence shows that the shebait has set up a claim to realise from the debuttar estate considerable sums of money on account of litigation expenses. On the other hand, the dealings of the shebait with the Government securities for Rs. 11,500— which, in the litigation of 1892 were found to form part of the debuttar estate, must be forthwith investigated. It is plain that a person in this position cannot be allowed to hold the office of shebait in the best interests of the debuttar estate. We hold accordingly that the first defendant should cease to be shebait from a date to be fixed hereafter and the management of the debuttar estate should be vested in a Receiver to be appointed by this Court.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. It is declared that the sale of Bahirgora held on the 14th January 1913 is not operative against the debuttar estate, but the first defendant is entitled to be reimbursed, the precise amount recoverable by him to be investigated by the Court below. Steps will be taken forthwith to place the debuttar estate in the hands of a Receiver to be appointed by this Court and the first defendant will cease to be shebait from the date when the Receiver takes possession. Liberty is reserved to both parties to apply. The first defendant must pay the plaintiff his costs both here and in the Court below.

The cross appeal has not been pressed as such and will, therefore, stand dismissed.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 29—Guardian, whether can accept lease of minor's property from mortgagee—Minor, whether liable to pay rent.

Under section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act a certified guardian can grant a lease of property belonging to the minor for a period of five years and there is nothing to prohibit a lease for a similar period being taken by the same guardian of property belonging to the minor, from a person holding the same under a mortgage made for legal necessity. The lease, while it imposes upon the minor the liability to pay rent, brings with it a corresponding gain and the transaction is, if beneficial to the minor, of a nature within the competence of the guardian and binding on the ward. [p. 20, col. 2; p. 21, col. 1]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Unao, dated the 19th November 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, North Unao, dated the 4th June 1918.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen and Basdeo Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for the recovery of money due on a lease said to have been taken by Musammatt Mithana as the guardian of the defendant.

It appears that Sheodulav, the father of the defendant, was the owner of an 8-annas share in the village Solonipur. He mortgaged a one-anna share out of the same with Nanha on the 5th June 1912. He again mortgaged a 4-annas share with Durga Din on the 16th January 1912. The first mortgage was simple. The second mortgage provided for foreclosure.

On the 21st February 1914, Durga Din obtained a decree for foreclosure on foot of his mortgage. In order to protect the mortgaged property of the minor from foreclosure and to pay up the mortgages aforementioned, Musammât Mithana, the certificated guardian of the defendant, applied to the District Judge for permission to mortgage a 6-annas share of the property belonging to the minor. This permission was granted. The order of sanction did not specify whether the mortgage was to be simple or usufructuary. Musammât Mithana thought that the interest of the minor would be best served by making a usufructuary mortgage of the said six-annas share in favour of Hargovind Dayal, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, and taking a lease of the mortgaged property from the mortgagee. She accordingly executed a deed of usufructuary mortgage in favour of Hargovind Dayal on the 18th February 1914 for Rs. 4,300 re-payable in five years and carrying interest at 10 annas per cent. per mensem and wrote a qabuliyat agreeing to pay a rent of Rs. 322 8 0 per year in satisfaction of the interest due to the mortgagee.

The plaintiffs, as the assignees of the interest of Hargobind Dayal, sue for the recovery of the arrears of rent secured by the said qabuliyat. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim but the lower Appellate Court decreed it, making the decretal money recoverable from the property of the minor.

The first point for consideration in this appeal is whether the qabuliyat in question was covered by the sanction granted by the District Judge. In express terms the lease is not mentioned. The lease is, however, only ancillary to the mortgage transaction which the Judge had sanctioned. Under the terms of the sanction it was open to Musammât Mithana to have made a simple mortgage of a 6 annas share on an agreement to pay interest on the money borrowed. It was equally open to her to make a usufructuary mortgage on such terms as might be reasonable and conducive to the interests of the minor. Musammât Mithana adopted the latter course: she made a usufructuary mortgage and as a means of paying the interest secured to the mortgagee and preserving the remainder of the profits of the mortgaged property for the benefit of the minor, she wrote a qabuliyat by which she took back possession from the mortgagee and agreed to pay him a rent equal to the interest payable by her under the mortgage. In other words, the payment for which she would have been made liable by virtue of the mortgage is, in another form, the very payment for which she made herself liable under the lease.

Both the Courts below found that the mortgage was made for valid necessity to pay certain debts due by the father of the minor. The Court of first instance held that Musammât Mithana did not properly understand or realize the terms of the mortgage or the lease; but the lower Appellate Court has not accepted that finding. If the mortgage was made for legal necessity and the payment for which the minor had become liable under it was to be a valid charge on the minor's interest, the interest by which Musammât Mithana arranged to have that payment made did not in any way prejudice the minor. The qabuliyat must, therefore, be treated as having been taken for the benefit of the minor, and though no express sanction was taken in respect of it, it is binding on the minor in the same way as any other act of prudent management which the guardian may have done for the protection of the interest of the minor or for his maintenance. Section 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) allows a guardian to give a lease of any property belonging to the minor for a term of five years. If a certified guardian can grant a lease of the property belonging to the minor for a period of five years, there is nothing to prohibit a lease being taken by the same guardian of the property belonging to the minor from a person holding the same under a mortgage made for legal necessity for a similar period.

KANAI LAL KHAN v. TOOLSJI MANJURI DASI.

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant relies on the decision in Gaya Prasad v. Musammatt Maharaj Kuar (1). His contention is that although a guardian may, under certain circumstances, sell or charge the property of his ward, he cannot bind the ward personally by a covenant or by any promise to pay money or damages. But the taking of a lease of the property belonging to a ward from a mortgagee who holds it under a valid mortgage binding on the minor for a period of five years, may be as necessary in the interests of the ward as the granting of a lease in respect of the property belonging to the ward for the same period. The taking of a lease undoubtedly carries with it a liability to pay the rent reserved by the lease, but it secures to the ward the entire profits of the property which would otherwise have gone to the mortgagee. In other words, while it imposes some liability it brings with it some corresponding gain and the dealing is, if beneficial to the minor, of a nature within the competence of the guardian and binding on the ward. There is no reason, therefore, for interference with the decree passed by the Court below in this case.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A suit by a benamidar to recover money should not be decreed where the beneficial owner of the money is before the Court as a co-defendant. The Court might, by making the beneficial owner a co-plaintiff, decree the suit, but in the absence of evidence that the money does not belong to the benamidar, the Court is bound to give effect to the legal presumption which arises. JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the defendants Nos. 4 to 8 against the decision of the learned District Judge of Midnapur, dated the 27th September 1917, affirming the decision of the Second Subordinate Judge of the same place. The suit was brought by one Srimati Tulsji Monjori Dasi, who is the wife of the second defendant, to recover possession of certain property, or alternatively to recover the amount paid as the purchase-money at a sale in execution. The facts are perfectly simple. One Madhab Chandra Mondal held an under tenure under the defendants Nos. 4 to 8, the appellants before us. Madhab sold his interest to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The defendant No. 2 and his co-sharer, the defendant No. 1, apparently failed to register their names in the landlords' sherista and two suits were brought by the co-sharer landlords for rent against Madhab. In execution of the decree obtained, the property was put up to sale and purchased by the plaintiff, the wife of the defendant No. 2. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court remarks that in the appeal before him none of the parties has attacked the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the sale at which the plaintiff purchased the under tenure was of no effect inasmuch as the judgment debtor, that is, Madhab, had no saleable interest in the property. The learned Judge then went on to consider the alternative case, namely, as to whether the plaintiff could recover back the money which she paid for the prop-chase of the property at the sale in execution and he arrived at a conclusion which, I suppose, was satisfactory to himself, but which seems to me to be obviously wrong. What he says is this: That the plaintiff is the benamdar of the defendant No. 2 and that she is entitled to recover back the money. Of course, that cannot be accurate where the beneficial owner of the money is present before the Court. The Court might, by making the defendant No. 2 a co-plaintiff, order payment. But then one cannot get out of the equity that may subsist between the plaintiff and the defendant No. 2 by putting the money in the hands of the benamdar. The case does not stop there. The learned Judge does not say that on the evidence he finds that the plaintiff is the benamdar for her husband but he says that there cannot be much doubt. Of course that may or may not amount to a finding. But the evidence has been read to us and, as appears from the record, that is no evidence on which the learned Judge was entitled to say that this money did not belong to the plaintiff. The fact remains that no evidence was called on behalf of the appellants on this question and, in that view, the learned Judge having no evidence which he could believe was bound to give effect to what the presumption under the law was. The learned Judge's view on that part of the case cannot be supported.

The next point is that the evidence that has been given in this case is obviously unsatisfactory. A good portion of it would not be admissible under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act such as the statement that an old lady of the village was told by somebody else that Tulsī Monjori was a benamdar of her husband. A case like this obviously ought to be decided on the best evidence available. I think we ought to give the parties a further opportunity of providing what evidence there is proper and relevant for the purpose of establishing whether the plaintiff was or was not a benamdar in respect of the money with which the under-tenure was purchased on behalf of her husband, the defendant No. 2. The case will be remitted to the lower Appellate Court in order to have the appeal re heard on that matter without disturbing the other conclusions arrived at in the case. Both parties will be entitled to adduce any evidence which is relevant to that issue. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court may either himself record the evidence on that issue or may remit the case to the first Court for that purpose. Costs will abide the result of the re-hearing in the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal will stand dismissed with costs as against the defendant No. 1.

In the case of villages granted as inam by a zemindar before the Permanent Settlement, there is no presumption that the land revenue alone was granted. It must be presumed that the grant conferred a right, not only to the land revenue, but also to the land itself. [p. 31, col. 2.]

An action by the grantee in ejectment against the tenants is, however, not maintainable where the defendants have permanent occupancy rights by custom or otherwise, as neither the zemindar by the grant nor the Government by their release could convey rights over which they had no control. [p. 31, col. 2.]

The burden of proving the existence of occupancy rights is on the defendants, tenants. [p. 32, col. 1.]

Where it is not shown that the lands comprised in the grant were in the occupation of tenants at the date of the grant, it is not an 'estate' falling within clause 3 (2) (d) of the Estates Land Act and a suit in ejectment is cognizable by a Civil Court. [p. 33, col. 2.]

Per Napier, J.—The Legislature has specifically dealt with inams in clause (d) of section 3 (2) of the Madras Estates Land Act and could not have intended to provide for any other class of them in clause (e). Clause (e) of the section provides for portions of an estate held on permanent under-tenure and the fact that kattubadi is paid to a zemindar in respect of a pre-settlement inam cannot make that inam either 'a portion' or an under-tenure. Petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 8 of 1912, preferred against the order of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 407 of 1910; and Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, in Original Suit No. 36 of 1908.

The Civil Revision Petition No. 576 of 1913 coming on for hearing on the 7th August 1914, the Court (Sadasiva Aiyar, J.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The view of the lower Courts that the Agraharam falls under clause 2 (e) of section 8 of the Estates Land Act is clearly erroneous. [See Bila Sanyasi Naidu v. Agnihotram Venkatacharyulu (1).]

It may fall under clause 2 (d), if the land revenue alone had been granted as inam by the Zemindar before the Permanent Settlement.

On the question of the burden of proving whether the land revenue alone was so granted or both the Warms were granted in the case of villages granted in inam to Brahmins before the Permanent Settlement, there is some conflict of opinion in the decisions of this Court.

(1) 23 Ind. Cas. 96; 26 M. L. J. 258; (1914) M. W. N. 318; 1 L. W. 241.

The Subordinate Judge is requested to submit a finding on this question as a question of fact, allowing both sides to adduce further evidence. When both sides have been given an opportunity to adduce evidence, the question of burden of proof should not ordinarily be made much of by Courts of fact in arriving at conclusions. The Subordinate Judge, however, if he thinks the evidence to be so very evenly balanced on both sides that the question of the burden of proof becomes important, might express his opinion in the alternative on the two views of the burden of proof.

The finding should be submitted within six weeks from the date of receipt of records, and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

The appeal against order coming on for hearing on the 9th August 1915, the Court (Seshagiri Aiyer and Napier, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The first question for consideration is whether the Agraharam is an estate as defined in section 3, clause 2 (e); I think the Subordinate Judge is wrong in his view that it is. It is admitted that when the sannad was granted the Agraharam was in the possession of the plaintiff's ancestors. It is also admitted that this property was not included in the sannad as being within the ambit of the Zemindari which was granted by the Government. The Zemindar was entitled to one Kattubadi fixed. It may be that he had some rights in the Agraharam [see Jyoti Prosad Singh v. Lachipur Coal Company (2)]. It is not necessary to decide the exact nature of those rights. I am satisfied that the Agraharam was not regarded as an under-tenure at the time of settlement. I, therefore, think that clause (e) does not cover this case. See Tadikonda Buchi Virabhadrayya v. Sonti Venkanna (3).

On the question whether clause (d) applies, we have the affidavits of the learned Vakils who appeared in the Court below that the plaintiffs were not allowed to adduce evidence to prove their case. Mr. Prakasam frankly admits that he is not prepared to deny the statements in these affidavits. We must ask the Subordinate Judge, after hearing the evidence which the parties may adduce, to return a finding whether the Agraharam is an estate falling under section 3 (2) (d) of the Estates Land Act.

The finding should be submitted within three months and ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

NAPIER, J.—I agree and would only add that I should be slow to hold that any pre-settlement inam could be brought within section 3 (2) (e). The Legislature was dealing with inams specifically in clause (d) and I cannot think it intended to provide for any other class of them in (e). Clause (e) provides for portions of an estate held on permanent under-tenure and I cannot hold that the fact that Kattubadi is paid to a Zemindar in respect of a pre-settlement inam makes that inam either a "portion" or an under-tenure.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment in Civil Revision Petition No. 576 of 1913 the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore submitted the following

FINDING.

C. R. P. No. 576 of 1913.

The issue on which I am directed to submit my finding is "Whether in the case of villages granted in inam by the Zemindar to Brahmins before the Permanent Settlement, the land revenue alone had been so granted or both the Warms."

2. With reference to the High Court's direction to try the above issue as a question of fact, both parties were given an opportunity to adduce evidence. Each party has accordingly adduced evidence tending respectively to prove and disprove the fact in issue. And so the importance of the incidence of the burden of proof disappears almost entirely in this case. The plaintiff, who is the appellant, has produced no sannad relating to Dammennu village but has filed a sannad relating to Karravari Savaram village, which is situated 2 miles away from Dammennu. According to the evidence of P. W. No. 12, who owns 1/6th share in 'Karravai Savaram,' the original grant, as evidenced by the sannad (Exhibit AAAA), was made in Fasli 1159 (1749), i. e. the same year as the grant of the suit Agraharam (Dammennu) by the then Zemindar Apparayanam Garu. Exhibit CCCC, read with the evidence of P. W. No. 12, shows that the original grant was in respect of 30 putties of waste land * * * (beedu bhoomi) out of the village of Chivatam. The grant was made to Karra Perayya Sastry, who was the ancestor (i. e. paternal grandfather's grandfather) of P. W. No. 12. It is clear from the evidence of P. W. No. 12 that it was a waste land which was granted to his ancestor. It is further deposed to by P. W. No. 12 that as the land was waste, his ancestor went with his family and lived there; that he dug wells and raised gardens of arecanuts, cocoanuts and mango trees. Exhibit BBBB is an extract from the Inam Register relating to Karravari Savaram Agraharam referred to above. And Exhibit CCCC is a certified copy of the Dhimat issued to the village officers in pursuance of the sannad (Exhibit AAAA). The P. W. No. 12 deposed that from the time of his ancestor down to the time of his father, Savaram Agraharam was under the cultivation of the Agraharamdars themselves and that it was never in the cultivation of their tenants. The P. W. No. 12 further deposed that subsequent to the death of his father the Agraharam devolved upon him (P. W. No. 12) and his brothers and that they have been leasing out the same to tenants. The P. W. No. 12 also explained that his ancestor belonged to the Karra family and so he gave his family name to the Agraharam which was accordingly called "Karravari Savaram." And thus with reference to Karravari Savaram, the original grant being that of a waste land * * * (beedu bhoomi), it follows that the grant consisted of the entire right in the property. For, the position of the Zemindar before the Permanent Settlement was that he had the administration of the whole Zemindari.

3. The other grant relied on by plaintiff's Pleader is that of Kanur Agraharam. Kanur Agraharam is situated about 4 or 5 miles from the village of Dammennu. No sannad or Dhimat has been produced but reliance is placed on the oral evidence of P. W. No. 13, Vadali Annappa. According to P. W. No. 13 the Brahmins to whom the grant was made lived by cultivation. The grant was made to 80 or 90 Brahmans under a joint sannad and they were the residents of the Agraharam at the time of the grant. The Brahmans to whom the grant was made lived by cultivation and so they acquired both the Warms under the grant. It has, however, been held that in the case of an inam granted to a person in occupation of the land, the grant would still be only the Melvaram right although in consequence of the grant the Melvaram and the Kudivaram rights became vested in the same person (vide Yeddampudi Lakshmi Narasimha Row v. Repalli Sitaramaswami (4)).

4. Coming next to the suit Agraharam of Dammennu, the question for consideration is, what was the nature of the right given to the Agraharamdar at the time of the grant in Fasli 1159 (1749)? It is clear from the evidence of P. W. No. 6, Kandalam, Tirumalacharyulu, that Dammennu Agraharam was granted before the Permanent Settlement to his ancestor Prativathi Bhayamkaram Varadacharyulu, a resident of Vijiarayi which is situated at a distance of about 50 miles from Dammennu Agraharam. Dammennu is situated in Tanuku Taluk but Vijiarayi is situated in Ellore Taluk. Besides the oral evidence of P. W. No. 6, which goes to show that the original grantee was a non resident Brahmin of Vijiarayi, there is also the documentary evidence showing that the grantee's descendants also were residents of Vijiarayi, so far back as 1860 (vide columns 16 and 17 of Exhibit M) and even up to the year 1882 (Vide Exhibits M, N, Q and II). It has been held that the non-residence of the grantee, if proved, will negative the Kudivaram right [vide Srimath Kidambi Jagannatha Charyulu v. Pidipiti Kutumbarayadu (5) and Upadrasta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6)].

5. The next point for consideration is whether the suit Agraharam (Dammennu) was a waste land (* * beedu bhoomi) as in the case of "Karravari Savaram," referred to in paragraph 2, or in the occupation of tenants as in the case of "Kanur Agraharam" referred to in paragraph 3 supra. In the absence of the original sannad, reliance is placed by both sides on Exhibits M and SS as also on Exhibit I. Exhibit M is an extract from the Register of Inams in the village of Dammennu. The original of Exhibit M appears to have been prepared in 1860. Exhibit SS is the Inam B Register of Dammennu Agraharam for Fasli 1298 (1888). And Exhibit I is a certified copy of Inam Statement of Dammennu Agraharam.

6. The three points for consideration regarding the village of Dammennu are

- (a) Whether the village of Dammennu was a waste land at the time of the grant in 1749 as in the case of "Karravari Savaram."
- (b) If not, whether the grant was to a Brahmin residing in the village and cultivating it as in the case of "Kanur Agraharam."
- (c) Whether the grant was made to a Brahmin not residing in the village.

The suit village of Dammennu is described under column 8 of Exhibit M as "granted as Agraharam." In Exhibit I (column 14) reference is made to a Dhimat addressed to village officials. It is argued for the respondent that the reference to village officials presupposes the existence of a village and that, therefore, the entire land in Dammennu could not have been a waste land (* * beedu bhoomi) at the time of the grant. And it is not the case of the plaintiff that Dammennu was entirely a waste land at the time of its grant in 1749.

7. Next as regards the points (b) and (c), if the village was not waste, it must have been in the occupation of tenants. The question then is, who were the tenants? Is it the original grantee? Or is it the ancestor of the present defendants? Certainly, it cannot be the original grantee, because according to P. W. No. 6 the original grantee was a resident of Vijiarayi. And it is impossible to believe that the original grantee residing at Vijiarayi (50 miles away from Dammennu) was the cultivating tenant prior to, and at the time of, the grant. I say it is impossible to believe, because even after the grant, the evidence on record points to the inference that the tenants themselves have been cultivating the land and not the Agraharamdars. The P. W. No. 8, who has been the Kurnam of Dammennu for the past 30 or 40 years and who, according to his own admission, has been working on behalf of the Agraharamdars in this litigation, supports the evidence of P. W. No. 6 in stating that the suit Agraharam lands have been all along cultivated by the tenants and not by the Agraharamdars themselves. And Exhibit I contains a statement of the Agraharamdar Srinivasa-charyulu that from 1835 to 1852 he and his co-sharers were looking after (managing) the village, which does not mean that they were cultivating the lands in the village. It is also stated in Exhibit I that they (Agraharamdars) were enjoying the “* * * medhavi” i.e., produce or Melva-ram. This recital gives a lie direct to the evidence of P. W. Nos. 1 and 11 that Pedda Purushothamacharyulu was himself cultivating the land 4 or 5 years before his death. For Pedda Purushothamacharyulu died in 1852 after he had relinquished his right in favour of his daughter's son so early as 1835.

8. The evidence of P. W. No. 8 further shows that to his knowledge no Agraharamdar personally cultivated any portion of the Agraharam lands in the village of Dammennu; that the Agraharamdars resided permanently at Vijiarayi in Ellore Taluk; that the Agraharamdars, when they visited Dammennu for collecting rents, etc., used to stay in a portion of the house belonging to P. W. No. 8; that 40 years ago Kandalam Venkatacharyulu lived in the house within the compound of P. W. No. 8 for 4 years with his wife and children but he did not during that period cultivate any of the Agraharam lands; and that, as a matter of fact, the Agraharamdars owned no house-sites at all in the village but they belonged to the tenants who cultivated the surrounding lands. This evidence of P. W. No. 8 falsifies the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 17 who depose to a contrary state of facts. But the evidence of P. W. Nos. 1 and 17 is purely interested and utterly unreliable, as it is not only opposed to that of P. W. Nos. 6 and 8 but also quite contrary to the recital of Exhibit CC itself, which makes no mention of any patti-sites belonging to the Agraharamdars.

9. If the Agraharamdars themselves were not the cultivators, either at the time of the grant, or subsequently as shown above, it follows that the grant of the suit Dammennu village must have been made to non resident Brahmirs who were the inhabitants of Vijiarayi as deposed to by P. W. No. 6. And hence the case of “Kannur Agraharam” has no application whatever to the present case relating to Dammennu village. This disposes of points (b) and (c) in favour of defendants (respondents) and against plaintiff (appellant).

10. On the other hand, the evidence of P. W. No. 11, who is aged 90 years, shows that the village of Dammennu has been in the occupation of the tenants for nearly a century. Hence the presumption is that their ancestors also must have been living there in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. In the case of Rajya v. Balkrishna Gangadhar (7) it was observed that, if owing to antiquity there was no evidence of the commencement of a tenancy, it might be presumed to be co-extensive with the duration of the tenure of the landlord. The presumption is that the Zemindar did not deal with the rights of the occupants when the grant was made, the ryots being tenants of an Agraharam in a Zemindari. In the present case, this presumption is strongly supported by Exhibit XXXVII of 1853, which gives a description of the holdings of the several tenants as agraharam “Seri,” which means the same thing as ‘jeroiti’ or ‘ryoti’ holdings [vide Narayanadaswami v. Venkayya (8) and also Zemindar of Ohellupalli v. Rajalapati Somayya (9)]. The description of the holdings as ‘Seri’ in Exhibit XXXVII lends support to the further presumption that the tenants had been in the Dammennu village at the time of its grant to the ancestor of the Agraharamdars in 1749. This presumption, instead of being rebutted by any counter evidence on plaintiff's behalf, is supported by the admissions elicited in the cross-examination of P. W. No. 8 himself. For, P. W. No. 8 admitted that there are 40 or 50 families of tenants residing in the Agraharam and that he cannot say when these families first came to reside in the Agraharam. The P. W. No. 8 was not prepared to deny that the ancestors of these families were not the cultivating tenants at the time of the original grant.

11. With reference to the evidence pro and con discussed in the foregoing paragraphs, it is clear that the suit Agraharam of Dammennu must have been in the occupation of cultivating tenants and not in the occupation of the original grantee, who, according to the evidence of P. W. No. 6, was a resident of Vijiarayi. I accordingly find with reference to the issue remitted for trial that, so far as the village of Dammennu is concerned, the land revenue alone (Melvaram) had been assigned to the original grantee and not the Kudivaram right also. This finding is also in accordance with the decision reported as Kandada Narasimhacharyulu v. Ravichela Ramabrahmam (10), where it was observed that an Agrahamdar who obtained his inam from the Nuzvid Zemindar had only the Melvaram right.

12. Before concluding, I may add that I have not considered it necessary to discuss the contents of the other documents filed on both sides, firstly, because they do not throw any light upon the terms of the sinnad showing the origin of the grant of the suit Agraharam; secondly, because those documents relate to a disputed period and as such they are not of much evidentiary value to prove or disprove the nature of the original grant; and thirdly, because the mere fact that some of the tenants (not defendants) had acknowledged that they had no occupancy right is not sufficient to rebut the inference of occupancy right arising in favour of the tenants when they have been in possession for a long time and the origin of their tenancy is unknown.

13. In the result, my finding is that in the case of inams granted by the Zemindar to Brahmins before the Permanent Settlement, if the grantees of the inam were in possession of the inam lands as cultivating tenants, it would make such persons owners of both the Warams. So also in the case of waste lands granted by the Zemindar, the grantee would acquire both the Warams. I further find that in the case of an Agraharam village granted before the Permanent Settlement by the Zemindar to a Brahmin, who is a resident of a different place, as in the present case, the grant would be deemed to be only of the Melvaram, because the Kudivaram was with the tenants in actual possession of the land at the time of the grant [vide also Parvataneni Venkataramiah v. Parvataneni Narayudu (11) and Suryanarayana v. Acchutta Potanna (12)]. This finding has reference to the suit village and disposes of the issue in favour of defendants (respondents) and against plaintiff (appellant).

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 15 of 1910, the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore submitted the following

FINDING.

A. A. O. No. 16 of 1910.

Plaintiffs are the sons of one Kandady Varadacharyulu. He had a divided brother Bulli Kristnamacharyulu. He died childless leaving his widow Tiruvengalamma as his sole heir. A divided fourth share in the Dammennu Agraharam, composed of the lands in the possession of the defendants, 73 in number, in all about 60 acres, belonged to Bulli Kristnama Charyulu. Tiruvengalamma died on 23rd March 1908. In 1894 with regard to about 40 acres of land she had executed in favour of the ryots registered cowles for a period of 60 years at a fixed rate of rent (Vide Exhibit XXVa to XXVk). With regard to remaining 20 acres they were let to the ryots for a period of 8 years from 1894, and in 1902 the cowles were again renewed for another period of 10 years. Tiruvengalamma having died in March 1908, the plaintiffs instituted this suit on 16th September 1908 as the reversioners to the estate of Bulli Venkayya, to recover the lands from the defendants. The plaintiffs contend that Tiruvengalamma had only the right to enjoy the said property as long as she lived, and that she had no higher right, that accordingly the cowles which she had given in respect of her properties were not valid subsequent to her death, and that they would not bind the plaintiffs (vide paragraph 6 of the plaint). The defendants plead, apart from any question as to the binding character of the cowles, that Dammennu Agraharam is an estate falling within the definition of section 3, clause (d) of the Estate Land Act, and that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the present suit in ejectment. The same question is under consideration in Civil Revision Petition No. 576 of 1913 on the file of the High Court. The parties in the present suit have agreed to the oral and documentary evidence in the said suit being treated as evidence in the present case. Over and above the said evidence the defendants examined an additional witness D. W. No. 6 in the case. The plaintiff recalled and further examined the plaintiffs' 8th witness the Kurnam, and filed certain additional documents JJJJ to SSSS. Thus the evidence is substantially the same in both the suits. The additional documents are merely intended to explain certain transactions in the light of the plaintiffs' case. The conditions necessary to bring an inam under the definition of an estate are four. (1) The original grant should be of a village as a whole. (2) The land revenue alone of the village should have been granted in inam. (3) That the person to whom the inam is granted should be one not owning the Kudivaram of the village. (4) The grant should have been made, confirmed or recognised by the British Government. The wording of the section shows that for any inam being classed as an estate the aforesaid conditions should be fulfilled; and it would, therefore, lie upon any person who sets up the plea that an inam is an estate to establish, apart from any presumptions, that it fulfils all the aforesaid conditions. Further any person who wants to oust the jurisdiction of a Civil Court must also substantiate his plea. The defendants were accordingly called upon to show that the plaintiff inam is an estate. The plaintiff inam has been confirmed by the British Government in 1860 (vide Exhibit M). The extract from the Inam Register shows that the inam was conferred in Fasli 1159 (1747) on Varada-charyulu by the Zemindar Rajah Apparayanam Garu. The sannad and 29 Dumbalas, from Fasli 1159 to 1200, the takeed and the patta produced before the Inam Commissioner by the inamdars are not now forthcoming. They were said to have been lost in a fire in Sanivarappet, which burnt the house in which one of the inamdars Sadagopalacharyulu was put up. The evidence as to such loss is not of a convincing character, but there is nothing to show that plaintiffs had possession of those records, and I do not think that any presumption adverse to the plaintiffs could be drawn on that ground. The extent of the grant and the character of the inam should have, therefore, to be gathered from the available records. The Inam Statement filed by the inamdars at the time of the Inam Settlement in 1860, Exhibit I, shows that the grant was of the village of Dammennu as a whole and not of any specified portion thereof. It begins: "Statement prepared by the Agraharikulu of Mounji Dammennu Agraharam attached to Relangi Taluk." All the extents of land within the four boundaries of the village are claimed as inam with the exception of Porambokes 2 and odd putties and minor inams 8 and odd putties. As to whether the minor inams were in existence at the time of the grant it is not clear, but probably they did as the village undoubtedly existed at the time of the grant. The existence of such minor inams does not make the grant less the grant of a village as a whole. There is thus no doubt that the grant was of a village as a whole. [Vide Gopisetti Narayana-swami v. Nalam Subrahmanyam (13)].

2. Secondly, it has to be seen whether the grant was of the land revenue alone. In the first place the description of the village as mounji is significant. It is only when a village already under cultivation is granted, it is known as a mounji village [vide Upadrasta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6)]. Secondly, column 6 of the Inam Statement shows that the grant was in the nature of a Srothriam of G. 60 Pagodas to be enjoyed by the grantee, Sreemat Prathivedi Bhayamkaram Varada-charyulu Garu and his heirs. Srothriam means literally an assignment of land revenue to a Srothria or Brahmin learned in the Vedas, and here evidently the grantee, as his name indicates, is a Vishtnavite Brahmin of that stamp. Admittedly the grantee and his descendants are Garus for a number of people. Srothriam grant gives no right over the lands, and the grantee is only entitled to land revenue and cannot interfere with the occupants as long as they pay the established rent [Papala Narayanasami Naidu v. Pensalani Kanniappa Naidu (14), Ohinnan v. Kondam Naidu (15)]. Thus the Inam Statement shows conclusively that the grant was a Srothriam inam of 60 Pagodas of land revenue. The unambiguous nature of the present grantee, therefore, obviates the decision of any question as to even where the grant had been made of the lands in the village or of Melevaram in such lands the section would cover such grants as well.

The third point for consideration is whether the land revenue of the village was granted to a person not owning the Kudiaram thereof. All the other voluminous oral and documentary evidence in the case is of use only in considering this aspect of the case. Firstly, there is scarcely any doubt that the grantee and his descendants were permanent residents of Vijayarai in the Ellore Taluk. Dammennu is a village situate in the Tanuku Taluk at a distance of more than 50 miles from Vijayarai. Admittedly the Agraharamdars do not own at present any site or house in the village. Nor is there any evidence worth the name that they did so at any other time. The dwelling sites owned by the tenants belong to them and the Agraharamdars have no right to any of such sites. There is further no doubt whatever that they never lived in the village except camping temporarily in the Kurnam's house, when they went to collect Cist or lease out the lands. The plaintiffs' attempt to establish to the contrary is a miserable failure and does not deserve any detailed examination. The P. W. No. 8, Kalluri Venkayya, who is aged about 60 years, has been the Kurnam of the village for the last 40 years. In spite of the fact that he is hand and glove with the plaintiffs, and is too much interested in the result of the suit to speak the truth, he was nevertheless perforce obliged to admit the aforesaid facts. It is established beyond all reasonable doubt that till the year 1891 so long as the Agraharam had not been partitioned into 4 shares by the Agraharamdars, they never claimed any higher right in the lands than that of collecting the Mamool Cist, nor did they deny the right of the ryots to permanent occupancy rights in the lands. It is only after the partition of the lands by the Agraharamdars they made a determined effort to get at the lands. In the Inam Statement, the inamdars state as follows:—
"We have been paying the Cist to the Government on the Srothriam and maintaining ourselves with the income therefrom
* * *. A reference to the Inam Register, Exhibit M, shows that the Agra-haramdars had then let the village for 5 years for an annual rent of Rs. 700. The Mashath account prepared on 25th September 1858 gives in detail the holdings of individual ryots in the village (XXXVIII). In order to facilitate the collection of rent from the ryots, the Agraharamdars had been till 1891 in the habit of executing a cowle for the entire village to the names of four principal or representative ryots of the village, with a stipulation therein that they should not collect from the other ryots any amount more than the amount settled with such ryots according to the Tharamvar of the lands owned by them (vide Exhibits II, III and IV). In almost all the cowles prior to 1891, the enjoyment of the several tenants or their holdings for a long time (* * * vide Exhibit II) is expressly and unambiguously admitted, and their right to continue on the land is not also denied, as the said cowles do not contain any stipulation that the tenants should surrender the land at the end of the period. The evidence of the Kurnam also with regard to the tenants' rights in the land is important to show that the tenants were recognised by the landlords as possessed of permanent occupancy rights. He says, "if a tenant dies, his son or heir cultivates unless for any reason the landlord gives the land to strangers. If a tenant dies leaving a son, his son cultivates the land. This has been the practice ever since I became Kurnam. The Agraharamdar collects rent from tenant's son or heir as described above." Asked whether the Agraharamdars had ever disallowed the heir to cultivate the lands, he said: "I cannot give any instance when the Agraharamdar did not allow the heir of the tenant to cultivate the land of the deceased tenant." Then again "there is no practice for the heirs of the deceased tenant to apply to the Agraharamdar, to apply for permission to cultivate the land of the deceased tenant," and he admitted that the names of female heirs are so registered in the account. For example after her husband's brother, Ramayya's death, Pullamma's name is entered in the accounts. He further admitted that till the year 1891 there has been not a single instance of a tenant having been ejected, and that till then there was no change of holding effected by the landlords. In addition to the aforesaid evidence there have been numerous alienations by the tenants of their lands by sale, mortgage, gift, &c. (vide Exhibits VI to VIc, XII, XVIII to XXII). All these documents have been written by the Kurnam himself, and the lands dealt with are described as lands in which the tenants had geroit right. It was also admitted by the Kurnam that the Agraharamdars raised no objection to such transfers and received the rent from the transferees, and that their names also were duly entered in the accounts. The Proceeding in Summary Suit No. 117 of 1891 is significant as showing that the Agraharamdars had till that date never disputed the occupancy right of the tenants. In the said suit Kanoori Venkatarreddi sued for acceptance of a patta by a tenant with the Mamool Cist Rs. 23-5-7. (Exhibit XXIX) The suit was compromised to the effect that a decree may be passed for the acceptance of a patta with the Mamool Cist Rs. 9-14-0 (Exhibit XXX). After the partition by the Agraharamdars, the above tenant was sought to be ejected in 1892, and on his setting up a right of occupancy it was found in his favour, and the suit was dismissed, and the decree was confirmed both in the first Appellate Court and in the High Court (vide Exhibits XIV and XIVa). As a matter of fact, as already observed, there was no attempt till the actual partition by the Agraharamdars of the village in 1891 to dispute the occupancy rights of the tenants in any manner. The Agraharamdars were content to receive the Mamool Cist from the several ryots. But after 1891 the Agraharamdars put forward a claim to the absolute ownership of the land, and the tenants resisted the claim for some years. But finally the tenants and the landlords came practically to an agreement by which most of the tenants had their occupancy rights in the lands confirmed or recognised by the Agraharamdars on payment of some consideration. Thus Sadagopachari and Jagannathachari, who in all owned one-half of the Agraharam or 120 acres, have confirmed the occupancy rights possessed on the lands by the tenants for some consideration. With regard to another Agraharamdar, Venkata Reddi, who owns 60 acres, he has similarly recognised the occupancy rights of the tenants for 40 acres. Of course in all the above cases, the recognition, had been effected either as sales or as permanent leases. In the case of Thiruvengalamma, as she had only a widow's estate the above procedure could not be followed, and with regard to 40 acres she executed leases for the long period of 60 years for some consideration and for the remaining 20 acres for 10 years to the tenants who had long been in occupation of the lands. The Kurnam, P. W. No. 8, helped the Agraharamdar materially in bringing round the tenants, and has also materially profited thereby. Of course, the reason of the tenants' agreeing to so repurchase the occupancy rights from the Agraharamdars was of course due to their fear that they might be ejected out of their lands either forcibly or by being dragged into litigation for long periods, and thus be ruined. It must also be said that subsequent to 1891 the tenants as a whole recognised the landlords' right to the lands and have in many instances given up their lands which the landlords had rented to others. It may be safely asserted that while the evidence prior to 1891 is all in favour of the tenants, the evidence subsequent to 1891 is all in favour of the Agraharamdars' right to the entire land. They have subsequent thereto periodically increased the rents, changed tenancies, and have otherwise also exercised absolute ownership of the lands. No good purpose would be served by setting forth in detail the evidence on the above indisputable facts. But a village has to be determined whether it is an estate or not by the original grant and by ascertaining whether at the time of the grant the grantee also owned the Kudivaram of the village. In the present case the evidence conclusively shows that at the time of the grant the grantee did not own the Kudivaram. I accordingly answer the issue in the affirmative.

The civil revision petition, and the appeal against order and the memorandum of objections filed on behalf of the respondents in the appeal came on for final hearing on the 16th of July 1919 after the return of the finding of the lower Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial.

JUDGMENT.—The civil miscellaneous appeal and the civil revision petition are against orders returning the plaint for presentation to the Revenue Court. The suit in the civil miscellaneous appeal was filed by the Agraharamdars against about sixty tenants for ejectment. On the first occasion the then Subordinate Judge decided that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. On appeal against that order this Court pointed out that the village in question was not an estate under clause (e) of section 3 (ii) of the Estates Land Act, and remanded the case for a finding whether it came under (ii) (d). The present Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that it is an estate falling under section 2 (ii) (d).

Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyer who appeared for the appellant addressed a very elaborate argument to us resting it mainly upon the recent Privy Council decision in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (16). In the course of the argument we expressed doubts whether that decision would cover this case, and whether the fact that the grant of the Agraharam was made by one of the Nuzvid Zemindars and certain other circumstances would not differentiate this case from the one before the Judicial Committee. Since the argument was concluded, we have had the advantage of hearing Mr. Ramesam on a similar question relating to Thottapalli estate, and the learned Vakil drew our attention to a subsequent decision of the Judicial Committee in Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sestharamulu (17) which to a considerable extent has dispelled our doubts entertained at the hearing. That decision reverses the judgment of this Court in Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Devi Sitaramudu (6). In that case as in the case before us, the grant in question was made by one of the Nuzvid Zemindars, and was made to Brahmins. Yet the Judicial Committee, following their view enunciated in the case in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (16), have held that there is no presumption that the land revenue alone was granted. If the matter were res integra, we would have had some hesitation in applying the principles enunciated in Suryanarayana v. Patanna (16) to a grant by a Nuzvid Zemindar. In Appeals Nos. 122 and 123 of 1900, and 32 and 41 of 1904, this Court took occasion to examine the origin of the Nuzvid and Nidadavole Zemindaries. Quoting from Grant's Political Survey, Justices Davies and Benson held that the ancestors of the present Nuzvid Zemindars were farmers of revenue under the Nizam. It is not necessary to pursue this matter further, although it is open to argument that the same rule of construction cannot be applied to grants from these Zemindars as would apply to grants made by the ancient Kings of this country. But the Judicial Committee have, by referring to the preamble of Regulation XXXI of 1802, construed a grant of a similar character in their subsequent decision as conferring a right to the land itself and not merely to the land revenue. Section 2 of that Regulation may be regarded, as suggested by Mr. Ramesam, as justifying this conclusion. The framers of that section were aware that not only Ruling Princes but persons who had a lesser right in the soil but who professed to possess royal rights and prerogatives were making grants in the same manner. The section says that grants by these limited owners would be equally valid. This may be construed as a release on the part of the East India Company, which succeeded to the sovereign rights in these territories, of their right to take exception to the grant made by such owners. Therefore, the grant by one of the Nuzvid Zemindars would convey the right in the property as well as the right in the soil, which by the Regulation XXXI of 1802 may be regarded as having been surrendered to the grantee by the Government. Even that would not deprive tenants of their rights, if they had any, in the soil. Because neither the Zemindar by such grant nor the Government by their release can convey rights over which they had no control. Therefore, the question resolves itself into this. Had the defendants any right of occupancy at the time when the grant was made by the Nuzvid Zemindar which in this case is said to have been made about the year 1747: Or, in other words in the language of the Judicial Committee in the case reported as Suryanarayana v. Patanna (16): "Is it proved, or is there evidence to suggest, that at the date of the grant there were any tenants in the village holding lands with any rights of occupancy by custom or otherwise?" There can be no question from the language of the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the two cases already referred to that the burden of proving this is on the defendants. Looking at it from another point of view also the burden is on the defendants. It is they that object to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, and it is for them to show that their rights in the property are of such a character as a Civil Court cannot take cognizance of. The Subordinate Judge rightly held that the burden was on the tenants. He has, however, come to the conclusion that that burden has been discharged. Although in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 16 of 1910 there is no special reference to the current of authorities in this Presidency to the effect that grants of this description should be presumed to have affected the land revenue only and not the land, still there can be no doubt that in appreciating the evidence, the Subordinate Judge has been led to the conclusion at which he has arrived by this well-known presumption of fact. Since his judgment was delivered the Judicial Committee, as we pointed out already, have taken a different view of the situation and, therefore, in dealing with the judgment of the lower Court we have to examine the evidence from a new standpoint—a point which did not naturally strike the Subordinate Judge.

We shall now proceed to shortly discuss the evidence that has been let in. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar relied upon Exhibits KK to NN, which were executed between the years 1864 and 1870, as showing that the Agraharamdar regarded himself as the owner of the land. They were mortgage-bonds and contained statements that they were under cultivation by somebody and that in the event of the instalments not being paid the documents should be regarded as cowles enabling the mortgagee to take possession of the land. At best this is self-serving evidence. There is no evidence before us that the tenants were deprived of their possession. This clause about treating the document as a cowle is not sufficient to warrant us in holding that the Zemindar was the owner of the soil. The learned Vakil then referred to Exhibit M, the Inam Register of 1860, and commented upon the statement therein that the Agraharam was under lease for 5 years. If one remembers the fact that for a long time in the Northern Circars, Zemindars and Agraharamdars were in the habit of leasing out their right to receive rent from the tenants to middlemen, there is nothing in the statement relied on to show that it was the cultivation of the land that was leased for the period. Nor is Exhibit Z, wherein directions were given to the agent to put a seal upon the crops, inconsistent with the conception of occupancy rights in the tenants. There are many cases in which as against occupancy rights the Zemindar has claimed the right to insert in the patta a condition that the tenants should not carry away the crops without notice to the Zemindar and that the agent of the Zemindar should put a seal upon the harvested crops. There is nothing in Exhibits VI and VII, which refer to pre-existing cowles and renewals of cowles, to support the appellant's case. In Suri Venkata Subbarayya Sastri v. Darapparoddi Kristnaiya (18) it was held that such conditions were not inconsistent with rights of occupancy. There are some documents relating to the acquisition of land which have better evidentiary value for the plaintiff than the ones we have discussed. It seems apparent that in one instance at any rate the Agraharamdar was given some land outside the Agraharam in lieu of the land taken by Government within the Agraharam. The defendants have not shown that they had a similar exchange of property for their interests in the land acquired. But that is only a solitary instance and may be due to the fact that the land was Poramboke in which there were no tenants or the tenants were not astute enough to assert their rights. There are documents subsequent to 1891, which undoubtedly show that the Agraharamdar has been asserting a right in the soil. This is conceded by the lower Court. It does not attach any importance, and in our opinion rightly, to these later documents. In section 185 of the Estates Land Act, it is clearly intended by the Legislature that the evidence of acts and of assertions subsequent to 1898 should not be regarded as settling the rights of the landlord against the tenant. The reason of this rule is that in the year 1898 the first draft of the Act which subsequently became law in 1908 was prepared and published. The land-holders, anticipating that tenants would be given large rights in the property, took active steps to create evidence in their favour. It is for that reason the legislature has inserted the provision referred to by us in section 185. Although the year 1898 was mentioned in that section, there can be no doubt that at least in the part of the country from which the present litigation has come the contest between landlord and tenant has been acute and pronounced for a long time earlier. From Appa Rau v. Ratnam (19), which was a decision of 1889 and which related to the Nuzivid Zemindari, it is clear that there was active controversy regarding occupancy rights between the zemindar and the tenant. Other cases may also be quoted to the same effect. Therefore we agree with the Subordinate Judge that much importance should not be attached to the documents which have been brought into existence since the year 1891.

Thus far we have dealt with the evidence relied on by the plaintiff for establishing that he had the Kudivaram right in himself. It may be mentioned that the sannad itself has not been produced. Therefore if the burden of proof was upon the Agraharamdar to show that at the time of the grant not only the Melvaram rights but also the rights in the soil were granted to him, we would have agreed with the Subordinate Judge that he has failed to prove his case. But as we said before, in the language of the Judicial Committee, it is for the defendants to show that at the date of the grant they or their ancestors had the right of occupancy in the land. An examination of the documents filed by them does not establish this position. We shall very briefly deal with them, because we are anxious that we should not prejudice the parties in any way by a too elaborate discussion of them. There are documents on their side which contain statements by the Agraharamdar that the defendants and their ancestors have been long on the soil, that rates of rent have been settled with them and that the middleman or the lessee should not increase the rates thus settled. Exhibits VI (c), XXII, XIX, VI (a) and Exhibit II are instances of this kind. It must be said that they are all subsequent to the year 1853. There are documents which go to show that these tenants had been alienating the property as if they were the owners thereof. Exhibits XXI and XX are instances of this kind. There is Exhibit XXXVIII, a document of 1858, which shows that the Agraharamdar had compiled a list of tenants in occupation. Exhibit XIV shows that a previous suit in ejectment against the tenant was unsuccessful. These documents undoubtedly show that there had been an assertion of the right in the soil on the part of the tenants. They do not either directly or inferentially suggest that at the time of the grant in 1747 they or their ancestors had any occupancy right. It may be, and we must express this opinion very guardedly, that these documents show that since the grant the tenants have acquired an occupancy right. That is a matter for consideration at the trial on the merits. But for the purposes of deciding whether the Agraharam is an estate these documents are not of much value. For these reasons we must hold that it has not been shown that the lands in the Agraharam were in the occupation of the tenants at the time of the grant to the plaintiff's ancestors and that, therefore, it is not proved that it is an estate falling within clause 3 (2) (d) of the Estates Land Act. We must, therefore, reverse the decision of the Subordinate Judge and remand the case to the Court of first instance for disposal on the merits. Costs hitherto incurred will be provided for in the revised decree. As regards the Razinama petitions alleged to have been executed by some of the tenants, the Court of first instance will inquire into their genuineness and validity and deal with them.

In the civil revision petition, although it is open to argument that there is no question of want of jurisdiction which would enable us to interfere with the decision of the Court below, we think that having regard to our decision in the civil miscellaneous appeal it would be injurious to the rights of both parties to allow one set of cases to be heard by the Revenue Court and another set of cases by the Civil Court,

ZAHUR AHMAD v. MOHARRAM ALI.

It may not inaptly be said that having regard to the presumption with which the judgment in the civil revision petition starts, namely, that in case of similar grants the land revenue alone must be taken to have been granted, there has been material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction. We must reverse that decision as well and remand the case for disposal by the Civil Court on the merits. Costs hitherto incurred will be provided for in the revised decree.

Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 13—Pre-emption, suit for, by mortgagee—Amount payable to vendee—Amendment of decree—Market value, determination of—Fancy price, whether fictitious.

A vendor of certain property left with the vendee a portion of the sale money to be paid to the mortgagee of the property and the pre-emptor, who was the mortgagee, applied under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure for amendment of the decree to the effect that the defendant vendee was entitled to receive from him only such sums as the latter had paid to the vendor, and the Court amended the decree accordingly:

Held, that the Court was right in applying section 151 and in amending the decree as prayed for. [p. 35, col. 1.]

In the absence of any special reason for paying a fancy price for property, the fact that such a fancy price has been entered in the sale-deed is in itself evidence of the price being fictitious. [p. 35, col. 2.]

Under section 13 of the Oudh Laws Act if any single item forming part of the price mentioned in the sale-deed is found to be fictitious, the Court must fix such price as appears to it to be the fair market value of the property sold. [p. 36, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Sub Judge, Lucknow, dated the 30th November 1917.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for pre-emption. The defendant No. 2, who was the owner of the property in suit, sold it to the defendant No. 1 under a sale-deed dated the 18th of December 1915. The plaintiffs alleged that as co-sharers in the village they were entitled to pre-emption against the defendant No. 1 who was not a co-sharer, that the price entered in the sale deed, Rs. 6,400, was fictitious and that the property was actually sold for Rs. 5,000 while the market value is not more than Rs. 4,200. The plaintiffs claimed pre-emption on payment of Rs. 5,000, the price at which they alleged the property was actually sold.

The defendant No. 1 pleaded that he purchased the property with the consent of the plaintiffs and that, therefore, they were estopped from claiming pre-emption. He also pleaded that the property was in fact purchased for Rs. 6,400.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiffs had not declined to purchase the property and were not estopped from claiming pre-emption, that certain items in the price mentioned in the sale-deed were fictitious and that the market value of the property was about Rs. 4,700. But as the plaintiffs offered Rs. 5,000, he gave a decree for pre-emption to the plaintiffs on payment of that sum.

The plaintiffs applied for amendment of the decree, relying on sections 151 and 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the following grounds:—

They pointed out that they were in fact mortgagees in possession of the property in suit and that under the sale-deed the sum of Rs. 4,800 had been left with the vendee, defendant No. 1, out of which Rs. 4,375 were to be paid by the vendee to themselves in satisfaction of their mortgages and Rs. 422 to one Zaki Mohammad under a decree. They claimed that as these sums had not been paid by the vendee and that as they (the pre-emptors) were entitled to be placed in the shoes of the vendee, they should have been given a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 200 only, the balance of the sale price, to the vendee and asked that the decree should be amended accordingly.

During the proceedings it was admitted that the vendee defendant No. 1 had, out of the balance of the sale price left with him, actually paid the sum of Rs. 422 due to Zaki Mohammad. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, allowed the application and amended the decree. By the amendment the plaintiffs were given a decree for pre-emption of the property on payment of Rs. 622, that is Rs. 200 plus Rs. 422, to the defendant No. 1 vendee. During the hearing of the application for amendment the vendee pleaded that out of the sum left with him Rs. 500 had been paid to the vendor and claimed that he was entitled to recover this amount from the plaintiffs-pre-emptors. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, found that no such payment had been made and disallowed the claim.

The vendee defendant No. 1 has appealed and the questions for consideration in the appeal are:—

(1) Whether the Court was justified in amending the decree;

(2) if so, whether the vendee's claim to recover from the plaintiffs Rs. 500 alleged to have been paid to the vendor should have been allowed;

(3) whether the price stated in the sale-deed Rs. 6,400 was fictitious, and

(4) if so, what is the market value of the property.

It seems to me quite clear that the lower Court was right in applying section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure and amending the decree. In the plaint it was clearly stated that the plaintiffs were mortgagees in possession of the property with regard to which pre-emption was claimed, and in the sale-deed it was stated that the sum of Rs. 4,375 was left with the vendee for payment to the plaintiffs. The vendee was clearly entitled to receive only such sums as he had already paid, and beyond question he was not entitled to receive from the plaintiffs the amount left with him for payment to the plaintiffs which he had not paid to them.

The learned Subordinate Judge was also clearly right in refusing to believe the story that a sum of Rs. 500 had been paid by the vendee-appellant to the vendor. There is no reason whatsoever why there should have been a settlement of account or why such a sum should have been paid before the mortgage debts due to the plaintiffs were satisfied, and the evidence of the vendor relative to the alleged payment is patently false.

The learned Subordinate Judge was also clearly right in holding that the price stated in the sale-deed was fictitious. The plaintiffs-respondents were in possession of the property as mortgagees, and one of them has gone into the witness-box and stated that the net profits of the property, including sir amount to Rs. 150 per annum. Jamabandis have also been produced, which show that the net income of the property mentioned in the sale-deed amounts to Rs. 153. The vendee-appellant alleges that the net income is Rs. 175, but there is no evidence whatsoever in support of it. The statement of Zaki Mohammad, to the effect that he saw this figure in a sale statement prepared in execution proceedings, is not evidence. The appellant has himself admitted that the entries in the patwari's papers are correct and though he summoned the patwari as a witness, he did not dare to produce him to contradict the evidence given by the plaintiffs with regard to the annual profits. Taking the annual profits, therefore, at Rs. 153, the alleged price of Rs. 6,400 would be at a rate of Rs. 2.6 per cent. The ordinary rate is not less than Rs. 3 per cent. and the appellant-vendee himself does not even suggest that a rate of less than Rs. 2.12 per cent. is ever paid.

As there is no suggestion whatsoever that the appellant had any special reason for paying a fancy price for this property, the fact that such a fancy price has been entered in the sale-deed is in itself evidence that the price is fictitious. At the ordinary rate of Rs. 3 per cent. the price would come to Rs. 5,100.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that three items mentioned in the sale-deed are fictitious, namely, Rs. 300 due on a promissory note dated the 4th November 1915; Rs. 400 due on a pro note dated the 1st of December 1915 and Rs. 700 out of the Rs. 800 paid before the Sub-Registrar, which the learned Subordinate Judge has found was subsequently returned to the vendee, the appellant. It is to be noted that neither of the pro-notes has been produced and the vendor defendant No. 2 states that he destroyed them when they were returned to him by the vendee. It is further to be noted that the vendee-appellant did not dare to go into the witness box to give evidence with regard to these alleged pro-notes. The vendor at first stated that he did not remember who wrote the pro note for Rs. 400 or when it was written and suggested that Zaki Mohammad might have written it, but he afterwards admitted that it had been written by Mumtaz Ali. Mumtaz Ali and one Ujju Lal who attested the receipt have given evidence that the pro note for Rs. 400 was executed on the same date as the sale-deed, that it was antedated and that no consideration passed. Mumtaz Ali is a mukhtar of one Baqar Miya at whose house the vendor stays when he comes to Lucknow. The learned Subordinate Judge had the advantage of seeing the manner in which these witnesses gave their evidence. He has believed their statements and in all the circumstances of the case, I am not prepared to differ from his finding. And there is very good reason for holding that the pro note for Rs. 300 is also fictitious. Two witnesses have been produced by the defendant-appellant with regard to this pro note, one is Murtaza Husain defendant No. 2 and the other is Zaki Mohammad the scribe of the pro-note. The learned Subordinate Judge has made a note on the record that the demeanour of Murtaza Husain as a witness was unsatisfactory and a perusal of his evidence shows that no reliance whatsoever can be placed upon it. The two witnesses directly contradict each other with regard to this pro-note. Zaki Mohammad alleges that Rs. 300 was paid by the vendee-appellant to the vendor as earnest money for the sale of the property, while Murtaza Husain declares that it was altogether an independent loan advanced to him three months before the vendee-appellant agreed to purchase the property. In view of these findings it is unnecessary to consider whether any portion of the sum paid to the vendor in the presence of the Sub Registrar was given back subsequently to the vendee. Under section 13 of the Oudh Laws Act if any single item forming part of the price mentioned in the sale-deed is found to be fictitious, the Court must fix such price as appears to it to be the fair market value of the property sold.

It remains, therefore, to consider what is the fair market value of the property. The learned Subordinate Judge has found it to be about Rs. 4,700 and after examining the evidence, I am not prepared to differ from his finding. One witness Mohammad Naim, whose evidence has not been criticised by the learned Pleader for the appellant, has stated that in his opinion the property is worth Rs. 4,700 and that the defendant No. 2 offered it to him for Rs. 5,000 but he was not willing to pay more than Rs. 4,700 for it. This witness has also stated that he has purchased property in the same village at the rate of Rs. 32 per cent. and at this rate, taking the net profits at Rs. 153, the value of the property would come to about Rs. 4,800. The defendants' own witness Zaki Mohammad has admitted that he sold property in this village at the rate of Rs. 35 per cent. and at this rate the value of the property would come to about Rs. 4,600. The defendants' witness Siraj ud-din has stated that property in the village is sold at the rate of Rs. 2.12 per cent., but he is unable to refer to any sale that was made at that rate.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

A petition of appeal filed without a copy of the decree appealed against is not valid as an appeal. [p. 37, col. 2.]

Where an appellant seeks the benefit of the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act, he must adduce distinct proof of the sufficient cause on which he relies and must furnish a detailed affidavit explaining the cause of the delay. [p. 37, col. 2.]

Appeals from a decision of the District Judge of Patna.

Mr. Sundar Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Akbari and Nawal Kishore Prasad II, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question which arises in these appeals is one of limitation. A decree was passed in the original Court on the 13th September 1917, an appeal was filed on the 27th September but without any copy of the decree and four days were allowed for remedying the defect. The vacation commenced from the 28th September and lasted till the 30th October; the last date, therefore, for filing the appeal would be the 31st October. On the 5th November the appellant's Vakil was told that no copy of the decree had been filed and that a copy should be supplied. On the 10th November, no step having been taken by the appellant to cure the defect, the appeal was struck off. Then, on the 19th November the appellant filed a copy of the decree and on the 21st the learned District Judge admitted the appeal subject to objection, a petition having been filed together with the copy of the decree.

It is contended before me that the Court could only have admitted the appeal after time by exercising the power of extension allowed by section 5 of the Limitation Act, and it is explained that it was in exercise of this power that the appeal was admitted. There is nothing, however, on the record to show us how the appellant satisfied the Court that he had sufficient cause for not filing the appeal in the regular way within time. All we have on the order sheet is: "admitted subject to objection."

In the first place, it is clear, according to numerous decisions, that the petition of appeal filed without a copy of the decree is not valid as an appeal and the appeal cannot, therefore, be said to have been filed until the 19th November, about 22 days out of time. The only material on the record on which the learned District Judge can have satisfied himself as to the desirability of extending the time under section 5 is the petition which was filed with a copy of the decree on the 19th November. In that petition it is stated that the appellant's Karpardaz had been injured in a riot and had been confined to hospital for several days, that the petitioner did not know that a copy of the decree had not been filed nor the fact that the Court had passed an order that it should be filed within four days. This petition is not supported by an affidavit and the learned District Judge does not say that the extension of time was based on it. There is no doubt that the reasons for allowing more time should have been recorded and there should have been a detailed affidavit explaining the delay. Notice should also have been given to the respondents who should have had an opportunity to object to the admission. Pleadings having been engaged in the case, the illness of the Karpardaz could hardly be taken as a sufficient excuse. There is no finding by the learned District Judge that the delay was excusable. It lay on the litigant to adduce distinct proof of the sufficient cause on which he relied.

In the case of Krishnasami Panikondur v. Ramasami Chettiar (1) their Lordships of (1) 43 Ind. Cas. 493; 22 C. W. N. 481; 34 M. L. J. 63; 4 P. L. W. 51; 16 A. L. J. 57; 7 L. W. 156; 23 M. L. RULIA RAM v. SULTAN KHAN.

the Privy Council decided that the practice of admitting appeals out of time provisionally without notice to the respondent and allowing objection to its admission to be taken at the hearing should be condemned. Provision should be made for the final determination at the stage of admission of any question of limitation affecting the competence of the appeal and that the burden rests on the applicant under section 5 of the Limitation Act of adducing distinct proof of the sufficient cause on which he relies. There is nothing to show us that the present appellant made any objection to the admission of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court but there is no doubt that, even so, this Court can take the question of limitation into consideration: Balaram v. Mangta Dass (2), and even an agreement between the parties that the objection should not be raised in the lower Court would not prevent this Court from considering it [Midnapur Zamindari Company v. Deputy Commissioner of Manbhum (3)]. The lower Court should have recorded reasons, and there is nothing to show to this Court that the lower Court was satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the period of limitation. In the absence of anything to show that there was material sufficient for an allowance of an extension, I must allow the appeals and set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and restore those of the Munsif. The appellant is entitled to his costs in both of the Appellate Courts.

The definition of "land" given in section 2 (3) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act is not intended to be exhaustive. [p. 39, col. 1.]

Although the maxim quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit cannot be accepted in India as having the wide meaning attached to it in England, it does cover the case of trees growing on the land. [p. 39, col. 1.]

It was not the intention of the Legislature to exclude standing trees from the definition of land given in section 2 (3) of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act and consequently such trees are exempt from attachment and sale under the provisions of section 16 of the Act. [p. 39, col. 1.]

Petition for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 20th December 1917, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Shakargarh, District Gurdaspur, dated the 17th August 1917.

Mr. Jaigopal Sethi, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a decree-holder attached miscellaneous trees situated on agricultural land and the lower Appellate Court has held, especially on the authority of Nihal Kaur v. Hari Singh (1) and on orders of the District Judge, that in the definition of land trees are included. Against this decision an application for revision has been preferred.

The petitioner's Counsel relies specially on Dhani Das v. Aya Ram (2) and on remarks made therein by Stogdon, J., at page 75,* to the effect that trees are not land within the definition of section 4, clause (1), of the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887. He also relies on Yaru v. Adil (3), which follows the previously recited judgment, and on Nur Muhammad v. Tiloka Mal (4) to the effect that a proprietor's share of standing crops is not "land." These judgments, however, are merely to the effect that a suit for trees or crops is not necessarily for the purpose of the Punjab Courts Act a suit for land. Dhani Das v. Aya Ram (2) was a suit relating to fruit trees and it followed Dewa v. Hira Singh (5), in which Sir Meredyth Plowden remarked that it was a common practice to sell or let or mortgage fruit trees independently of the land on which they stand. It is clear that such judgments are of no assistance in determining whether the definition of land as given in the Punjab Alienation of Land Act includes the trees situated thereon. This definition is silent with regard to trees and as many other objects annexed to land are mentioned, it is argued that the Legislature did not intend to include trees in the definition of land, but it is clear that the definition itself is by no means intended to be exhaustive. There appears to be no published authority of this Court dealing exactly with the matter before me, though Wali Muhammad v. Mariam Bi (6) is in some way applicable to this case. In that case it was held that though the maxim quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit cannot be accepted in this country as having the wide meaning attached to it in England, it does cover the case of trees growing on the land. I have no doubt, therefore, that it was not the intention of the Legislature to exclude standing trees from the definition of land and agreeing with the decision of the lower Appellate Court that they are exempt from attachment and sale under the provisions of section 16 of the Land Alienation Act, I dismiss the revision with costs.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This was a suit for arrears of rent of certain lands in Mouzah Koelawan for the years 1321—1324. The suit was brought by several plaintiffs against one Chhattarpati Mahto. The facts of the case have not been stated in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court and it is necessary to recapitulate them shortly.

The plaintiffs' case is that the defendants originally held the land for which rent is claimed partly nagdi and partly bhowli. In 1911 the plaintiffs brought a suit for both bhowli and nagdi rent for the years 1316—1318. This suit was compromised, Chhattarpati Mahto agreeing that the whole rent should be nagdi, and the amount was fixed at Rs. 131-11-11. In accordance with this compromise a decree was passed and the full amount was paid by the defendants out of Court. Subsequently another suit was brought by the same plaintiffs against Chhattarpati Mahto for arrears of rent for the years 1319 and 1320. This suit was also decreed in terms of the compromise which had been entered into in the previous suit and the full amount was realised from Chhattarpati Mahto. The present suit, as I have already said, was brought for arrears of rent for the years 1321—1324.

It appears that in the Record of Rights five tenants, including Chhattarpati Mahto, were jointly recorded as holders of the land for which the rent is claimed, and the contentions of Chhattarpati are that the suit is not maintainable because all the five recorded tenants are not impleaded and that in any case the rent is Rs. 106 4 and not Rs. 131-11-11 as agreed to in the compromise petition. It is further contended that the compromise is illegal as no evi-

PERADAR SINGH v. BACHA MAHTO.

In the Court of first instance where the case was very carefully considered by the learned Munsif, a money decree was passed at the rate of Rs. 106-4-0, but on appeal this decree has been set aside and the whole suit dismissed. The plaintiffs have now appealed.

There are two points for consideration in the appeal. First, whether the suit is maintainable, and second, if it is maintainable, at what rate it can be decreed. With regard to the first point, there is no doubt that all the tenants not having been made defendants, no rent decree can be passed unless it is shown that Chhatarpati Mahto was the Karta of the family and was entitled to act on behalf of the other recorded tenants. This has not been proved; consequently no rent decree can be passed. But there appears to be no reason why a money decree should not be passed. That a money decree may be passed in such a case is the view which in a long series of decisions in the Calcutta High Court has been taken, and I need only refer to the last ruling on the point which is reported as Krishna Das Roy v. Kuli Tara Chowdhurani (1). In that case it was held that if the landlord desires to obtain a decree good against the land under the Bengal Tenancy Act, he must ordinarily (apart from any question of representation) implead all the co-tenants including the heirs or legal representatives of a deceased co-tenant. But for the purposes of a money decree (in the absence of express agreement to the contrary) he is free, under section 43 of the Contract Act, to sue any or all of the tenants. On the other hand reliance has been placed on two decisions of the Calcutta High Court, Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadro (2) and Jogeswar Rai v. Kesho Persad Singh (3). In the first of these cases the learned Judges were of opinion that the proposition that the landlord may maintain a suit for rent against any number of several joint tenants had been too broadly laid down in a previous decision of the Court, Rameswar Singh v. Jaideb Jha (4), and that when a tenancy is created in favour of two persons jointly, the question whether each is liable for the entire rent depends upon the intention of the parties. In the present case we do not know the origin of the tenancy but it would certainly appear, from the conduct of the parties, that it was intended that Chhatarpati Mahto should be liable for the entire rent and he does not deny this, and in view of the compromise petitions in the previous suits he could not have done so.

With regard to the case which is reported as Jogeswar Rai v. Kesho Persad Singh (3) Mullick, J., held that a rent suit is not properly constituted unless it is brought against all the recorded tenants. There is no presumption that in every joint tenancy in the Province of Bihar and Orissa there is also a several promise by which each tenant agrees to be bound for the whole rent. This decision does not in any way conflict with the general trend of the decisions in the Calcutta High Court, and it is nowhere suggested that in a case of this kind a money decree cannot be passed.

The second point for consideration is the rate of rent. The argument of the learned Vakil on behalf of the appellants is, that the compromise petition was in settlement of a bona fide dispute and consequently that, even if there is an enhancement of more than 2 annas in the rupee, the provisions of section 29, Bengal Tenancy Act, will not apply. The question whether the compromise was in settlement of a bona fide dispute has not been decided in definite terms by either of the lower Courts, but it is to my mind perfectly clear from the judgment of the learned Munsif that he did not consider that there was any bona fide dispute, inasmuch as he says in the course of his judgment that in all the stages from the beginning of the survey and settlement operations the lands were held nagdi and that the jama payable was Rs. 106-4-0. The learned Subordinate Judge, in his judgment in appeal, has not discussed the point but it is clear that he agrees with the learned Munsif. In this view of the case I am unable to accept the contention that there was any bona fide dispute, and I would, for the reasons already given, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Briefly the facts are that one Musammât Misri was judgment debtor in respect of some ten decrees obtained against her by various persons, including the firm of Jhandu Lal-Sham Das. On the other hand Musammât Misri had obtained a decree for a sum of Rs. 2,600 against one Bindra Ban, represented in the present case by Jadu Rai. Jhandu Lal-Sham Das, whose decree amounted to Rs. 3,098, applied for execution by attachment of the decree held by Musammât Misri against Jadu Rai and in the course of the proceedings a private arrangement was come to, whereby Jhandu Lal-Sham Das agreed that their decree against Musammât Misri should be regarded as satisfied on payment by Jadu Rai of a sum of Rs. 1,350 to them. This sum was paid by Jadu Rai to Jhandu Lal-Sham Das and at a later stage the other creditors of Musammât Misri objected that the arrangement was not binding upon them and claimed that sum of Rs. 1,350 was divisible amongst all the creditors generally and that Jadu Rai was bound to make good to those creditors the balance of Rs. 1,250 due under the decree obtained against him by Musammât Misri. The Courts below have held that the sum of Rs. 1,350 is liable to be rateably distributed amongst the various decree-holders and that Jhandu Lal-Sham Das, whose agreement with Jadu Rai has been set aside, are entitled to claim from Jadu Rai payment of the balance of Rs. 1,250.

Jadu Rai has appealed to this Court and the only respondents present are Jhandu Lal-Sham Das, the other creditors, though served with notice of the hearing, not having put in an appearance before me. It appears to me that the lower Courts have misread the provisions of sections 64 and 73, Civil Procedure Code, and that the orders passed by them cannot be upheld. At the time when Jhandu Lal-Sham Das applied for execution of the decree by attachment of the money due to Musammât Misri from Jadu Rai, no action to enforce their decrees by attachment of that debt had been taken by the other creditors, nor was the money obtained by Jhandu Lal-Sham Das from Jadu Rai paid into Court so as to constitute "assets held by the Court." The amount of the decree in favour of Jhandu Lal-Sham Das exceeded the amount due from Jadu Rai to Musammât Misri and it was open, therefore, to the former to attach the whole of the decree against Jadu

Construction of document—Mortgage—Future tense, use of, effect of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), s. 18, rules framed under, r. 20 (3)—Mortgage of grant land without sanction of Deputy Commissioner, validity of.

Where from a document, construed as a whole, it appears that the intention of the parties was to effect a mortgage in presenti, the mere fact that the future tense is used should not be construed as indicating that the parties intended the document to be a mere agreement to mortgage to be followed by an instrument of mortgage in due course. [p. 42, col. 2.]

A transfer of grant lands without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner, in contravention of the conditions of the grant, renders the grant liable to resumption and the grantee to certain penalties, but it cannot be said that such transactions are forbidden by law, within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act. [p. 42, col. 2; p. 43 col. 1.]

A mortgage of grant lands without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner is a valid mortgage of the right, title and interest of the mortgagor in the grant, but the mortgagee runs the risk of having his grant resumed. So long, however, as the Deputy Commissioner does not take action to resume the grant, the mortgage holds good and can be legally enforced. [p. 43, col. 1.]

Mr. Halker, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. B. Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—Plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree over certain land. The decree was affirmed by the Court of first appeal. The points taken in second appeal are that the document on which plaintiff relies is not a mortgage-deed, but a mere agreement to mortgage; that the mortgage is invalid, because the land was grant land, and the mortgagor had no right to mortgage, and finally that the suit is barred by limitation. In the document in question, the expression used is "will place in mortgage"; but I quite agree with the lower Courts that, if it is construed as a whole, there can be no doubt that the intention was to effect a mortgage in presenti. The future tense was used, but it was merely a mode of expression and there was no intention that the document should be a mere agreement to mortgage to be followed by an instrument of mortgage in due course. Section 92 of the Evidence Act has no application.

As regards the second point I see no reason to hold that the mortgage is void because the land was grant land, and the conditions of the grant have been infringed. Condition (3) of rule 20 under the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act provides that no grantee or lessee shall without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner within five years from the date of expiry of the term of exemption or, where no exemption has been granted, until five years after the date of the execution of the grant or lease, transfer, mortgage or hypothecate, etc., his right, title or interest in the land granted or leased.

Rule 21 provides that if a grantee or lessee infringes the conditions set forth in the previous rule as applicable to all grants or leases, the Deputy Commissioner may resume the grant, and the grantee lessee shall be liable to certain specific penalties.

It is noticeable that the rule does not say that an unauthorized transfer, constituting an infringement of any of the conditions of a grant or lease, will be void. Rule 20, although called a rule, as a matter of fact lays down the conditions applicable to grants and leases and rule 21 prescribes the consequences of the infringement of the conditions. A transfer without the sanction of the Deputy Commissioner in contravention of the conditions of the grant no doubt renders the grant liable to resumption, and the grantee to certain penalties, but I do not think that it can be said that such transactions are forbidden by law within the meaning of section 23 of the Contract Act, and it cannot, therefore, be held that the object or consideration of the contract of mortgage is forbidden by law. The mortgagor makes a valid mortgage of his right, title and interest in the grant, but the mortgagee runs the risk of having his grant resumed. So long as the Deputy Commissioner does not take action to resume the land, the mortgage holds good and can be legally enforced.

I see no reason to differ from the concurrent finding of both the lower Courts that there was a payment of interest, which rendered the suit not barred by limitation. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Pleadings—Practice—Rule of law—Plaintiff, whether to be limited to his plaint—Alternative claim, whether can be put forward—Court, whether can make out new case.

The rule of law is perfectly clear that a plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint, but he may put forward an alternative case in his plaint in the commencement, so that the defendant may know if he has more than one case to meet and may not be taken by surprise. [p. 44, col. 1]

It is not open to a Court to make out a new case for the plaintiff which the defendant has had no opportunity to meet. [p. 43, col. 2; p. 44, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, plaintiffs sued for joint possession with the defendants on the ground of ownership and the Court decreed their claim in respect of a portion of the area in dispute for the purpose of grazing cattle:

Held, that since the plaintiffs had not asked for any relief on the strength of their grazing rights, such relief could not be granted to them. [p. 44, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha dated the 13th March 1915.

Mr. Mukand Lal Iuri and Lala Ram Ohand Manchanda, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a plot of land, nearly 8,114 bighas in area, which is recorded in the revenue papers as the shamilat of the village Mohabpur in the Shahpur District. The plaintiffs, who are some of the proprietors of a neighbouring village called Bhin, claim that they are joint proprietors with the defendants of the land, and allege that they had been grazing their cattle thereon. They complain that their rights were denied by the defendants at the time of the recent settlement, and consequently pray that they may be awarded joint possession of the property.

The Subordinate Judge holds that only the proprietors of Mohabpur are the owners of the land, and that the plaintiffs have only grazing rights thereon. He has, accordingly in order to safeguard those rights, allotted to them a plot of 291 bighas and passed a decree for possession thereof. Both the parties are dissatisfied with this decree and have preferred appeals which may be disposed of by one judgment.

So far as the plaintiffs' appeal is concerned, the matter is perfectly simple. There is no documentary evidence to show that they have any rights of ownership in the land in dispute, and it is perfectly clear that the land has all along been recorded as the shamilat of the proprietary body of Mohabpur. The plaintiffs' appeal must, therefore, fail.

Coming now to the appeal preferred by the defendants, we find that the settlement papers prepared at the settlements of 1860 and 1891-92 record plaintiffs' right of grazing in the land in dispute, and it seems to us that if the plaintiffs had brought a suit properly framed for the purpose of enforcing their grazing rights, they might have obtained a decree. The suit as disclosed in the plaint is, however, one for possession on the ground of ownership, and the trial Judge is entirely wrong in making out a new case for the plaintiffs which the defendants had no opportunity to meet.

The rule of the law is perfectly clear that a plaintiff must be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint, but he may put forward an alternative case in his plaint in the commencement, so that the defendant may know if he has more than one case to meet and may not be taken by surprise. It was open to the plaintiffs in the present case to put forward an alternative claim on the ground of easement, and in that case the defendants would have got an opportunity to raise such defence as they had in answer to that claim. But as pointed out above, the plaintiffs simply claimed joint possession on the ground of ownership. The question of easement was not, therefore, determined.

The plaint is inelegantly drafted but after considering all the clauses carefully we are unable to hold that the plaintiffs asked for any relief which could be granted upon the strength of their grazing rights. Indeed, they did not even ask that a sufficient area might be reserved for grazing purposes, and that the defendants be restrained from using that area for other purposes.

In the circumstances we are constrained to hold that the decree on the strength of easement cannot be granted, and that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge must be reversed. Accordingly we accept the defendants' appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. Considering that the defendants denied even the grazing rights which are clearly mentioned in the settlement records, and that the suit fails on a technical ground, we direct the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, setting aside of—Bona fide mistake, whether sufficient cause—Inherent power of Court, exercise of.

A Court is not confined to a narrow construction of the expression "prevented by sufficient cause" in Order IX, rule 13, of the Civil Procedure Code: it has inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree in certain circumstances. [p 45, col. 2.]

A bona fide mistake as to the date of hearing is a sufficient cause for setting aside an ex parte decree. [p 45, col. 2.]

Mr. McDonnell, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dawson, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge, Moulmein, refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed in Civil Regular No. 110 of 1915. The ground briefly on which the appellant Christensen asked for the setting aside of the ex parte decree is that by mistake he thought the civil suit was fixed for the 7th January whereas as a matter of fact it had been fixed for the 6th. It appears that Christensen had two other cases fixed for the 7th, one being a criminal case in which the subject-matter of the civil suit was also the subject matter of a charge of defamation against him and the other was the suit of a person called Oastor. The learned District Judge of Moulmein has come to the conclusion, on grounds which seem to us insufficient, that Christensen deliberately neglected to attend Court on the 6th of January. As a matter of fact on that day Christensen was in Rangoon instructing Mr. McDonnell, who had been briefed to defend him in the criminal case. On the 8th December Christensen wrote a letter to Mr. McDonnell, in which he said he thought the criminal case would be postponed as the civil case had also been fixed for the same date. On the 5th January Christensen's clerk, Nga Poo, sent him a telegram addressed care of the station master Rangoon, in which he said "Mitchell civil case to-morrow." Nga Poo explains that the reason why he sent this telegram was that he had gone to see Mr. Sutherland's clerk on the 5th about the litigation and was informed by that clerk that the civil case was fixed for the 6th and not for the 7th. Nga Poo swears that as he was aware that his master was under the impression that both cases were fixed for the 7th, he at once sent off a telegram. Unfortunately that telegram was delivered about 6 o'clock on the evening of the 6th to a man called Kirk, who put it in a letter box where it remained till the next morning. The next morning Christensen wrote to Mr. McDonnell and told him that he had received this telegram and asked him what was to be done, and suggested to wire urgently to the Judge. The same day he sent two telegrams to lawyers in Moulmein asking them to appear before the Judge, as Mr. Sutherland who had been briefed in the case had withdrawn for want of instructions. This conduct does not appear to us to be the conduct of a man who is anxious to shirk appearing in Court. We do not believe the evidence of Abdul Kareem regarding the dates he has put down in Exhibit A. Evidence of this kind can be very easily manufactured. It is true that in Christensen's paper on the 1st October the dates for the civil suits are given as the 6th and 7th January, and it is also true that Mr. Sutherland denies that he told Christensen that the date of the civil suit was the 7th of January. Further Mr. Coelho in his affidavit swears that about the 6th of December, when he had a conversation with Christensen, he told him that the date of the civil suit was the 6th of January. Yet in spite of this two days later we find Christensen writing to Mr. McDonnell as though the date was the 7th of January. It appears to us that Mr. Christensen had been confused by reason of the three cases which had been fixed for the 7th of January, and was under a misapprehension about the date fixed for the present case. The case was a substantial one, and he had filed a written defence. In the ordinary course of events as a criminal suit was pending in Court about a matter which was also the subject of a civil suit, a Civil Court would wait until the criminal charge was heard before proceeding with the case, and no doubt Christensen thought that this procedure would be followed in Moulmein. The next question is whether, if Christensen failed to attend the Court owing to a bona fide mistake, this Court has power to restore the case. There have been two recent decisions in the High Courts of India in which it has been held that a Court is not confined to a narrow construction of the expression "prevented by sufficient cause" in Order IX, rule 13. See Somayya v. Subbamma (1) and Lalla Prasad v. Ram Karan (2), where it was held that a Court has inherent power to restore in certain circumstances. Order IX, rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure, makes it compulsory on a Court to set aside a dismissal under rule 8, where the plaintiff satisfies the Court that there was sufficient reason for non appearance. It, however, cannot take away the Court's power to restore the case for any valid reasons. In this case the suit is a substantial one, and there appears to be a bona fide mistake as to the date, and it would, in our opinion, be unreasonable not to restore the suit upon payment of costs. We set aside the ex parte decree of the District Court with costs, five gold mohurs, to be paid by the appellant.

Decree set aside.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ellore, in Appeal Suit No. 206 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Ellore, in Original Suit No. 550 of 1915.

FACTS.—A obtained a license from the Collector to vend Arrack. One of the conditions of the license was that the licensee should not employ an agent to sell Arrack. In violation of such condition A took B as his partner in the business under the license and O, who was fully aware of all these facts, lent money to the firm for the purposes of the partnership. O having brought a suit for the recovery of the money lent, the question was raised whether, in view of the fact that the partnership was such as would defeat the law, the money, which was admittedly for the purposes of that unlawful arrangement, was recoverable. The Court below decreed the amount against A alone.

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, for the Appellant.—The partnership is illegal and the loan made for the furtherance of the objects of the illegal partnership with the full knowledge of the illegality is not, therefore, recoverable, Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badri Nath (1), Medi Setti Pentayya v. Pilli Venkata Reddi (2), Thithi Pakurudasu v. Bheemudu (3), Marudamuthu Pillai v. Rangasami Mooppan (4). But see Natla Bapiraju v. Puran Achutha Rajajee (5). The object of the prohibitions contained in the Abkari, Opium and other similar Acts is not merely to protect the public revenue. The prohibitions are based on public policy. The lender has stipulated for a share in the profits of the partnership business which the loan financed. And so he abetted the evasion of the Statute. The suit ought, therefore, to have been dismissed.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar (with him Mr. P. Somasundaram), for the Respondent.—What the Abkari Act and the license prohibit is 'sale' by any person other than the actual licensee. A "transfer" is not always a sale. A partnership does not necessarily involve a "transfer," which is a very comprehensive word. Still less is it a "sale." Therefore, there is nothing to prohibit the partnership. I submit that the partnership is not illegal. See Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badri Nath (1), Natla Bapiraju v. Puran Achutha Rajajee (5).

There is no prohibition in the license. There is no agent employed in this case. The decision in Natla Bapiraju v. Puran Achutha Rajajee (5) is still good law. In Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badri Nath (1) the license in question contained the word 'transfer,' which word has prima facie been deliberately changed by the Revenue Authorities to 'sale' in the present case. Cf. also section 4 of the Opium Act with sections 15, 22, 24 and 25 of the Abkari Act. Karsan Sadashiv Patil v. Gathu Shivaji Patil (6) decides in the same way as Natla Bapiraju v. Puran Achutha Rajajee (5). See also Gouri Shankar v. Mumtaz Ali Khan (7).

The lender can recover the loan unless it is established affirmatively that he was a particeps criminis. Hire Purchase Furnishing Co. v. Richens (8), Waugh v. Morris (9), Lindley on Partnership, pages 110, 127, Rajkristo Moitro v. Koylash Ohunder Bhattacharjee (10).

GANAPATHI BRAHMAYYA v. K. PELLA RAMIAH.

liable for the whole. See Jamna Bai v. Subb Mohitai Arergal v. Vasanta Rao (11).

Mr. P. Narayanamurthi, in reply.—Where a person is the partner of another, each is the agent of the other. So the condition of the license is clearly violated. The law in England and India is the same, that where services are done or monies are advanced to further a declaredly illegal object and such object is carried out, no action will lie in respect of such services or monies. See Bani Muncharam v. Regina Stanger (12), Ohoga Lal v. Piari (13), Pannichand v. Nanco Sanher Tawker (14).

It goes without saying that the lender in this case is a particeps criminis. He knew all facts and advanced monies not to the license-holder whose individuality was already merged in the unlawful fact, but to the partnership, which is illegal.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The real question seems to me to be that where monies are advanced to two persons jointly of whom one could have carried out the object without any violation of the law, what is the extent of the liability?]

That would be the question if the loan was to the individuals and not to the partnerships as alleged even in the plaint. Here there is a violation of the law and a person who is fully aware of it advances monies for furtherance of the same violation and stipulates for a share of the profits derivable therefrom. I submit that the suit ought to be dismissed. There is no way of apportioning liabilities in this case, for everything is void ab initio.

I submit there is no principle to authorise such apportionment.

JUDGMENT.—The main facts of the case are not in dispute. The 1st defendants obtained a license to sell Arrack. The principal condition in it with which this second appeal is concerned is in these terms:—"Paragraph 16. The privilege of supply and vend shall not, without the permission of the Collector previously obtained, be sold, exchanged or sub leased, nor, if the Collector has ordered, can an agent be appointed, without his permission previously obtained, for exercise of any such privilege." The 1st defendant took the 2nd defendant as his partner without obtaining the Collector's sanction. Plaintiff had dealings with both the defendants and the suit is for money due on those dealings.

The first question is whether the partnership became illegal by the 2nd defendant joining the business. Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, Vakil for the respondent, argued that as the license does not in terms prohibit a partnership and as the word transfer is not to be found in it, the transaction was not illegal. He relied on Karsan Sadashiv Patil v. Gatlu Shivaji Patil (6) and on Natla Bapiraju v. Puran Achutha Rajajee (5). In the latter case, the learned Judges based their decision on the fact that the license was not before them. In Karsan Sadashiv Patil v. Gatlu Shivaji Patil (6) the learned Judges say that the omission of certain words in the new licenses issued by the Government of Bombay indicated a change of intention on the part of the executive not to treat partnerships as illegal. We are not in a position to gather the intention of the Madras Government on this subject. We must, therefore, give to the language of the clause in the license its ordinary meaning. The clause prohibits sale by a stranger and the employment of an agent. In our opinion the taking of a partner has the effect ordinarily of selling a portion of the business to him. It has certainly the effect of making him an agent for the sale of liquor. As these are prohibited, we think that the partnership is illegal. Nalan Padmanabhan v. Badri Nath (1), Thithi Pakurudasu v. Bheemudu (3) and Marudamuthu Pillai v. Rangasami Mooppan (4) have consistently adopted this view in this Court.

The next question is whether the plaintiff had notice of the illegality of the partnership. Mr. Krishnasawmy Aiyar relied on the observation of Lord Bowen, L. J., in Hire Purchase Furnishing Co., v. Richens (2) for this purpose. The learned Lord Justice had before him a case which would be governed in this country by section 263 of the Contract Act. It was held that where the carrying on of the business which is prima facie legal becomes malum prohibitum under certain circumstances, the burden of proving that the prohibition was known to the lessor was on him (sic). Waugh v. Morris (9) is also to the same effect. But these decisions do not affect the present case. As admitted by the plaintiff in his plaint, he knew that the 1st defendant alone had the license, he knew that the 2nd defendant was taken as a partner and that the partner carried on the business. Under these circumstances, it was incumbent on him to have made enquiries as to whether the Collector permitted the 2nd defendant to join in the business. The burden was on him and we must hold that he has failed to discharge it. We must take it that the 2nd defendant had knowledge of the illegality of the contract.

Now comes the third question, which was argued with great insistence by Mr. Narayanamurthy, Vakil for the appellants. The question is whether, if the transaction is illegal by virtue of the fact that an unauthorised person was included in it, the plaintiff can have no cause of action for dealings he carried on even against the 1st defendant. It is not denied that the 1st defendant could have legitimately carried on the business. Nor is it denied that if the plaintiff lent to the 1st defendant, he could have recovered. Does he lose his rights altogether because the 2nd defendant was joined in it? In other words, where the transaction is not malum in se but malum prohibitum to a certain extent, is a third party to have no relief? We adopt a statement of law contained in Lindley on Partnership, page 127. It is in these terms:—

"The illegality of a partnership affords no reason why it should not be sued. It cannot indeed be effectually sued by any person who, being aware of the facts, seeks to enforce a demand arising out of a transaction tainted with the illegality which affects the firm, but the illegality of the firm does not per se afford any answer to a demand against it arising out of the transaction to which it is a party and which transaction is illegal in itself. Unless the person dealing with the firm is particeps criminis, there can be no turpis causa to bring him within the operation of the rule ex turpi causa non oritur actio; and he, not being implicated in any illegal act himself, cannot be prejudiced by the fact that the persons with whom he has been dealing are illegally associated in partnership." The cases to which Mr. Narayanamurthy drew our attention, notably Bani Muncharam v. Regina Stanger (12), are cases of transactions being unusual or illegal in themselves. In such cases the person who deals with the defendant is believed to have been particeps criminis and as such not entitled to recover anything. See also Upfill v. Wright (15). But where there is nothing illegal or opposed to public policy in the business itself and there is nothing which touches the conscience of the lender, these decisions have no application. It was a perfectly legal business which by the inclusion of the 2nd defendant became inoperative as a partnership.

The last question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover the whole amount Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar relied on Jamna Bai Saheb Mohitai Avergal v. Vasanta Rao (11) for the position that the 1st defendant should pay the whole amount. That was a case of a void contract. Here the question is to what extent was the 1st defendant alone benefited. Section 45 does not help us in such a case. We think the presumption is that he was benefited by half the loan. In modification of the decrees of the Courts below we give the plaintiff a decree for half the amount sued for with costs against the 1st defendant. The 2nd defendant will bear his own costs.

Madras City Municipal Act (III of 1904), ss. 262, 325—License for storing timber—Permission of Municipality to put up a shed on timber yard, whether necessary.

A license obtained under section 325 of the Madras City Municipal Act does not cover the permission that is required under section 262 of the Act. [p. 49, col. 2.]

Therefore, a person who has obtained a license for storing timber is bound to take the permission of the Municipality for putting up a shed over it. [p. 49, col. 2.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the 2nd Presidency Magistrate, George Town, Madras, dated the 3rd May 1919, in C. C. No. 3767 of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. S. Krishnasawmy Iyengar, for the Petitioner:—The license obtained under section 325 for the Madras City Municipal Act for storing timber is enough to put a shed over the timber yard. No separate permission is necessary for the erection of the shed. The putting up of the shed is necessary to carry on the petitioner's business as a timber merchant.

The President of the Municipality had written to the petitioner that no separate license was necessary. That letter must be taken as a permission for the erection of a shed.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.—Sections 325 and 262 of the Madras Municipal Act relate to two distinct matters. The former requires licenses for timber depots and the latter relates to the erection of sheds with inflammable materials. A license under the former section will not cover the permission required under the latter.

The President's letter cannot be taken to be the permission. That letter does not define the period covered by the permission, nor does it give the boundaries over which the shed is to be erected. The latter is unauthorized by Statute.

ORDER.—The question in this case is whether a person who has obtained a license for storing timber is not bound to take the permission of the Municipality for putting up a shed over it.

There was a license given for selling or storing timber to the petitioner. Apparently in the year 1908, he applied to Mr. Lloyd, the then President of the Municipality, for a license to erect a shed in the timber-yard. Mr. Lloyd said in Exhibit I, "the undersigned will not insist on the Pandal license fees being paid on the sheds used in their depots, as the license granted under section 325, Act III of 1904, for using a place for the storage of timber covers, in the opinion of the undersigned, sheds necessary for the protection of timber so stored." Apparently Mr. Lloyd was under the impression that if there was license for the storage of timber that would cover the shed erected over it.

It was contended by the Vakil for the petitioner in this Court that the putting up of the shed is only necessary to carrying on the trade of a timber merchant. We are unable to agree with this contention. It is clear that the Legislature has provided two distinct licenses in respect of the different matters. Section 325 refers to timber depots and section 262 to the erection of sheds with inflammable materials. Therefore, in our opinion, the President was mistaken in thinking that the license under section 325 covered the permission required under section 262; this is in accordance with the view taken by a Bench of this Court in Emperor v. Varadachariar (1).

It was next argued by the Vakil for the appellant that Mr. Lloyd's letter must be taken at least as a permission for erecting a shed. The obvious answer to this argument is that suggested by the learned Crown Prosecutor. If permission is to be granted under section 325 of the City Municipal Act; the period during which the permission is to be availed of must be mentioned and the boundaries given. The letter of Mr. Lloyd does not purport to fix the period nor to give the boundaries over which the shed is to be erected. No Municipal President has the power to give authority for all time to come to erect sheds, and that is the reason why the Legislature has imposed a restriction upon him to specify the period. Therefore, we cannot regard the letter written by Mr. Lloyd as permission to erect a shed. It follows that the prosecution was well advised and was right.

As regards the sentence, having regard to the letter of Mr. Lloyd, we do not think that the fine of Rs. 25 is justified in the circumstances. We reduce it to Rs. 5.

Burma Gambling Act (I of 1892), s. 10—Field shed, whether place to which public have access.

A field shed which the owner has left after the completion of field work and which is not in the occupation of anybody, but which has not been abandoned to the use of the public, is not a place to which the public have access within the meaning of section 10 of the Burma Gambling Act.

Mr. Maung Gyi, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The gambling took place in a field shed belonging to one Kyi Nyo. It was not in the occupation of anybody at the time the gamblers went there to gamble. The owner had left it after the completion of field work. There is, however, no evidence to show that it had been abandoned to the use of the public. Clearly it was not a place to which "the public have access" within the meaning of the Burma Gambling Act.

As to the meaning of the words "place to which the public have access" and in particular of the word "place," which is to be read as eiusdem generis with the words "street or thoroughfare" which precede it in section 10 of the Act, and as to whether it could possibly have a wider meaning, considering the mischief indicated in the preamble and the intention of the Legislature as understood from the tenor of the Act, see Ah Kon v. King-Emperor (1). See also the judgment of Mr. Burgess, J. C., in Criminal Revision No. 603 of 1892 (2), where an unoccupied te or hut which had "no door and only one wall, and to have been empty and to have belonged to nobody" was held to be not "a place to which the public have access." The following observations of the learned Judge must, however, be adverted to—"The gambling was at night, and without any of the publicity which the law seems to contemplate as constituting the nuisance to be suppressed." These observations might mislead one into thinking that they involve the proposition that if the gambling had taken place in the day, and with publicity, such as that it was carried on in full view of the public, the result of the case would have been different. I do not think that the learned Judge meant to lay down such a proposition. If he did it would be an obiter dictum, and with due respect I am not able to agree with him. The sole questions for consideration are, first, whether the hut was "a place" within the meaning of section 10 of the Act, and, second, whether it was one to which "the public had access." The fact that there was publicity about the gambling, such as that it was held in full view of the public, cannot alter the answers.

I set aside the convictions. The fines, which have been paid, will be refunded.

Convictions set aside.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 17th July 1919, convicting the appellant.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant has been sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under section 304, Indian Penal Code, and the main contention on his behalf is that the offence committed falls under section 325, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as the deceased Sultan received only one fatal blow.

The evidence, it is true, is not clear as to who struck that fatal blow, for I cannot agree with the view that several blows were dealt on the head of deceased. It is a most unfortunate thing that in these very serious cases we should have no better qualified expert than a Sub-Assistant Surgeon.

The attack does not appear to have been premeditated, and the appellant had received provocation, for the small daughters of deceased had plundered his fodder field.

There is no clear evidence as to what immediately preceded the attack, but there must have been recriminations and probably defiance on the part of deceased. That the appellant played the principal part in the attack, I have little doubt; first, because he was the owner of the crop, and Dalla was only a tenant, secondly, because there is evidence that he struck deceased after he had been knocked down, thirdly, because the witnesses separated him from his opponent, but there is no evidence that Dalla had to be so kept off the object of his attack.

Again, Ramzan's stick has never been found; Dalla's stick was produced, and appears to be of quite small dimensions.

For these reasons, though both appellants are guilty, their guilt is not equal. I accept

JUDGMENT.

WALMESLEY, J.—This Rule was obtained by one Mon Mohan Dey—the respondent in a proceeding under section 483, Criminal Procedure Code. It appears that on the 11th November last year, the opposite party made an application to the Court of Presidency Magistrate under that section and on that a Rule was issued. After some adjournments, the matter was transferred to the Honorary Magistrate Mr.

EMPEROR v. SEIN KEE.

Rustomji for disposal and in his Court the present petitioner and the woman—the opposite party—and the child were examined. Then there were frequent adjournments for one cause or another and eventually, on the 3rd April 1919, the Rule was discharged on the ground that there were no witnesses for the prosecution present. On the 10th April 1919 the woman made a fresh application before the Chief Presidency Magistrate and a Rule was again issued upon the present petitioner and the proceedings instituted on that Rule are now pending. We have been asked to quash those proceedings, and the ground on which it is suggested that we should do so is that, after the Rule had been discharged by Mr. Rustomji, the woman had no right to make a second application under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, and that the Magistrate erred in granting a Rule. Our attention has been drawn to the case of Hakimi Jan Bibi v. Mouze Ali (1) and to an unreported case. It appears to me that those cases may be distinguished on a very important ground, namely, that in them evidence was gone into and there was an adjudication by the Magistrate as to the paternity of the child. That is a very broad distinction. In the present case, the Magistrate Mr. Rustomji did not purport to come to any conclusion as to whether the child is or is not the son of the present petitioner. In my opinion, when the first Rule was discharged by Mr. Rustomji, it remained open to the woman to make a fresh application and the Magistrate was not in error in issuing a Rule on this fresh application. I think, therefore, the present Rule should be discharged and the Magistrate directed to go on with the present proceedings.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—I agree. There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code which bars a second application under section 488 of that Code. The only section to which reference may be made in support of the contention that such an application is incompetent is section 403, not that the section applies in terms to proceedings under section 488 but that a principle similar to that underlying section 403 may be applied by analogy to cases of this kind. If we refer to that section, we find that in the explanation appended to it, it is stated that the dismissal of a complaint would be no bar to a trial on a fresh complaint; and that principle may be applied to this case. In this case, the complaint under section 488, Criminal Procedure Code, was dismissed for default and there was no adjudication regarding the merits. I do not think, therefore, there is anything in the law which prevents that second application from being proceeded with.

Rule discharged.

JUDGMENT.—When the Police raided Sein Kee's place of business under a warrant, numerous packs of cards were found as well as some dice. The presumption stated in section 7 of the Gambling Act clearly arose and this presumption holds good till the contrary is proved. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate considered that the presumption was rebutted, as he held it proved that the persons who were admittedly playing cards at the house were nearly all employees of the house-owner Sein Kee, that they were playing for recreation, and that, though the play was for money, no commission was taken. The witnesses called to establish these facts for the defence were two of the accused who had been acquitted in this case. They are carpenters employed by Sein Kee, who is a cooper by trade, and the coopery was the place where the raid took place.

The Magistrate having acquitted the accused on the above grounds, the Local Government preferred this appeal against the order of acquittal. The only question is whether the Magistrate had sufficient materials for holding it proved that the house was not a common gaming house. He believed the defence witnesses and though they are Sein Kee's servants, I am not prepared to say that the Magistrate ought to have disbelieved them on that ground. He appears to have believed them because he thought their statements intrinsically reasonable and probable. If the card players with one exception (a customer) were employees of Sein Kee, this fact would render it improbable that the place was a common gaming house. The evidence that the players were employees is only that of the two men already referred to, but I can see no sufficient reason for rejecting it. If, as a matter of fact and notoriety, the place was a common resort of outside gamblers, the prosecution ought to have had no difficulty in proving it. Instead of doing so the prosecution relied on the bare presumption under section 7, and took the risk of its being rebutted.

I am unable to interfere with the order of acquittal. The appeal is dismissed.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Orr), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In these five connected cases the twenty petitioners have been convicted under section 420 read with section 120B of the Indian Penal Code. In the Rules issued at their instance the questions raised are three, namely, (i) whether the evidence of an accomplice of the name of Ramraj was properly admitted, (ii) whether evidence regarding certain cocaine and gambling dens should have been admitted and (iii) whether the statement made before trial but after arrest by a co-accused of the name of Baijnath was admissible in evidence.

It appears that the petitioners, the accomplice Ramraj and others were placed on trial together on a charge of the offence of which the petitioners have been convicted. After the case had been opened, on the 14th of June 1917, the Pleader appearing for the Crown, one Nagendra Nath Banerjee, with the consent of the Court, withdrew from the prosecution of Ramraj, who was thereupon discharged. He was thereafter examined as a witness.

Nagendra Nath Banerjee was not a Public Prosecutor appointed by the Governor-General in Council or the Local Government, though he was in fact acting under the directions of the Public Prosecutor duly appointed for the district. The contention then is that he was not competent to withdraw from the prosecution, whether under section 494 or section 495 (2), and that the position of Ramraj as a co-accused remained unaltered.

We need not, however, consider the question of the authority of the Pleader appearing for the Crown. With him was a Court Sub-Inspector who joined with the Pleader in applying for the permission of the Court and in withdrawing from the prosecution. That he is a Public Prosecutor appointed in the manner specified in section 494 is conceded, but it is suggested that his signature to the written application is a subsequent addition. For this suggestion there is in effect no foundation, and against it we have the statement of the Trying Magistrate.

But this also is immaterial. Whether the case against Ramraj was properly withdrawn or improperly withdrawn, the fact remains that the Magistrate, by discharging him, separated his case from the case of his co-accused. He ceased to be on trial with his accomplices and he, therefore, became a competent witness. As this question was fully discussed in the decision of Akhoy Kumar Mukerjee v. Emperor (1), we need not enter into it more fully here.

(1) 45 Ind. Cas. 999; 45 C. 720; 27 C. L. J. 91 22 O. W. N. 405; 19 Cr. L. J. 663.

The second contention is that the evidence given regarding gambling and cocaine dens and the raids thereupon should have been regarded as evidence of bad character, and, therefore, as inadmissible under section 54 of the Evidence Act.

But the case being that the accused or some of them were first thrown together by their frequenting or running such dens, and that for the purpose of their criminal organisation, they continued to meet at such places, their evidence, though doubtless affording indications of bad character, could not be excluded. So also the evidence of the Excise Sub-Inspector as to his raids upon these places, though given in too great detail, leads up to the admissions said to have been made to him.

Lastly, the statement made by the co-accused Baijnath, on the 1st of January, which we have read, is not a confession. It was no doubt admissible as against Baijnath himself but not under section 30 of the Evidence Act against the others. On the authority of the decisions of Emperor v. Abani Bhusan Chakrabutty (2) and Pulin Behary Das v. Emperor (3) it was also not admissible under section 10. No doubt, therefore, the Courts below erred in using this statement against any one other than Baijnath. We find that in the case of certain of the petitioners reference was made to the statement, but no stress was laid upon it and the error, therefore, does not vitiate the result.

For the reasons given we discharge these Rules.

Rules discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 195, 476—Order directing prosecution for forgery—Documents alleged to be forged not produced in sanction proceedings—Order, legality of.

N. and S. produced two bonds in the course of two civil suits which were eventually compromised. C., the defendant in both suits, filed a complaint against N. and S. under section 417 of the Penal Code, alleging that he had been deceived into the compromise. Evidence was recorded and the bonds examined by a Court witness, who was of the opinion that alterations had been made in them. Warrants of arrest were thereupon issued. On the date of hearing C. alone was examined but the two bonds were not produced by him or given in evidence and N. and S. were discharged. Subsequently the Magistrate commenced proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code and finally ordered the prosecution of both N. and S. under section 471 of the Penal Code. N. and S. moved the High Court on the revision side:

Held, that as the bonds were not given in evidence during the proceedings to which the petitioners were parties, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take action under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 55, col. 2; p. 56, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge, Jhelum, dated the 6th February 1919, affirming that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Jhelum, dated the 4th December 1918.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. H. A. Herbert, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In the course of two separate civil suits the petitioners, Nanak Chand and Sahib Ditta, produced two bonds. Charagh was a defendant in both these suits and compromised them on the 11th January 1918.

On the 2nd March 1918, Charagh filed a complaint against both the petitioners under section 417, Indian Penal Code, alleging that he had been deceived into agreeing to the said compromises. He was examined on 4th March 1918 and ordered to produce evidence and the original bonds and copies of the final order in the civil suits. This order was under section 202, Criminal Procedure Code. The Magistrate was transferred and his successor, on 28th April 1918, directed the filing of copies and the production of evidence and sent for the original civil records.

On 11th May 1919, evidence was recorded and the bonds examined through Lala Hori Lal (summoned as a witness by the Court), who used a magnifying glass and expressed his opinion that certain alterations had been made in them.

Warrants of arrest were then issued and on the 4th June 1918, Sahib Ditta alone appeared. On 21st June 1918, the complainant and both the accused appeared and the case was fixed for the 3rd and then for the 22nd July 1918.

On this date Charagh alone was examined and the two bonds were not produced by him or given in evidence in any way. Nanak Chand was discharged and the case adjourned to 23rd August 1918, on which date Charagh filed an application withdrawing from the prosecution and Sahib Ditta was also discharged. On the 24th August 1911, the Magistrate commenced proceedings under section 476, Criminal Procedure Code, and finally passed orders on the 4th December 1918 holding that the two petitioners should be proceeded against under section 471, Indian Penal Code, and sent them to the District Magistrate.

Nanak Chand and Sahib Ditta have moved this Court on the revision side asking for the cancellation of the order.

Various points of an important nature were argued at the Bar, but it seems to me that the last point taken by Lala Fakir Chand must prevail and it is, therefore, not necessary for me to discuss or decide the others.

The point is that the documents in question were never produced or given in evidence during the proceedings to which the petitioners were parties. As has been shown above, the Court sent for the records on which the bonds were at a time when the petitioners had not been summoned to appear. Lala Hori Lal was examined before the issue of the warrants and the petitioners were then not parties to the proceedings at that time.

Since they appeared the bonds have not been produced nor given in evidence and, therefore, having regard to the provisions of sections 476 and 195, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take the action he has taken. I accordingly accept this petition and set aside the order of the 4th December 1918. Should it be considered desirable to proceed against these persons, the law must be invoked in the proper manner.

Petition accepted.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hooghly at Howrah, dated the 22nd June 1918.

Babu Dasarathy Sanyal (with him Babu Mahesh Chandra Banerjee), for the Appellant.

Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the accused against the conviction and sentence passed on him by the learned

Additional Sessions Judge of Howrah. The accused was tried before the learned Sessions Judge and a Jury. The Jury by their verdict unanimously found the accused guilty. The learned Sessions Judge, agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the Jury, has sentenced him to undergo seven years' rigorous imprisonment. In a trial by Jury, of course, the questions that can be gone into in the Appellate Court lie within an extremely narrow compass. It would never do to have the Appellate Court interfere with the verdict of the Jury where they are unanimous, because the value of a trial by Jury, is that it should be a trial by fellow countrymen, and it has never been the rule to interfere with a trial by Jury, provided that there is no misdirection by the learned Judge to the Jury. In this case the conviction clearly rests upon circumstantial evidence. In many cases circumstantial evidence is the only evidence and, in many cases, it is stronger even than direct evidence. Now, in the present case, the circumstantial evidence is a finger print left on a cash box that was broken open at a burglary in the house of a gentleman, named Haridas Pain, on the 17th January 1916. It is alleged that four young men armed went into the house at 7 P.M. and broke open the cash box. The present accused was subsequently arrested and interned. He was confined in the Rajshahi Jail, and there his finger print impression was taken and, on a comparison by the officers controlling the special bureau attached to the Criminal Investigation Department for making comparison of finger prints, it was ascertained, or believed to be ascertained, that the finger print found on the cash box at the burglary at the house of Hari Das Pain, on the 17th January 1916, was the finger print of the present accused. Thereupon the accused was placed on his trial. As I have already said, the Jury, after the conclusion of the trial, unanimously found the accused guilty and the learned Judge agreed with that view. There has been an attempt by Mr. Sanyal in the present appeal to show that there was a misdirection, and the only misdirection that is suggested is that the Jury have acted on this circumstantial evidence with reference to the finger print. The learned Judge warned the Jury and told them that it was a matter purely for them to consider whether that evidence was sufficient to convict the accused or not, and the Jury, having been properly warned and properly directed, deliberately by their verdict came to the conclusion that the circumstantial evidence connected the accused with the crime, and unanimously convicted him. That was a verdict which we are forbidden by the express terms of the law from interfering with. In that view of the case, the present appeal fails and must be dismissed.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 52B OF 1919.

PO THWAI AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Burma Gambling Act (I of 1890), ss. 6, 7—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1893), ss. 79, 101—Search warrant under s. 6, whether can be endorsed to another officer—Search by officer to whom warrant is endorsed, legality of—Presumption under s. 7, whether arises.

Section 101 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable to warrants issued under section 6 of the Burma Gambling Act. [p. 58, col. 1.]

The Burma Gambling Act contains no provision authorising the endorsement of a warrant issued under section 6 thereof by the officer to whom it is issued, to another officer. Therefore, the entry and search of a house by an officer to whom a warrant is so endorsed is not an entry under the provisions of section 6 of the Act, and consequently anything found as the result of such search cannot give rise to the presumption contained in section 7 of the Act. [p. 58, col. 1.]

Mr. Ah Yaw, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—It is to be regretted that the District Magistrate did not instruct Counsel to argue this case. The first petitioner has been convicted under section 12 and the other seven under section 11 of the Burma Gambling Act upon a presumption drawn under section 7 of the Act which they failed to rebut, and have been sentenced to fines which they have paid. On the 31st January the District Superintendent of Police issued a warrant under section 6 (1) of the Burma Gambling Act, directed to an Inspector of Police by name, to enter and search the first petitioner's house. On the 1st February the Inspector was unwell and on the 2nd February he endorsed the warrant for execution to a Deputy Inspector by name: and this officer executed the warrant. In consequence of what was then found, the petitioners were sent up for trial and convicted.

At the trial the point was raised that the Burma Gambling Act contained no provision authorising the endorsement of a warrant issued under section 6 of the Act by the officer to whom it was issued to another officer, and that the entry and search of a house by an officer to whom a warrant is so endorsed is not an entry under the provisions of section 6 of the Act, and consequently nothing then found gives rise to the presumption which section 7 requires to be drawn. Two rulings of the Punjab Chief Court, Lal Chand v. Queen-Empress (1) and Vir Singh v. Queen Empress (2), were cited to the Magistrate in support of this contention, but he declined to follow them as they were not binding on him. They are under section 6 of Act III of 1867, of which the relevant portion is worded similarly to section 6 of the Burma Gambling Act, and they are directly in point. Section 6 of the Burma Gambling Act gives extensive powers of entry, arrest, seizure, and search to certain Magistrates and the District Superintendents of Police on credible information, or other sufficient grounds affording reason to believe that any house is used as a common gaming house. If the Magistrate or District Superintendent of Police does not desire to make the entry and search himself, he is allowed by warrant to authorize any Officer of Police not below the rank of sergeant or officer in charge of a station to do so. If instruments of gaming are found in a house so entered by the Magistrate or District Superintendent of Police, or by the officer acting under the warrant of one of them, a presumption arises under section 7 of the Act against the owner or occupier, and the persons found in the house, who can only escape conviction of an offence under the Act by rebutting the presumption. As searches under the Act may give rise to such serious consequences, the Legislature has naturally provided special safeguards for their proper institution and conduct, such as requiring the record in writing of the information, or grounds of belief on which action is taken, prescribing a somewhat high rank of Police Officer to whom a warrant may be directed, requiring all searches to be made in accordance with sections 102 and 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and providing for an immediate report of the proceedings taken. Section 101 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not made applicable to warrants issued under section 6 of the Burma Gambling Act. If the authority receiving the information does not himself act upon it, he is allowed and required at least to select the individual officer who shall do so and the latter is not empowered to delegate the duty to another. In my opinion, therefore, the warrant in this case could not be acted upon by the Deputy Inspector to whom it was endorsed by the Inspector. Accordingly the house was not entered under the provisions of section 6 of the Burma Gambling Act, and the presumption enjoined by section 7 did not arise. There was no other evidence on which the convictions could stand. They are reversed, the petitioners are acquitted, and their fines will be refunded to them.

(2) 22 P. R. 1895 Cr.

MOZE ALI v. EMPEROR.

Petitioners acquitted.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—This Rule was issued at the instance of a head constable Mir Moze Ali and a constable Belat Ali. The former has been convicted under section 384, section 342 read with section 114; section 354 read with section 109, section 323 read with section 109 and section 448 of the Penal Code, while the latter has been convicted under section 384 read with section 109, and sections 354, 323, 448 and 342 of the Penal Code. Each of them has been sentenced to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment.

In the Rule issued by us the District Magistrate was asked to show cause why the convictions should not be set aside, or an order passed directing that the petitioners be committed for trial to the Court of Session.

The facts are as follows: In September a dacoity was committed in a village within the jurisdiction of Uzirpur Thana, to the staff of which the petitioners belong. A man named Golam Ali was arrested and he made a confession implicating one Dulal Khan. The investigating Sub-Inspector was very anxious to arrest this Dulal Khan, as well as other men named by Golam Ali. He went to the village of Chandipur, and found Baru Bibi, the wife of Khurshed, at the house of her father Raham Ali. It was reported that this woman had an intrigue with Dulal Khan, and she was questioned. It is alleged that a serious incident took place at Chandipur but we are not concerned with that. She was sent from Chandipur to Baraikhal to the house of her husband Khurshed, and it is there that the alleged occurrence, which forms the subject-matter of these proceedings, took place on October 15.

It is said that on that morning the petitioners with a Dafadar and some Choukidars surrounded Khurshed's house: they demanded the surrender of Dulal Khan: on Khurshed saying that he was not there, the head constable bound his hands, and ordered the constable to go inside the room where Bara Bibi had retired, and compel her to divulge the whereabouts of Dulal Khan. Thereupon the constable, a Dafadar and a Choukidar entered the room, took Bara Bibi to the cookshed and committed a very serious assault on her: they kicked her, struck her with their fists and with the butt-end of a gun, stripped her and each in turn outraged her. The woman screamed, and called to her husband begging him to pay the men to go away, and after some haggling the head constable accepted eighty rupees, and went away with his men.

The charges against the petitioners are very grave indeed. If the woman's story is true, rape was committed on her in an aggravated form, and the fear which compelled the husband to pay money to the head constable was of the most horrible kind.

The question at once arises, why were the petitioners not committed to the Sessions? The explanation given by the learned Magistrate is that the story of rape is probably an exaggeration. So it may be, but we have to consider whether that is a satisfactory reason for not committing the accused. If the story depended only on the statement made by the woman, the explanation might be sufficient; but that is not the case. It appears that the woman's wearing cloth was found by the Chemical Examiner to bear traces of semen. That does not carry the case far, but it is a piece of corroboration, however slender. Khurshed says that his wife told him immediately afterwards that she had been outraged by the three men, and several witnesses speak to hearing cries from Bara Bibi implying more or less directly that she was being outraged. It appears to me that if this evidence is believed, it may be enough to support a charge of rape, and that, therefore, the case ought to have been tried by a Court competent to deal with the offence of rape. I do not think I had better say more on the matter, for to say more might lead to misunderstanding. In my opinion, the accused ought to have been committed to the Court of Session for trial. The convictions and sentences must, therefore, be set aside, and the Magistrate must draw up charges in regard to the allegations of rape, and commit the accused for trial on those charges and on charges relating to the other offences.

The petitioners are now on bail. They will be allowed to remain on the same bail pending the disposal of the case by the Court of Session.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—In this case in view of its special circumstances we allowed the learned Vakil for the petitioners to place the whole evidence before us. If the case had come before us on appeal, having regard to the nature of the evidence, I would have felt very great hesitation in upholding the conviction. The very fact that most of the material witnesses have been disbelieved upon the gravest of the charges preferred against the accused, I mean the charge of rape under section 376 of the Indian Penal Code, would have rendered it unsafe to accept the rest of the prosecution story, but that charge was triable exclusively by the Court of Session and I can find no justification for the Deputy Magistrate disregarding it and trying the accused upon the other charges, which were intimately connected with that charge and ought to have been tried with it. I have anxiously considered the question whether having regard to the nature of the evidence in the case it is necessary for the ends of justice to direct a trial by the Court of Session, but I have come to the conclusion that in revision we should not take the responsibility of coming to a conclusion even incidentally regarding a charge upon which the accused has not been tried. It was due both to the prosecution and the defence that the charge of rape should be tried by a competent Court and I agree with my learned brother in the order passed by him. The accused are public servants and should be given the fullest opportunity of vindicating their character, as the conviction means other consequences not less serious than the punishment actually inflicted.

Order accordingly.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 12th June 1919, upholding the order of the City Magistrate, Lucknow, dated the 1st April 1919.

Mr. Niamat-Ullah, holding brief of Mr. St. G. Jackson, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. M. Banerji, Assistant-Government Advocate, High Court, Allahabad, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Hakim Mohammad Ismail Khan applies in revision from an order of the Sessions Judge of Lucknow, upholding the applicant's conviction by the City Magistrate of Lucknow, on a charge under section 193, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

The prosecution arose from the evidence given by the applicant in the well-known Ajudhia title case. In that case one Lal Tirbhuwan Nath had brought a suit to establish his right to succeed the late Maharaja Sir Partab Narain Singh of Ajudhia as the next heir of the Maharaja. The suit was brought against the junior Maharani. In order to succeed the plaintiff had to prove that a Will admittedly executed by the Maharaja on the 17th July 1891 had been revoked, and that the junior Maharani was excluded from inheritance by unchastity. The present applicant was put forward as a witness for the plaintiff and in the course of his evidence made the statement set forth in the charge sheet. The gist of this statement is that "2½ or 3 months before the death of the Maharaja approximately," while the Maharaja was under the medical treatment of a Bengali baid, named Dwarka Nath Sen, the Maharaja in the presence of the baid and the witness signed a Will cancelling the Will of 1891 and explained that the reason was "that the acts of which he had deprived the senior Rani of the estate were committed by the junior Rani also." The material evidence on which the City Magistrate found this statement to be false and on which the Sessions Judge upheld the conviction was as follows:—The execution of the Will of 1891, the death of the Maharaja on the 9th November 1906 and the making of the impugned statement by the applicant were proved. Construing the applicant's statement in the light of the date of the death of the Maharaja, the applicant must be deemed to have said that the Will he saw was signed by the Maharaja between the 9th and the 24th of August 1906 or, to give effect to the word "approximately", between the beginning of August and the end of August 1906. It was proved by the evidence of Sir Harcourt Butler, the Lieutenant-Governor of these Provinces, that on the 14th October 1906 he visited the Maharaja and the Maharaja informed him of having made a Will in favour of the second Maharani, which was registered with Colonel Currie, and committed the Maharani to his care. When the interview took place the Maharaja was in perfect possession of his faculties. It was also proved by the evidence of Raja Harihar Bakhsh Singh, Talukdar of Saraura, that eight or ten days before the Maharaja's death, which would be at the end of October or beginning of November 1906, the Maharaja told him that he had made a Will in favour of the junior Maharani and asked him to take special interest in her affairs. The evidence of the Raja of Mahmudabad as given in the title case was also brought on the record under section 33 of the Evidence Act, and this evidence was to the effect that fifteen or 20 days before the Maharaja's death, that is to say at the end of August, the Maharaja told the witness that he had written a Will in favour of his chhoti Rani, and asked the witness to defend her. It was also proved that the baid Dwarka Nath Sen, spoken of by the present applicant as being one of the persons who witnessed the revocating document, attended the Maharaja from the 16th of October till the date of his death. In argument before me it is not attempted to impugn any of this evidence. It is also admitted that the Will spoken of by Sir Harcourt Butler, the Raja of Mahmudabad and Raja Harihar Bakhsh Singh must have been the Will of 1891. It is, however, maintained that this evidence is not conclusive of the guilt of the accused, and in order to show that it is not conclusive the following possibilities are suggested by the applicant's Counsel:—

(a) that the revocating Will deposed to by the applicant was signed and destroyed by the Maharaja before the interviews just stated or that the interviews took place before the incident deposed to by the applicant,

(b) that the baid Dwarka Nath Sen, although he attended the Maharaja from the 16th of October, may have been present at Ajudhia on a previous date and that the incident may have occurred on such previous date.

As to proposition (a), we may rule out the possibility of the revocating Will having been signed after the interviews, as, even if we were to give all possible effect to the word "approximately," where the applicant speaks of the incident having occurred 3 or 2½ months before the Maharaja's death, it is not possible to conceive that the witness could have meant that the incident took place after the interviews in question. It appears to be admitted by the applicant's Counsel that, if the Maharaja signed the revocating document in August, he would not be likely in ordinary circumstances to have enlisted the sympathy and help of his friends in September on behalf of the junior Maharani. It is argued, however, that there is evidence to show great vacillation on the part of the Maharaja as to other matters besides the question of making the junior Maharani his heir, and as to this matter in particular. I am referred to the evidence of prosecution witness Syed Bakar Husein. This witness says that during his last illness the Maharaja mentioned his intention of becoming a sanyasi and that he thought of adopting some boy. I fail to understand how this evidence proves vacillation on the part of the Maharaja. The chief reliance, however, is placed on the evidence of the Raja of Mahmudabad. This witness had been shown a draft of a Will in favour of the chhoti Rani on a previous occasion at Lucknow and at the interview which preceded his death the Maharaja stated to the witness that this was his Will. In cross-examination the witness stated that, previous to the date when he was shown the draft of the Will in Lucknow, he had frequently seen the Maharaja in Lucknow. He goes on to state: "The Maharaja had made several drafts of the Will before this deed. I had seen those drafts. I saw those drafts probably after 1895. All those drafts which I saw were in favour of the chhoti Maharani. I do not remember whether there was any difference between the contents of the draft shown to me at Lucknow and those shown to me beforehand. I do not know when the Maharaja had made the Will, the draft of which was shown to me at Lucknow." The applicant's Counsel wishes me to infer from this that the Maharaja had been constantly drafting different Wills between 1895 and the date of his death. If this was so, it is possible that the Maharaja even during his last illness drafted a new Will, and so the applicant cannot be convicted of perjury, when he says he saw such a Will. It is clear, however, from the witness' statement that all the drafts were in favour of the chhoti Maharani and that he saw them after 1895 and that they were either all copies of the Will of 1891, or new drafts varying in detail but making the junior Maharani his heir. There is so much ambiguity about what the witness meant by the word "drafts" that the statement quoted from his evidence cannot be relied on to show that the Maharaja ever seriously intended to alter the Will of 1891. In any case the witness obviously refers to something that took place a long time before the Maharaja's last illness. It does not, therefore, appear to me that there was anything proved which would lessen the improbability of the applicant's story as to the execution by the Maharaja of a new Will in his last illness. It is also clear from the evidence as it stands that the alleged revoking Will could not have been witnessed by the baid Dwarka Nath Sen. The baid was only paid from the 16th of October and only claimed to be paid from that date. His presence, therefore, on the day, required to make the applicant's evidence true, is inconsistent with the evidence. The prosecution, by proving when the baid was present have done all that was in their power to prove that he was not present earlier. They cannot be expected to prove a negative by any other means. No question was asked of a single prosecution witness with a view to disclosing the possibility of the baid having been present at an earlier date, nor is there any evidence to suggest such possibility. It is suggested that, as the baid's fees were known before an emissary from the Maharaja went to bring him from Calcutta to attend the Maharaja, the baid must have been called to Ajudhia on some date previous to the last illness of the Maharaja. This does not follow by any means. Scores of people would know the fee of a well-known practitioner like the baid. The suggestion is also contrary to what was obviously implied by the applicant in his statement.

The chief ground taken by the applicant's Counsel is that, before a conviction of perjury can be justified, it must be shown that his evidence could not in the ordinary course of nature possibly have been true. He relies on a ruling reported as Queen v. Ahmed Ally (1) and in particular on a passage at page 27, where it was held by one of the two Judges deciding that case to be the true rule that, in order to justify a conviction of perjury, it is not enough to prove that a statement is incredible but it must be proved that it is impossible. It is said that this rule, though an early one, has never been dissented from. Be this as it may, I must with all respect express my dissent from it.

To justify the finding arrived at it was not necessary to have recourse to the proposition laid down. That case was one of a particular nature. In order to prove a fatal assault some of the prosecution witnesses had deposed to a death-bed statement by the deceased implicating the accused as his murderer. This evidence was countered by evidence of some defence witnesses that in his death-bed statement the deceased admitted sustaining his injuries by a fall. The medical evidence was to the effect that the deceased did not die owing to a fall and could not have made any death-bed statement. The first Court convicted on the medical evidence that the deceased could not have died by a fall. The High Court acquitted on the ground that the medical evidence against death resulting from a fall was not so certain and distinct that the Court could act upon it. Meanwhile the defence witnesses had been prosecuted for perjury. Obviously it had to be held that, so far as they spoke to death by a fall, their statement could not be disproved merely by the already distrusted medical evidence against death resulting from a fall, and so far as they spoke to a death-bed statement they could not be convicted of perjury on medical evidence which had been partly rejected. The definition of proof in the Evidence Act is of little positive assistance, but it is of some negative assistance. Its meaning clearly is that a fact may be held proved even though it is impossible to show that its existence is a mathematical or scientific certainty. This definition is of general application and thus applies to a case where the offence is one of perjury. I have no hesitation in saying that it is certainly sufficient if the statement of the accused party is proved to be incredible.

The learned Counsel is on safer ground when he states that the proof of this perjury is based solely on circumstantial evidence and appeals to the rule that, to justify a conviction on such evidence, it must be shown that this circumstantial evidence cannot be explained on any other reasonable hypothesis. In his argument, however, he ignored the importance of the word "reasonable" in the rule as formulated. It is to be remembered that when the plaintiff brought his suit against the Maharani of Ajudhia for the estate, he never foreshadowed the existence at any time of the revocating document deposed to by the present applicant. It is clear from the plaintiff's plaint that he or his legal adviser was not at the time aware that a Talukdar's Will could not be revoked by mere oral expression. At a later date he became aware of this and it became absolutely necessary for him to produce evidence of a revocating instrument. The applicant was put forward to depose to such a revocating instrument. His evidence is opposed to all probabilities and so far as it could be negatived by any fact, it has been negatived. I am unable to hold that the lower Courts were not justified in holding the statement of the applicant to have been false. Apart from this I am not hearing an appeal. There was certainly material on which the lower Courts could come to a finding that that evidence was false and, this being the case, it was not really necessary for me (though I have done so) to consider whether on this evidence I would have come to the same conclusion.

I have been asked to reduce the sentence of two years, on the ground that it is against a man of sixty or seventy years of age. I feel not the slightest disposition to do so. The plaintiff's suit occasioned an enormous amount of unnecessary expense. We are not dealing with the plaintiff but with one of his witnesses. But this witness was one of the chief agents of the plaintiff in carrying on this expensive and (in view of the finding of the Courts that heard the title case) baseless and vexatious litigation.

I, therefore, dismiss this application.

Calcutta Police Act (IV B. U. of 1866), ss. 3, 13 C—“Police Officer,” who is—Officer under suspension, whether Police Officer—Commissioner of Police, power of, to detain such officer in custody.

An Officer of the Calcutta Town Police when placed under suspension ceases to be a Police Officer, and the Commissioner of Police has no authority to order his detention in custody.

Criminal revision against the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 25th February 1919:

Mr. N. Sen (with him Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq and Babu Prabhat Chunder Dutt), for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. C. P. Gibbons, K. O., Advocate-General (with him Mr. Orr, Deputy Legal Remembrancer), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Advocate-General stating that he cannot support the order, we direct a fresh enquiry into this matter.

The learned Advocate-General very fairly states that he finds great difficulty in upholding the contention that a Police Officer in Calcutta, after suspension, continues to be a Police Officer. He also finds difficulty in supporting the contention that the circular relied upon is authorized by law. Having regard to the note made by the Commissioner of Police that Marsden had nothing to do with the case, the complainant withdraws his charge against him. Order is made to the effect that the case is only to proceed against the Deputy Commissioner, Rai P. C. Lahiri Bahadur, and Manik Lal Sadhu. We also understand from complainant's Counsel that he will consider whether he should proceed against Manik Lal Sadhu, having regard to the fact that he was merely an inferior Police Officer who was bound to carry out the orders of his superior.

The learned Advocate-General, on behalf of the Crown, says that he would advise that the man should be at once let out on bail as ordered by Mr. Keays, and upon that no order need now be made by us.

We see no reason why the case should not be tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. We leave it to him to try it himself or to make it over to some other Magistrate.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1960), ss. 420, 477—Valuable security—Document presented to Sub-Registrar by executant but taken back before registration and destroyed—Civil suit filed—Criminal trial, whether advisable.

The petitioner executed a kabala in favour of the complainant and presented it for registration, but took it back from the Registrar before registration on the pretext that he could not understand whether it was a mortgage or a kabala, and having thus obtained possession of the document tore it to pieces. The complainant preferred a complaint and also instituted a Civil suit for specific performance of the contract. The Sub-Registrar did not complain. On the contrary when asked by the trying Magistrate to report on the case he reported in favour of the petitioner:

Held, that having regard to the circumstances of the case it was inadvisable that a charge under section 420, or section 477, Indian Penal Code, should be enquired into by a Criminal Court.

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Hooghly, dated the 25th November 1918, modifying that of the Honorary Magistrate, Howrah, dated the 10th September 1918.

Babus Manmathanath Mukerjee and Nogendra Nath Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Babu Dasrathi Sanyal for Babu Atulya Charan Bose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT—In this case the petitioner was tried on a charge of cheating by Babu M. N. Haldar, Honorary Magistrate of Howrah, and was discharged under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It was alleged on behalf of the prosecution that the accused had executed a kabala in favour of the complainant and presented it for registration, but took it back from the Sub-Registrar before registration on the pretext that he could not understand whether it was a mortgage or a kabala, and having thus obtained possession of the document, he tore it to pieces.

The learned Honorary Magistrate discharged the accused finding that no consideration had passed and, therefore, the accused was justified in destroying the document.

The learned Sessions Judge has, however, set aside the order of discharge and directed a further enquiry into the case.

This Rule was obtained on behalf of the petitioner calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the order for further enquiry should not be set aside.

We have heard the learned Vakils on both sides and we are of opinion that in this case the prosecution should not be allowed to proceed. The learned Sessions Judge expresses no opinion on the question as to whether the consideration had passed or not. It is not said that the kabala was delivered to the purchaser, and if before it was delivered, it remained the property of the petitioner, the question arises whether it was a valuable security within the meaning of section 477, Indian Penal Code. As regards the charge of cheating, the person who was cheated was the Sub-Registrar himself and he does not complain. In fact when he was asked to report on the case by the Honorary Magistrate, he reported in favour of the petitioner. We are also informed that a civil suit has been filed by the complainant for specific performance of the contract. Having regard to these circumstances, we think it is inadvisable that a charge under section 420 or section 477 should be enquired into by a Criminal Court.

We, therefore, make this Rule absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20—Restitution of conjugal rights, suit for—Forum, proper—Jurisdiction—Residence, meaning of—Opportunity to respondent to resume relations, whether necessary.

In suits for restitution of conjugal rights jurisdiction is given either by the residence of the respondent within the jurisdiction of the Court, or by the fact that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. But residence within the meaning of section 20 of the Civil Procedure Code must not be merely temporary residence as that of a traveller, but actual permanent residence. [p 66, col. 1.]

Before a suit for restitution of conjugal rights is filed, it is essential that the respondent should be given an opportunity of a conciliatory character to resume conjugal relations. A demand threatening legal proceedings if not complied with is not sufficient [p. 66, col. 1.]

Mr. Barnabas, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Villa, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for restitution of conjugal rights by the wife against her husband. The parties were married in Rangoon on the 7th April 1916 according to Jewish rites in the Jewish synagogue. Petitioner states that after marriage she went with her husband to Calcutta for two months and then to Dacca. After some time petitioner went back to Calcutta with her parents-in-law for confinement and remained with them there while respondent remained at Dacca. Thereafter trouble arose with her parents-in-law, with the result that the respondent came down to Calcutta. Petitioner insulted her father-in-law in the presence of her husband and the parties discussed a divorce. This was agreed to, provided petitioner was taken for the divorce to Rangoon where her parents lived. Petitioner and respondent came to Rangoon. Petitioner went to live with her parents, and respondent went to a hotel. That evening he went to Mrs. Sassoon, petitioner's aunt, and informed her of the position of affairs. Petitioner and her father were sent for and an interview took place in Mrs. Sassoon's house at which respondent offered Rs. 500 for a divorce. This was refused. Subsequently he consulted his father by wire and then offered to pay the full amount of the dower agreed to at the time of marriage, viz., Rs. 3,555. This offer was refused, petitioner's father demanding Rs. 10,000, apparently because he thought respondent's father was a wealthy man. Negotiations for a divorce having fallen through, respondent tried to return to Dacca, but on his way to the steamer was served with a summons in the suit. The plaint was filed on the 30th October or seven days after the parties had come to Rangoon. I have no doubt the facts are as I have stated them above. Petitioner, her father and brother-in-law have given evidence, and all of them tell a different story. It is admitted that there is no reason why the brother-in-law should not speak the truth. I have no doubt that his version of the facts is a true one. The petitioner declares that she was guilty of no improper conduct towards her parents-in-law, but that they turned against her and eventually her husband turned against her. She says that her husband told her that he was going to take her to Australia, and start in business there, and that he brought her to Rangoon with the idea of obtaining a steamer for Penang. She declares that she never heard any suggestion of a divorce until the meeting on the night of their arrival in Rangoon. Her brother-in-law, however, states that the petitioner's mother had been to Calcutta to see her, and on her return said that there was trouble, and that probably there would be a divorce. I am unable to believe petitioner or her father, and am satisfied that there never was any idea of the parties going to Australia, yet the petitioner declares that her husband stated at the meeting the idea of going to Australia. The brother-in-law says that no mention was made of Australia, yet the petitioner declares that her husband stated at the meeting that the idea of going to Australia was only a bluff to get her to Rangoon in order that he might divorce her there. The respondent says the petitioner agreed to the divorce, provided he brought her to Rangoon where her parents lived, which is apparently in accordance with Jewish custom. That being so, the question arises whether this Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. The parties are not governed by the Indian Divorce Act, and the question of jurisdiction has to be decided in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. In suits for restitution of conjugal rights jurisdiction is given either by the residence of the respondent within the jurisdiction of the Court, or by the fact that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. It is urged that the respondent was residing in Rangoon while the suit was filed. But residence within the meaning of section 20 must not be merely temporary residence as that of a traveller, but the actual permanent residence where there is a permanent residence. Nusserwanji Pestonji Wadia v. Eleonora Wadia (1). Respondent was residing at Dacca. His presence in Rangoon was purely for the purpose of the divorce, and of an entirely temporary character, and does not give this Court jurisdiction. The cause of action in this case is the abandonment of the wife by the husband and his refusal to give her the benefit of his society and protection in his own house. There was no question of such abandonment in Calcutta seeing that the parties agreed to a divorce, and came to Rangoon only to effect it. Petitioner alleges that she refused to divorce on any terms and that she claimed her right to live with her husband. Her evidence is untrustworthy. She speaks of having sent him a letter which never reached him. She says she asked him to take her back in that letter, and then says she merely asked him for money, and then asked him to come and see her and her child. There was no demand, therefore, on the husband to take the wife back. The principles of English law in these matters are to be followed by the Courts in this country when the Indian Divorce Act applies; and in my opinion in suits for restitution of conjugal rights it is essential that opportunity should be given to the respondent before any suit is filed. In England that opportunity must not be merely in the form of a demand threatening legal proceedings if not complied with, but must be of a conciliatory character. However, in the present case there has been no such opportunity given, and this suit was undoubtedly hurried on merely to serve the respondent before he went back to his home. It is possible that a demand would result in the matter being amicably settled.

(1) 20 Ind. Cas. 492; 38 B. 125; 15 Bom. L. R. 593.

I must, therefore, dismiss the suit, which can be brought again after the proper formalities have been complied with, when it is to be hoped that the matter will be amicably settled. Under the circumstances there will be no order as to costs.

Suit dismissed.

Held, by the Full Bench (Oldfield, J., dissenting) that where an application to set aside a Court sale, made beyond the statutory period after confirmation of the sale, is admitted and is in part disallowed, the period of limitation for an application by the auction-purchaser to be placed in possession must be computed from the date the application to set aside the sale was disallowed, and not from the date of the order of confirmation passed before the application to set aside the sale was made. [p. 74, col. 2; p. 79, col. 1; p. 81, col. 1.]

Oldfield, J.—The existence of the cause of action for an application for delivery, to which Article 180 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies, is not suspended during the pendency of proceedings for setting aside the sale, for once time has commenced to run its running is not suspended. This appeal coming on for hearing on the 24th and 25th March 1919, upon perusing the petition of appeal and the orders of the lower Courts and the material papers in the case and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellants, and of Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondents, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 3rd April 1919, the Court (Oldfield and Seshagiri Aiyar, JJ.) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—Petitioner, whose legal representatives are the respondents, bought properties at Court auction in execution of his own decree on 25th March 1913 and the sale was confirmed on 26th April 1913. On 3rd January 1914, before the three years, within which he could apply for possession under Article 180, Schedule I, Limitation Act, had elapsed, an application for the setting aside of the sale was presented and was admitted out of due time on the ground of fraud. On it the sale was set aside as regards some items and sustained as regards others, the order to this effect being passed in the Court of first instance on 25th June 1915 and in the Appellate Court on 13th May 1916. The present petition for delivery was presented on 19th February 1917. On these facts the questions raised are whether that petition is in time and incidentally whether such a petition is sustainable in the circumstances with reference to the earlier or later order of confirmation.

The latter question arises on the argument, accepted by the lower Appellate Court, that the delivery asked for is to be based on the second order of confirmation and could not have been asked for until it had been passed and a fresh sale certificate had been drawn up. For the suggestion in the judgment under appeal that such a fresh certificate is necessary we have been shown no warrant. There is no reason for holding that delivery can be asked for or should be granted only of the whole property sold and not of particular items included in it. Whether or no the Court's last order included any explicit cancellation of the certificate as regards the items affected by it, this argument cannot be regarded as substantial, there being no reason why the original certificate should be treated as superseded so far as the items, of which the sale was sustained, were concerned and not as amended in conformity with the order in respect of the others. It is urged, however, more generally either that the admission of the application for cancellation of the sale deprived the previous confirmation of the finality, which enabled petitioner to ask for delivery in accordance with it or that in any case time did not run and petitioner was under no obligation to apply so long as the confirmation, which would be the basis of his petition, might possibly or probably be set aside.

In dealing with the first of these contentions it is to be observed that there is no question of suspension of petitioner's right to apply during any part of the period in question pending an appeal. For the application for cancellation of the sale was not an appeal, being made under Order XXI, rule 90, to a Court of first instance; and it is not suggested that the subsequent appeal related to the items, of which delivery is now claimed. There is no question of an explicit injunction or other direct obstacle to petitioner's obtaining relief. Reference has not been made to any provision of law as authorizing the view that a mere attack on an order can render it ineffective or suspend its efficacy or stop the running of time, which has once begun to run against the person who obtained it.

This is material, as entailing the failure of the first of the two contentions above referred. With reference to the second, although the conclusion proposed is the same, the principle relied on differs slightly. That principle is not that the validity of the order of confirmation is affected by the filing of the petition for its cancellation, but that the running of time for action on it is suspended directly. It is, to adopt the language used by my learned brother in Doraisami Padayachi v. Vaithilinga Padayachi (1), the suspension, not of the existence of the cause of action, but of the running of time. For this contention also no statutory basis has been alleged. The question is only of the effect of the authorities to be referred to.

(1) 41 Ind. Cas. 581; 33 M. L. J. 46.

MOTHU KORAKKI CHETTY v. MAHAMAD MADAR AMMAL.

In Somasundaram Pillay v. Vannilinga Pillay (C. M. A. 355 of 1915) Ayling, J., and my learned brother endorsed the principle that, "if circumstances exist which would render a suit or application infructuous, a party should not be compelled to institute it, until the impediment which stands in the way is removed," and in Secretary of State v. Raja Vadrevu Ranganyakama (Appeal Suits Nos. 113 and 402 of 1917) the decision of Abdur Rahim, J., which prevailed, seems to me to entail that, as I put the point in dispute, the running of time is suspended so long as any pending proceeding, in which any matter essential to the determination of the claim is in issue, remains undecided. The authorities now relied on are with one exception, Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2), referred to in my judgment in that case and one ground or another rejected as inapplicable to the facts then before us and as insufficient to support the general proposition then necessary for the appellant plaintiff's success. They in fact, as I understand the points actually decided in them, fall into three classes: those firstly in which the plaintiff was allowed the time occupied in seeking one remedy, usually specific performance of an agreement, before he sought another, for instance damages to which he ultimately discovered his right; those next (and Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) is one of them) in which his right to sue was suspended whilst he had or in good faith believed that he had secured what he claimed; and lastly those, if the decision in Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (3) is correct, in which an outstanding adjudication could have been pleaded against his claim. None of these classes accordingly, if the actual result of the cases comprised in them is regarded, covers the case before us. For here throughout the right of the petitioner to apply for delivery of the items, in respect of which he is applying, was known to be enforceable and to require enforcing; and there was no obstacle in the way of its being enforced in the shape of any actual collateral adjudication. There was in fact merely the possibility of one; and I do not think that the principle relied on covers or should be extended to cover such a case.

The difficulty, however, arises, not from the actual conclusions in these cases, but from the way, in which the reasons for those conclusions are stated. For, especially in Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) there is much to suggest that a general rule was being enunciated and that the intention was to hold generally in favour of the right of a plaintiff or applicant to defer institution of his proceedings, so long as any reasonable doubt existed regarding his position and the necessity for or possibility of proceedings being taken. It is not clear how that language or the principle underlying the judgments, in which it occurs, can be reconciled with the other interpretations of the Limitation Act, to which my learned brother has referred in the judgment, which I have had the advantage of reading; and I, therefore, agree to the reference proposed by him.

The question referred is:—

Whether the existence of the cause of action for an application for delivery, to which Article No. 180, Schedule I, Limitation Act, applies, is suspended during the pendency of proceedings for the setting aside of the sale?

SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—I agree that the question raised by my learned brother should be referred to the Full Bench. The sale in question was made in Court auction on the 25th of March 1913. It was confirmed on the 26th of April in the same year. An application to set aside the sale followed. The final order was on the 2nd of June 1915. It is in these terms: "In the result I set aside the sale so far as the interest of petitioners Nos. 1 to 3 in the properties sold is concerned and dismiss the petition so far as petitioners Nos. 4 and 5 are concerned." The present application is for delivery of the right, title and interest of the defendants against whom the application to set aside the sale was dismissed. The District Judge held that time began to run only from the 25th of June 1915. The question for consideration is whether he is right. The Article applicable is 180, and under it the starting point is the date on which the sale becomes absolute. There can be no doubt that this language in column 3 of the third schedule has been taken from Order XXI, rule 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The article is a new one. Under the old Code there were differences of opinion as to whether an application for delivery must be made only in execution or whether a suit can be instituted even though more than three years had elapsed from the date of the confirmation of the sale. The new article has been introduced with a view to remove these doubts. The suggestion made by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the application may be brought under Article 181 should be rejected. His contention that as in 1915 the sale was partly confirmed and partly set aside, Article 180 is not in terms applicable, is not well founded. It is true there are no provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure for a second confirmation either partially or wholly when the application to set aside a sale succeeds or fails. I do not think that is a good reason for applying the residuary article where there is one which in terms applies to the applications made.

(1) 33 C. 775 (P. C.); 23 L. A. 45; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 1.

Mr. Sitarama Rao then argued that although in terms the sale was confirmed and made absolute on the 26th of April 1913, the confirmation must be deemed to have been suspended until the 25th of June 1915, when the final order on the application to set aside the sale was made. The strongest case that was quoted by him is Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2). That decision was given with reference to Article 12 of the Limitation Act. The short facts were that a sale was confirmed by the Collector in 1882 and was upheld in appeal by the Commissioner. In 1884, the Revenue Board set aside both these orders. On an application for review the Board discharged its own order in 1886. The suit was brought in 1887, within a year of the last order of the Board of Revenue but more than a year after the order confirming the sale. The Judicial Committee held that the suit was in time. By the language of Article 12 time begins to run from the date when the sale is confirmed. The Judicial Committee at page 785 say: "Their Lordships are of opinion that there was no final, conclusive and definitive order confirming the sale, while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was in litigation, or until the order of the Commissioner of the 25th January 1884 became definitive and operative by the final judgment of the Board of Revenue on the 21st August 1886, or (in other words) that for the purpose of the Law of Limitation there was no final or definite confirmation of the sale until that date." They further on say: "It cannot be said in the opinion of their Lordships, when the parties were litigating before the Revenue Courts as to whether the sale should be confirmed or not, because that was the object of the litigation before the Revenue Courts, that the sale had become either final or conclusive." The same language might not be inaptly employed in the present case. So long as the judgment-debtors or any of them disputed the finality of the sale by seeking to set it aside, it may be said that there was no final or conclusive sale or, to use the language of Lord Davay, "that for the purpose of the Law of Limitation the sale had not become absolute" until the 25th of June 1915. In Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) it was pointed out that the Board of Revenue acted without jurisdiction in interfering with the order of the Commissioner. Still the Judicial Committee held that these infructuous proceedings before the Board had the effect of suspending the operation of the confirmation of the sale. The view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Janak Prosad v. Net Ram (4) also supports the respondent. Sabapathy Chetty v. Rengappa Naicken (5) is also in his favour.

As against these decisions it must be said that the language of the Limitation Act is so explicit that it is not open to us to import considerations like those

(4) 22 Ind. Cas. 497.

(5) 13 M. L. J. 225; 26 M. 495.

MUTHU KORAKKI CHETTY v. MAHAMAD MADAR AMMAL.

which influenced the Judicial Committee into the present case. Other decisions of the Privy Council containing similar observations were quoted before us and I shall now refer to them. In Musammot Ranees Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (6), which was a case in which a revenue sale was set aside by the Collector, the landlord sued to recover arrears of revenue within three years of the setting aside of the sale. It was contended that the claim for arrears was barred by limitation, as the suit was brought more than three years after the rent became due. Their Lordships say: "It seems to their Lordships to be perfectly clear, that the cause of action accrued at the time at which, the sale having been set aside, the obligation to pay this sum of money revived." They further on say: "That, upon the setting aside of this sale, and the restoration of the parties to possession, they took back the estate, subject to the obligation to pay the rent; and that the particular arrears of rent claimed in this action must be taken to have become due in the year in which that restoration to possession took place." This decision does not by itself lend support to the contention of the respondent. But this has been relied on in very many subsequent cases as indicating the view of the Judicial Committee that there can be a suspension of a cause of action during the period when it would be infructuous to sue on the original cause of action. The next Privy Council case relied on was Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7). Some general observations in that judgment are often quoted at the Bar. Their Lordships said: "It would be an inconvenient state of the law if it were found necessary for a man to institute a perfectly vain litigation under peril of losing his property if he does not. And it would be a lamentable state of the law if it were found that a debtor who for years has been insisting that his creditor shall take payment in any particular mode can, when it is decided that he cannot enforce that mode, turn round and say that the lapse of time has relieved him from paying at all." In a later case in Nritya-moni Dassi v. Lakhan Ohunder Sen (8) their Lordships expressed their concurrence with the view taken in Lakhan Ohunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9). When the Calcutta decision is examined, it will be found that the learned Judges introduced a theory of suspension of limitation which is not warranted either by sections 14 or 15 of the Limitation Act. Sitting with Ayling, J., I had to consider the applicability of these cases in Somasundaram Pillay v. Vannilinga Pillay, C. M. A. No. 355 of 1915. Sitting with the learned Chief Justice a similar question was considered in Doraisami Padayachi v. Vaithilinga Padayachi (1). Speaking for myself I must say that I always felt with reference to these Privy Council decisions, there is as much to be said against my view as in favour of it. The dicta of the Judicial Committee in the above cases may be said to conflict to some extent with the view of the Board in Soni Ram v. Kunhaiya Lal (10) and in Rani Kuar Mani Singh Mandhata v. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad (11). In the latter case their Lordships suggest that no suspension or extension of limitation is allowable unless the same is specifically provided in the Limitation Act. In Soni Ram v. Kunhaiya Lal (10) the right of a mortgagor to redeem became inoperative for a time owing to the fusion of rights as mortgagor and as purchaser. After the dissolution of this dual capacity, he applied to redeem the property and claimed to deduct the time during which the fusion subsisted. Sir John Edge in delivering the judgment of the Board stated: "There is nothing in Act XV of 1877 which would justify this Board in holding that, once that period of limitation had begun to run in this case, it could be suspended. Their Lordships consider that if they were to hold that, by reason of the fusion of interests between 1833 and 1898, the period of limitation was suspended, they would be deciding contrary to the express enactment of that section that 'when once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it.' This language can equally be well applied to the present case. Once time began to run under Article 180 on the sale becoming absolute, the subsequent inability consequent on the application to set aside the sale cannot stop the limitation which had already begun to run. Apart from other cases I think there is a conflict between Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) and Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (10), both of which are decisions of the Judicial Committee. I, therefore, agree that the question should be referred for the decision to the Full Bench.

This appeal came on for hearing on the 4th and 5th September 1919, in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondent.—Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) is conclusive on the point under reference. There is no final and definite order confirming the sale when proceedings under Order XXI, rule 90, are pending, even if such proceedings were ultra vires of the Court, provided only that the parties act in good faith. It is either that time did not run at all or that there is a suspension and revival of the cause of action. Musammatt Ranees Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (6) explained in Odhyaya Pershad v. Mahadeo Dutt (12) and Huro Pershad Roy v. Goral Das Dutt (13). In Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7) the question came to be considered as one of failure of consideration giving rise to a fresh cause of action. The same view is taken in Udit Narain Misr v. Muhammad Minnatulla (14), Amma Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (15), Rajagopalan v. Kasivasi Somasundaram Thambiran (16). In Dalip Singh v. Kundan Lal (17) the principle of English law that time would be suspended during the time that there is a fusion of interests, was not accepted as being inapplicable. Time was deducted in Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (8) on the ground that the prior litigation was found to be necessary.

The principle in Musammatt Ranees Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (6) has been applied in Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9) and upheld on appeal in Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (8). See also Surjiram Marwari v. Berhamdeo Persad (19), Janak Prosad v. Net Ram (4), Rup Ohand v. Mukunda Mahadev (20), Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (21) went upon the facts, see also Venugopal Mudali v. Venkatasubbiah Chetty (22).

Article 180 omits mentioning the Civil Procedure Code to provide for any contingency. Section 14 of the Limitation Act applies only to a case of suspension. If in the present case the time is suspended, section 14 will apply; if the cause of action is fresh, section 14 has no application.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Aiyangar, for the Appellant.—The question referred is whether time is suspended and, therefore, the cases cited do not help the solution of it. In considering the question, section 14 of the Limitation Act provides for such cases. But the present case does not fall within its scope. For clause (2) applies only where time is lost by an infructuous application which the Court finds itself unable to entertain. That is not the present case. Vidhaya Theertha Swamigal v. Venkatarama Iyer (23).

subsequently. See Hukum Ohand Boid v. Pirthichand Lal Ohowdhury (24). Section 14 provides for the exclusion of time and not for its suspension. See also Syud Abdool Juleel v. Kanchun Dossee (25). A fresh cause of action is not possible, for the sale in the present case had been confirmed and time had started. Under the law the sale was unimpeachable. Hence there was a final and definitive order confirming the sale. Hence Baijnath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) will not help the question. A fresh cause of action is possible only when possession is refused. Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (26), see also Kaliba Mavulvija v. Saran Bivi Saila Ammal (27). Even in Nrityamoni Dass v. Lakhan Ohunder Sen (8) it was conceded that time would run from the time that an effective adjudication is made. See also Rani Kuar Mani Singh Mandhata v. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad (11).

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The question referred to the Full Bench arises under Article 180 of the Limitation Act.

A person, who purchased certain properties at a Court auction in execution of his own decree on the 25th of March 1913, applied for delivery of possession on the 19th of February 1917. An order confirming the sale was made on the 26th of April 1913, but on the 3rd of January 1914, that is more than 30 days afterwards, an application was made on behalf of the judgment-debtor for the setting aside of the sale. That application was disposed of by the Court of first instance on the 25th of June 1915, the Court setting aside the sale in respect of some of the items and upholding it as regards the other items. That order was appealed from and the Appellate Court dismissed the appeal on the 13th of May 1916.

It will thus be seen that the application for delivery of possession of the property would be barred under Article 180 if the time of 3 years allowed by the second column be reckoned from the 26th of April 1913, when the sale was confirmed under rule 92 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, no application for setting aside the sale having been made by that time; but it would be within time if the period of limitation commenced on the 25th of June 1915, the date of the order adjudicating upon the application made under rule 90 to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity or fraud, by which the sale as regards some of the items was set aside and the sale as regards the other items was upheld.

There can be no doubt that Article 180 applies to cases where the sale is confirmed and thereupon becomes absolute under the provisions of rule 92. That rule contemplates that such an order is not to be made until the application to set aside the sale under rule 89 or 90 or 91, if any, has been disposed of and disallowed. The question under reference would hardly arise in cases where the application to set aside the sale is made in the ordinary way within the period of 30 days under Article 166. The difficulty has evidently arisen because, no application to set aside the sale having been made within 30 days, the Court had in the usual course made the order confirming the sale.

The question then is, when the Court entertains an application to set aside the sale after the order confirming the sale has been made but before the period of 3 years allowed to the purchaser for applying for delivery of possession has expired, whether time must be reckoned against the applicant from the date of the order of confirmation of sale, or whether that order should be treated as not having the effect of making the sale absolute within the meaning of Article 180 but that the sale should be deemed to have so become absolute from the date when the application for setting it aside was disposed of. I do not think the fact that the sale was set aside in respect of some of the items included therein and upheld as regards the other items should make any difference as to the application of Article 180, for we are not concerned with the properties the sale of which has been set aside and as regards the rest possession of which alone is sought, the point for decision is whether the entertainment of the application to set aside the sale had or had not the effect of preventing the sale becoming absolute within the intendment of Article 180. Even without the help of the Privy Council ruling which I shall presently notice, I should answer that, in the given circumstances, the sale did not become absolute until the petition made to set it aside had been disallowed. Rule 92 has primarily, in contemplation cases where the application to set aside the sale is made within the limit of 30 days allowed by the law, so that any order confirming the sale would be ordinarily made after the disposal of such applications. But if the Court in this case was justified—and I take it that it was—in entertaining the application to set aside the sale after it had made the order confirming the same, can it be said that, whatever be the result of the application, the order confirming the sale remained effective so as to make the sale absolute from the date on which it was drawn up? To my mind, obviously not. The effect of entertainment of the application to set aside the sale after the order of confirmation must, having regard to the intention of the Legislature as disclosed in this rule and quite apart from any general theory in such connections, be to render the order ineffective so as to make the sale absolute. If we were to proceed upon an absolutely literal interpretation of the language of rule 92 without paying due regard to the intention of the Legislature, this case would have to be treated as lying outside that rule, for it requires that the order of confirmation should be made after the disposal of any application to set aside the sale. If so treated, there would be no difficulty in the application of Article 180. Whether it is the practice to issue a second certificate on the disposal of such an application or not cannot, to my mind, affect the application of Article 180; but I should suggest that a fresh certificate ought to be issued, if not in all cases, at least in those cases where the sale is only partly upheld as the result of an application made to set it aside after the passing of the order confirming the sale.

Upon a proper interpretation, therefore, of Article 180 read with rule 92 of Order XXI, Civil Procedure Code, I should hold that, where an application is made for delivery of possession of property sold in execution of a decree, the sale does not become absolute within the meaning of the third column of Article 180 until the application made to set aside the sale under rule 89 or 90 or 91 has been disallowed and the sale upheld, although an order confirming the sale had been passed before the application to set aside the sale was made. The question referred to the Full Bench, I may mention, is framed in the form as it is, apparently with a view to ascertain the scope and effect of certain rulings of the Judicial Committee which have latterly been the subject of much discussion in this Court. But I do not feel myself bound by the frame of the question to state my conclusion as to the application of the Article 180 to circumstances such as arose in this case with reference only to the mode of computation mentioned in the question.

Of the Privy Council rulings, the one that has the closest application to the facts of this case is that of Bainath Sahai v. Ramgout Singh (?). There, stating shortly the effect of the judgment of the Judicial Committee as given in the head note, the Board of Revenue of Bengal discharged an order of the Commissioner, dated January 25th, 1884, which had confirmed a sale by the Collector in 1882, but afterwards on August 21st, 1886, discharged its own order and revived that of the Commissioner. It was held that the confirmation of sale dated only from the last order of August 21st, 1886, within the meaning of Article 12 of Act XV of 1877, which provides one year for a suit to set aside a sale for arrears of Government revenue, or for any demand recoverable as such arrears, from the date on which the sale is confirmed, or would otherwise have become final and conclusive had no such suit been brought. At page 785 their Lordships say that they did not base their decision on the provision of section 14 of the Limitation Act, which provides for the exclusion of the time of proceeding bona fide in a Court without jurisdiction, but because they were of opinion "that there was no final, conclusive and definitive order confirming the sale, while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was in litigation, or until the order of the Commissioner of the 25th

January 1884 became definitive and operative by the final judgment of the Board of Revenue on the 21st August 1886, or (in other words) that for the purpose of the law of limitation there was no final or definitive confirmation of the sale until that date."

I do not think that much light would be obtained on the present question by discussing in detail the other rulings of the Privy Council cited before us, a summary of which is set out in the Order of Reference and which I also had the occasion to discuss previously in Secretary of State v. Raja Vadrevu Ranganayakama, Appeals Nos. 113 and 402 of 1917. No doubt there are general observations in some of the cases, such as Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7), where it is stated: "It would be an inconvenient state of the law if it were found necessary for a man to institute a perfectly vain litigation under peril of losing his property if he does not", or that the right of plaintiff to bring an action to recover certain property would be suspended because of certain intermediate litigation [see Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9) and Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (8)] in which his title to the property happened to be under investigation. But it is hardly to be inferred from such observations that the Privy Council intended to lay down any rule or rules for exclusion of time other than those mentioned in various sections of the Limitation Act, such as 12, 14, etc. Or that when time has once begun to run, it will be suspended otherwise than according to the provisions of section 9 or any other similar provision of the Limitation Act itself. In Mussumat Raneer Surno Moyee v. Shooshi Mokhee Burmonia (6) their Lordships had to determine when the cause of action accrued with reference to section 32 of Act X of 1859, whether at the end of each Fasli year when the rent became due or on the date of the decree reversing the auction sale of the Putnee Talook belonging to the plaintiff Zamindar, and they decided in favour of the date of the decree reversing the auction sale. I do not see that any general principle of interpretation or application of the Limitation Act can be deduced from this decision which would be of any guidance in the present case. In Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7) in a suit for specific performance for sale of land, it was ruled that the plaintiff's cause of action for recovering the debt, which was the consideration for the agreement for sale which failed, arose on the date the decree refusing specific performance was passed, because a new obligation was imposed on the defendant by that decree. The cases in Udit Narain Misr v. Muhammad Minnatulla (14) and Jamna Das v. Najm-un-nissa Bibi (28) were also of a similar nature. And in all these cases the article under consideration was No. 97 of Act of 1877, which was applicable to suits for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards failed. In Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (18) the Judicial Committee held that until the Puttah was settled under the special provision of the Local Act VIII of 1865, time did not run, but that limitation was to be computed only from the date of the final decree determining the rent. I must, however, observe that it would almost look that in my judgment in Secretary of State v. Raja Vadrevu Ranganayakama, Appeals Nos. 113 and 402 of 1917, I tried to deduce from these cases a principle of general and unlimited application to the effect that where the rights of the parties have been subjected to determination by the Court, it is from the date of the determination of such rights that limitation should be computed. But on further consideration I am persuaded that any such deduction would be unjustified, if it be meant thereby to introduce a rule of exclusion or suspension of time covering a larger ground than that traversed by sections 12, 14, 15, 16, 19 and other similar provisions of the Limitation Act. I need hardly say that I do not desire to express any opinion on the question of limitation involved in the Secretary of State v. Raja Vadrevu Ranganayakama, Appeals Nos. 113 and 402 of 1917, as a Letters Patent Appeal is now pending from my judgment. But as I have already suggested, it is not necessary to attempt to deduce any rule of general application in order to answer the question which arises in this case and that the answer, as I have stated, should be that time should be computed from the date of the order disallowing the petition to set aside the sale, and not from the date of confirmation passed before the application to set aside the sale was made.

OLDFIELD, J.—The question I propose to

(28) 28 A. 466; 3 A. L. J. 228; [A. W. N. (1906) 89.

MUTHU KORAKKI CHEETIV v. MAHAMAD MAPAR AMMAL.

answer is that which has been referred and not any other, which may appear to afford a ground of disposal of the appeal, in which the reference has been made.

That question is whether the existence of the cause of action for an application for delivery is suspended during the pendency of proceedings for the setting aside of the sale, and I do not understand it as raising the distinct question whether the order of confirmation, which had been passed in the case before the referring Judges, had been deprived of the finality which it originally possessed. The distinction is clearly marked in my referring order by the reference to the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., in Doraisami Padayachi v. Vaithilinga Padayachi (1) and I propose to adhere to it.

The conflict we have to resolve is between, on the one hand, the unrestricted language of sections 3 and 9, Limitation Act, which has more than once, as the referring order of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., shows, been regarded as subject only to the exceptions allowed by some specific provision of law, and on the other certain decisions of the Judicial Committee and the language used in them, which are relied on as involving the existence of an equitable power to relax the provisions of the Act in such cases as the one before us.

It is unnecessary to extract the sections of the Act or to insist on their unrestricted character except by pointing out, what will be material in the sequel, that section 3 is affected by section 14 in the case of an application, only when the applicant has been prosecuting, not when, as in the case under reference, he has been on his defence, in another proceeding. That is involved by the reference in section 14 to prosecution in good faith, by the terms of explanation II and by the absence of any reason for supposing that a change in the law was intended when the clear language in the corresponding section of the former Act XV of 1877 was abandoned. Subject, however, to this, sections 3 and 9 are comprehensive. In order to evade them, reliance has been placed on decisions of the Judicial Committee, the effect of which was stated in the recent judgment in Somasundaram Pillay v. Vannilinga Pillay, O. M. A. No. 355 of 1915, to which Seshagiri Aiyar, J., was a party, as being that "if circumstances exist, which would render a suit or application infructuous, a party should not be compelled to institute it, until the impediment in the way is removed." It is for us to decide whether this general principle can be deduced from the cases relied on.

Those cases have been referred to in my order of reference as falling into three classes; and I adhere to that classification in supporting the conclusion, which the fuller argument we have now heard in my opinion entails, that the proceedings in each case were really regarded as in time with reference, not to any extension of the period available for taking them, but to the adoption of a starting point for limitation, which was discovered, either, where none had been available before or in supersession of one already in existence. This is, if I understand the opinion to be given by Seshagiri Aiyar, J., correctly, in accordance with the view which he would take, although I should respectfully describe it as putting a more accurate, not a more liberal, construction on column 3 of the schedule.

Thus in the first class of cases referred to, those in which the plaintiff, after claiming one remedy in good faith, but unsuccessfully, sought another to which his right was ascertained in the previous proceedings, the decision in Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7) was based statedly on the fact that from the date, on which an agreement to convey property in satisfaction of a debt was held unenforceable, a new liability for money paid on a consideration which failed was imposed on the debtor in supersession of his liability under the agreement or for the debt; and the dictum relied on here, "It would be an inconvenient state of the law if it were found necessary for a man to institute a perfectly vain litigation on pain of losing his property" can be fairly applied, as stating not any general principle, but merely an argumentum ab inconvenienti in connection with the reference immediately preceding it to the period during which the decree of the Court of first instance upholding the agreement was in force. This is in fact the explanation of the decision, which was given in Jamna Das v. Najm-un nissa Bibi (23) and approved by the Judicial Committee in Udit Narain Misra v. Muhammad Minnatulla (14) and Amra Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (15).

MUTHU KORAKKI CHETTY v. MAHAMAD MADAR AMMAL.

The next class of cases comprised those in which the plaintiff, having obtained all he wanted in previous proceedings, had, when those proceedings were set aside, to take fresh ones in connection with which limitation was pleaded; and the decisions in his favour are easily intelligible with reference to the date of his deprivation of the relief he had secured. Thus in Musammatt Raneesurno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (6) the plaintiff's claim having, as the committee pointed out, once been satisfied by the sale, which was afterwards set aside, it was only when it ceased to be satisfied that the cause of action afterwards sued on became available; and, although Sir R. Collier in Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Das Dutt (15) referred to this case, as establishing an exception to the operation of the Statute, and in explaining it spoke of the "period of time in which the Statute might not run," he described the exception as "rather apparent than real" and the whole tenor of his judgment was consistent with the view I am taking. Another case in this class, Lakhun Chander Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9), calls for notice, because there is no doubt that the judgments in it contain language, in which a suspension of the running of time is referred to. The facts, however, need cause no difficulty. For they were that certain defendants in a suit for possession and account in respect of a share, from which the plaintiffs alleged dispossession, succeeded in obtaining a decree for ascertainment of their own share; and the suit for such ascertainment, which they had to bring when the decree in their favour was set aside, was held to be in time, as it might be consistently with the principle under discussion, on the ground that their cause of action arose, only when they were deprived of the relief they had once obtained. In the High Court, however, although the judgment mentions the inability of these parties, so long as the decree in their favour subsisted, "to institute a fresh suit for the object, which had been successfully attained," their case is described as having been that their rights were suspended; and Prannath Roy Chowdry v. Rookea Begum (29) and the observation of Lord Eldon in Pulteney v. Warren (30) are referred to, the former dealing with the existence of sufficient cause within the meaning of Bengal Regulation III of 1873, section 14, and the latter with the English principle reproduced in our section 15 (1). The Judicial Committee also, in shortly approving the High Court's decision, referred to the suspension of limitation and the deduction of the period spent in the previous limitation. The High Court, however, had relied on Musammatt Raneesurno Moyee v. Shooshee Mokhee Burmonia (6) and the Judicial Committee had also referred to the existence of an effective decree, which was capable of being enforced until set aside; and in these circumstances these judgments indicate only that, although the existence of alternative grounds for their conclusions was present to the minds of the Courts concerned, it was not thought worth while to maintain the distinction between them for the purpose in hand. In the last case of this kind to which I need refer, Bajinath Suhai v. Ramgut Singh (2), the ground of decision is clearly not any suspension of the right to sue. For the judgment statedly expresses no opinion on the applicability of section 14 of the Act and is based on the absence of any sale, which the plaintiff could have sued to have set aside, until the cancellation order obtained by him in good faith had been displaced.

In the remaining classes of cases the plaintiff's claim depended on the principle stated in the judgment of Macpherson, J., in Jagesh Ohunder Dutt v. Kali Ohurn Dutt (3) as deducible from Shama Purshad Roy Chowdry v. Huro Purshad Roy Chowdry (31), that on the reversal of the main decree, which was the basis of subsequent decrees, the latter are superseded and a suit lies to recover what has been wrongfully paid under them. This principle is of course not one of limitation and its exact scope may come under discussion in another case now pending, to which reference is made in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. But Jagesh Ohunder Dutt v. Kali Ohurn Dutt (3) is material at present, because consistently with it, when the limitation applicable to the suit it authorises was considered in Kalichurn (30) (1801) 6 Ves. 73 at p. 93; 31 E. MUTHU KORAKKI CHETTY v. MAHAMAD MADAR AMMAL.

Dutt v. Jogesh Chunder Dutt (32) it was held that time ran from the date of the superseding judgment under Article 120, not from the erroneous receipt of the payment under Article 62, and no provision relating to suspension was relied on. The decision in Narayana v. Narayana (33) proceeded on similar grounds; and both authorities exemplified the conclusion reached in connection with the first class of cases already dealt with, that an accurate application of the third column of Schedule I, rather than reliance on suspension of the running of time, is the means by which apparent hardship to plaintiffs should be avoided.

In the foregoing representative instances from each of the classes of cases referred to in argument have been dealt with: and the result is that none supports the general equitable principle, for which the respondents before us contend. It has been pointed out that section 14 of the Limitation Act is inapplicable to the case submitted to us and no other positive provision has been relied on. I would, therefore, answer the question referred in the negative, that in the circumstances stated, if time has begun to run, its running is not suspended.

SADASIVA AYYAR, J.—The question referred to the Full Bench is whether the existence of the cause of action for an application for delivery to which Article 180 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act applies, is suspended during the pendency of the proceedings for the setting aside of the sale.

The relevant dates are as follows:—

(a) the Court auction sale took place in March 1913;

(b) the sale was confirmed on the 26th April 1913;

(c) application to set aside the sale was made on the 3rd January 1914;

(d) the sale was set aside as regards the interests of some of the judgment-debtors, and it was upheld as regards the others on 25th June 1915;

(e) the application for possession of the interests of the judgment-debtors the sale of whose interests was finally confirmed on 25th June 1915 was made on 19th February 1917.

If the time between 3rd January 1914

(when the application to set aside the whole sale was made) and 25th June 1915 (when the final order confirming part of the sale was made) is deducted, then the application of 19th February 1917 is within the period of three years from the date when the sale became absolute, which is the date mentioned in column 3 of Article 180.

The matter in controversy was argued in two aspects on behalf of the decree-holder-purchaser (1) that even if the cause of action for the application for possession as made arose when the sale of the interests of all the judgment-debtors was confirmed on 26th April 1913; in other words, that even if the application for possession dated 19th February 1917 is based on the cause of action for possession of the entire interests which arose on 26th April 1913, (the date when the first order of confirmation was made); to put it again differently, even if the time of three years began to run from 26th April 1913 itself, notwithstanding that the application was for possession of a fraction of the interests sold on that date, the running of time was suspended between 3rd January 1914 and 25th June 1915, (2) that a new cause of action arose on 25th June 1915 when the final order confirming the sale of the interests of some only of the judgment-debtors was made and that the time for calculation of the period of limitation for the application of 19th February 1917 arose only on 25th June 1915.

Section 9 of the Limitation Act says: "When once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it." Though the section, in terms, relates only to a suit and not to an application, in Jivraj v. Babari (34), Bhagwant Ramchandra v. Kaji Mahamad Abas (35) the words "to sue" have been taken as including "to apply in execution." Further the Court auction-purchaser who has made the application for possession can hardly be said to rely on any "subsequent disability or inability," (that is, subsequent to the date of sale), to make the application, as "disability" and "inability to sue" are not the same as "inconvenience" or "fatality" of suing—one of the two branches of his contention is that his right to apply for possession of those interests whose sale was finally confirmed, arose only on the date of that final confirmation and that as the original confirmation of 1913 was modified by the final confirmation of 25th June 1915, he obtained a new cause of action for making the application in conformity with that final order. In Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a suit for setting aside a sale made on the 25th September 1882 by the District Collector and confirmed by the Commissioner on 25th January 1884, though brought in July 1887 (more than one year from the date of such confirmation), was not barred by Article 12 of Act 15 of 1877, because the Board of Revenue, whether with or without jurisdiction, had set aside the Commissioner's order, though it afterwards discharged its own order on 21st August 1886. Their Lordships held that limitation for the suit commenced only from the final order of the Board dated 21st August 1886, because there was no "conclusive and definitive order" confirming the sale while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was under litigation, and until the order of the Commissioner on the 25th January 1884 became definitive and operative by the final judgment of the Board of Revenue on 21st August 1886; in other words, that for the purposes of the law of limitation, there was no final or definitive confirmation of the sale until that date. Their Lordships do not rely upon section 14 of the Limitation Act, which relates to the exclusion of time during which proceedings in Court without jurisdiction are being prosecuted; but put it on the broad ground that the sale itself became "confirmed" within the meaning of the expression in the third column of Article 12 of the Limitation Act only on the date when the proceedings closed before the Board of Revenue, that is, in August 1886, though there had been a confirmation by the Commissioner in 1884 itself. I think the present case is a stronger case for the purchaser than the case reported as Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2). Whereas Article 12 uses the expression "when the sale is confirmed," Article 180 uses the expression "when the sale becomes absolute." If, on an application made to set aside the sale, an order setting aside the sale in part is passed (as it has been passed in this case), the sale as made cannot be said to have become "absolute," though a formal confirmation after the expiry of 30 days had taken place. Further, whereas in Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) the Commissioner's confirmation order of 1884 was ultimately upheld by the final order of the Board of Revenue in 1886, the confirmation order of 1913 in this case was modified ultimately by the final order of 1915. I think the principle underlying the decision of their Lordships both in Musammatt Raneesurno Moyee v. Shooshee Mothee Burmonia (6) and Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) might be invoked in favour of the applicant in this case. That principle (as I understand it) is that whenever proceedings are being conducted between the parties bona fide in order to have their mutual rights and obligations in respect of a matter finally settled, the cause of action for an application or for a suit, the relief claimable wherein follows naturally on the result of such proceedings, should be held to arise only on the date when those proceedings finally settle such rights and liabilities. (The case where the proceedings are by way of appeal is specially provided for by Statute law and the decisions based on those special provisions are irrelevant and merely confuse the mind in its analysis of the relevant precedents.)

I shall refer to only one more authority. In Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Ohunder Sen (5) their Lordships of the Privy Council confirmed the Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lakhan Ohunder Sen v. Madhu Sudan Sen (9). The judgment of their Lordships on the question of law involved begins by saying, "Their Lordships concur generally with the reasons given by the Appellate Court for overruling the plea of limitation". In the judgment in Lakhan Ohunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9) the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court (the Appellate Court) not only do not rely upon section 14 of the Limitation Act, but expressly say: "We feel grave doubt whether the case falls within that section." But they rely upon the principle of the Privy Council decision in Musammatt Raneesurno Moyee v. Shooshee Mothee Burmonia (6) and hold that the right of the plaintiffs to bring an action to recover the property was suspended between the 20th of April 1903 and the 22nd of February 1904, because on the 20th April 1903, they had, as defendants, in a former suit, obtained a decree for the same relief as was claimed in their present action which decree, however, was reversed (on the appeal filed by the plaintiffs of that suit) on 22nd April 1904. Thus the suspension was not by reason of section 14 of the Limitation Act but by reason of the principle that a person is not bound to bring an unnecessary suit or to make futile and unnecessary applications during the course of other litigation proceedings in which he and his opponent had been bona fide engaged for the ascertainment and settlement of the same rights. The rule of law derivable from the decisions of their Lordships seems to have thus two applications according to circumstances: (a) creating a fresh cause of action under some circumstances (b) suspending the running of time in other circumstances. In Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9), affirmed by the Privy Council in Nritamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (8), the "suspension" principle was applied in the case of a suit also. Mr. Rustomji in his book on Limitation published in 1915 [after Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9) and before Nritamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (8)] remarks as follows at page 41 under section 91 about the decision in Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9):—"It is difficult to see under what provision of the Limitation Act, the Court held that there was a suspension of the right of suit." But as their Lordships of the Privy Council have confirmed Lakhan Chunder Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (9) approving generally the ratio of its decision, we must hold that notwithstanding section 9 of the Limitation Act, there are exceptional cases where such suspension, even as regards the running of time on the cause of action for a suit, can take place. I think that, in either aspect (I am myself inclined to think that in the present case, a new cause of action for this special application for possession of the interests in respect of which alone the sale was finally confirmed arose in 1915), the application for possession in 1917 in this case is not barred by limitation.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I had to consider the Privy Council decisions quoted before us on a number of occasions. I was, therefore, at first disinclined to write a separate judgment in this case. But as in a case depending upon this judgment and which was posted before Sadasiva Aiyar and Burn, JJ., and myself the subject-matter is of a value which will enable the parties to go before the Privy Council, and as I think that some of my observations in the previous judgments have been expressed more broadly than they need have been, I have resolved to give expression to my views on the present occasion. By common consent of both parties, notwithstanding the somewhat limited scope of the question referred, arguments were addressed to ascertain the exact scope of the pronouncements of the Judicial Committee on the point, whether in addition to the exceptions enumerated in the Limitation Act it is open to Courts to import a new principle of equity regarding the articles in the First Schedule to that Act.

Mr. Sita Rama Rao contended that the decision in the case which led to the reference is governed by Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2). In my opinion this contention is right. But I base that conclusion not on the ground that there is a general principle of equity apart from the Statute, but because in the present case, the construction to be placed on the third column of Article 180 of the First Schedule is concluded by that decision.

It was suggested in the course of the argument that the decisions of the Judicial Committee on this subject are not reconcilable with each other. After giving my best consideration to this argument, I do not think that this argument is well founded. Broadly speaking, the decisions of the Board fall under two heads. Under the first head come Musammatt Ramee Surno Moyee v. Shooshee Mckhee Burmonia (6), Bassu Kuar v. Dhum Singh (7), Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2), Rangayya Appa Rao v. Bobba Sriramulu (18), Amma Bibi v. Udit Narain Misra (15) and Nritamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chunder Sen (8). Under the second Huro Pershad Roy v. Gopal Das Dutt (13), Soni Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (10) and Rani Kuar Mani Singh Manthata v. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad (11). It was argued, not without some plausibility, that the first class of cases recognises the doctrine that where a party in whose favour a cause of action has arisen cannot usefully pursue a remedy at the time, his right of action is postponed to a subsequent date. It was next argued that the second class of cases takes a too literal view of the provisions of the Act, and ignores the above principle of equity. This ingenious suggestion of a conflict between law and equity is not borne out by a close examination of the authorities.

In the cases coming under the second head the Judicial Committee have laid down that there can be no saving of limitation apart from the provisions of the Limitation Act. They have drawn attention to sections 9 and 14 of the Act and have held that exemptions not covered by these and the other sections should not be imported by Courts, to relieve a party from the bar of limitation. I do not think in the first class of cases this principle is overlooked. What has been done is to put a liberal (rather in the language of Oldfield, J., an accurate) construction on the somewhat loosely expressed words in column 3 of the First Schedule. The sections have been more clearly worded than the third column of the First Schedule. In a case decided by five Judges of this Court to which I was a party, almost every one of us pointed this out with reference to Article 134 of the Limitation Act. There are other instances of a similar kind. The Judicial Committee have, therefore, placed a liberal construction upon the words in the third column to the schedule. Let us take for example Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) and the present case. In Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) the party through no fault of his found himself in this unfortunate position. The only authority which could confirm the revenue sale was the Commissioner; no appeal is allowed from his decision. But an appeal was taken to the Board of Revenue against his order, and that body admittedly set aside the order though it had no jurisdiction to do so. Both parties were not aware of this defect of jurisdiction. Both of them submitted to the interference by the Board of Revenue. At a subsequent stage the Board of Revenue confessed that their orders were ultra vires and passed proceedings to the effect that the confirmation by the Commissioner was right. In these circumstances the Judicial Committee pointed out that the cause of action arose only when the Board of Revenue vacated their former order and ruled that the order of the Commissioner was valid. This decision does not ignore either section 9 of the Limitation Act or import a theory of suspension not sanctioned by section 14. In the view of the Judicial Committee, the cause of action should not be regarded as having taken place on a date when no step could be taken to obtain delivery owing to the interference by the Board with the order of confirmation. That is to say, they held that the third column of the schedule should be construed as if it said that the cause of action arose only when a remedy based on it was available. I shall now examine the case before us. The decision in Bajinath Sahai v. Ramgut Singh (2) would apply word for word to the facts of the present case. Here there was a confirmation of sale. But the Civil Procedure Code has provided the procedure for that confirmation being challenged; it was in fact challenged; and although one might think that the challenge came after the time allowed by law, it was allowed to be agitated; the Court upheld the challenge to some extent. The third column of Article 180 ignores these considerations, and insists upon a party, if it is literally interpreted, filing a petition for delivery which owing to the pendency of the petition challenging the confirmation could not be granted. If this case were before the Judicial Committee, I make bold to say that they would hold that the cause of action really arose only when there was a final decision on the challenge. Similar explanation can be given with regard to every one of the cases which are catalogued under the first head. None of them contravenes the provisions of the Limitation Act as embodied in sections 4 to 31. All of them may be said to go, to some extent, behind the actual words of the third column and to import into the decision considerations based on the intention of the Legislature; but none of them introduce a principle which adds to or subtracts from the statutory exemptions. That is my view of the decisions of the Judicial Committee. Therefore, in my opinion the true rule deducible from these various decisions of the Judicial Committee is this: that subject to the exemptions, exclusion, mode of computation and the excusing of delay, etc., which are provided in the Limitation Act, the language of the third column of the First Schedule should be so interpreted as to carry out the true intention of the Legislature, that is to say, by dating the cause of action from a date when the remedy is available to the party. This is a rule of construction and not a rule of law. I would answer the reference as above, leaving each case to be dealt with in the light of these observations.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Marriage of virgin below twenty years of age—Consent of parents, whether necessary.

Under Burmese Buddhist Law a virgin under twenty years of age must have the consent of her parents to her marriage. If such consent is not obtained, the marriage is not a good marriage.

Where, however, a minor is steadfastly determined to marry her lover and continues of the same mind, such consent is not necessary.

Mr. J. A. Maung Gyi, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued Ma Sa, a girl of eighteen years of age, for restitution of conjugal rights, and he joined her paternal aunt Ma Nyo as second defendant because she enticed away Ma Sa on the day after her marriage back to her mother's house. There was no necessity to make Ma Nyo a party. Ma Sa lived with her mother, and Ma Nyo in Ma Nyo's father's house. Ma Nyo looked after the girl, but she was not her adoptive mother. Ma Sa's mother denies that she ever consented to the marriage. Ma Sa denies the marriage, and says she never consented to be plaintiff's wife. The plaintiff obtained a decree, and the defendants appeal. The plaintiff-respondent, though served, does not appear in this appeal.

The plaintiff's case is that Ma Sa's grandfather and maternal aunt Ma U Gale agreed to the marriage, which was performed in Ma U Gale's house, and that Ma Sa's mother was present; that they slept the night at Ma U Gale's house and that the next day Ma Sa was induced to return to her grandfather's house by Ma Nyo. Both Courts have found as a fact that there was a marriage. The Township Court has found that the mother was present at the marriage. The District Judge is silent as to that.

Under the Dhammathats a virgin under twenty years of age must have the consent of her parents to her marriage. See Queen-Empress v. Aga Ne U (1), the Rajabala quoted in section 33 of the Digest and Manugye, Book VI, section 28. In the Full Bench case of Orown v. Chan Mya (2) it was held by two Judges out of three that if the girl (a minor aged fourteen) "is steadfastly determined to marry her lover, and continues of the same mind," the consent of the guardian is not necessary. In the present case it is clear that the girl was not "steadfastly determined to marry her lover," and if the mother's consent was not obtained—her father is dead—I do not think the marriage was a good marriage, even if a marriage ceremony had in fact been performed.

The case is remanded to the District Court for a finding as to whether Ma Sa's mother consented to the marriage or not.

Case remanded.

Oudh Sub-Settlement Act (XXVI of 1866)—Subordinate proprietors in Oudh, position and rights of—Family arrangement, what is—Test to be applied—Reversioners, right of, to challenge alienation.

The Oudh Sub-Settlement Act of 1866, which was enacted for the purpose of securing a better determination of certain claims by subordinate proprietors in Oudh, emphasised that the rights of subordinate proprietors which were to be enforced were those which they held on or before the 13th February 1856 and that the settlement was not intended to enlarge the rights which the holders of subordinate tenures possessed. [p 82, col. 2; p. 84, col. 1.]

The true test to be applied to a transaction, challenged by the reversioners as an alienation not binding upon them, but which is alleged to be a family settlement, is whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant. There may be a family arrangement between heirs or possible claimants by inheritance, but there can be no family arrangement as between legatees or alienees to which the reversionary heirs are not parties. [p. 84, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—In the suit which has given rise to these appeals the plaintiffs claimed a two-thirds share in certain under-proprietary land, which belonged to Jaduram Pande who founded a Purwa or hamlet which was called by his name. The said land was situated in that hamlet. Jaduram Pande died before the annexation of Oudh, leaving a widow, Musammât Nidha, and three daughters, Musammât Maina, Musammât Mulhar and Musammât Ganesha. Musammât Nidha was in possession of the said land at the time of the confiscation of Oudh.

On the 25th October 1864 she obtained a decree from the Settlement Court against the then superior proprietor and her name was entered in pursuance of that decree as an under-proprietor. Musammât Maina, one of her daughters, died in her lifetime.

On the 21st June 1875 Musammât Nidha executed a Will, by which she devised the said land to Jageshar, the eldest son of Musammât Maina, to her two daughters, Musammât Mulhar and Musammât Ganesha, and to a paternal relation of her husband, named Bindha, in equal shares. The total area of the land covered by the bequest was 156 bighas, 6 biswas. On the 15th July 1884 she executed a codicil and made a re-distribution of the land, giving 54 bighas, 1 biswa, 10 biswansis to Jageshar and 34 bighas, 1 biswa, 10 biswansis to each of the other three. She died on the 2nd March 1890.

By virtue of a private arrangement between the legatees, Jageshar agreed to obtain mutation of names in his favour in respect of 6 bighas less than what was awarded to him by the codicil and gave those 6 bighas to Musammât Mulhar, Musammât Ganesha and Bindha in equal shares.

In 1884 Musammât Mulhar got her share mutated in favour of Bhushan and Mata Badal, the relations of her husband, as she was herself childless. In 1901 Jageshar, Gayadin and Lachmi Narain filed a suit against Bhushan and Mata Badal for a declaration that Musammât Mulhar had no right to give away her share to any person so as to prejudice the rights of the reversionary heirs of her father. That suit was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by time.

On the 15th February 1905, Musammât Ganesha died, leaving a son, Gayadin. She had two other sons, Lachmi Narain and Badal, who had died in her lifetime without leaving any issue. The property standing in the name of Musammât Ganesha was on her death entered in the name of Gayadin.

Musammât Mulhar died on the 13th January 1906. On her death a right of action accrued to Jageshar and Narpat, the sons of Musammât Maina, and Gayadin, the son of Musammât Ganesha, to claim the property belonging to their maternal grandfather, Jaduram Pande. Narpat died on the 11th January 1914, leaving a son, Deo Narain. Gayadin and Deo Narain and their transferees have filed the present suit for possession of such portion of the property of Jaduram Pande as appertains to their two-thirds share, leaving out of account the area which is already in the possession of Gayadin by inheritance from Musammât Ganesha. Jageshar did not join in the suit.

The Courts below have decreed the claim. Their finding is that Musammât Nidha had only a life-interest in the property inherited by her from her husband, that the bequest made by her became inoperative after her death and that the plaintiffs became entitled to the property claimed by them on the death of Musammât Mulhar, the last surviving daughter of Jaduram Pande. The suit was brought within twelve years from the date of her death and was, therefore, held to be within time.

On behalf of the defendants-appellants it is contended that Musammât Nidha became the owner of an absolute interest in the under-proprietary right by virtue of the decree which she obtained from the Settlement Court and that at all events the plaintiffs were bound by the arrangement into which Musammât Mulhar and Musammât Ganesha had entered, when they on the death of Musammât Nidha got mutation of names effected in favour of themselves and the two other legatees, Jageshar and Bindha, in certain proportions.

The effect of the settlement decree was, however, not to give Musammât Nidha greater rights than she possessed at the time of the confiscation. In Jehan Kadar v. Afsar Bahu Begam (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council pointed out that the aim of the Government in making an enquiry into previous titles at the time of the settlement was to avoid making any arbitrary, or wholly new, re-distribution of property. In the letter of the 10th October 1859, the Government of India accordingly said that as regards Zemindars and others, not being Taluqdars, an opportunity must be allowed at the next settlement to all disappointed claimants to bring forward their claims and all such claims must be heard and disposed of in the usual manner. The confiscation had the effect of annulling the proprietary rights of every kind in the soil, inferior as well as superior, but as the Government of India pointed out in their letter of the 12th September 1860, the policy of the Government was "to leave the confiscation of 1858 in force only in the cases of persons who persisted in rebellion, and generally so far as to restore in its integrity the ancient Talukdari tenure, wherever it had existed at the time of the first occupation of Oudh in 1856, but had been set aside by the Revenue Officers." "But the Governor-General in Council", the letter went on to say, "never intended that in Taluqdari estates confiscated under the general order and conferred in consequence of the persisted rebellion of the Taluqdar on a new grantee, all the holders of the subordinate rights, though themselves not persisting in rebellion and though pardoned by the Queen, should be merged in the consequences of the Taluqdar's guilt and become partakers of his punishment." The Government of India added: "It was the intention of Government that all such subordinate holders, unless specially deserving of punishment for persistent rebellion, should be restored to the rights they possessed before the rebellion, whether the parent estates were ancestral, acquired or conferred, and that every such holder shall be maintained in his rights under the new grantee precisely as if the Taluqa had not been confiscated or as if having been confiscated, it had been settled with the hereditary Taluqdar." (Syke's Taluqdari Law, page 116).

In the Records of Rights Circular, issued on the 8th January 1861, it was stated that the rule on which we must take our stand for determining the amount payable to the Taluqdar by the under-proprietors of persons holding intermediate interests between him and the ryot was to maintain the rights they were found possessed of in 1855 or just before the annexation of the Province and no others. It is true that those instructions were issued for the purpose of determining the rights existing or enforceable as between the Taluqdars and the subordinate proprietors, but it is significant that the rights which the subordinate proprietors were allowed to enforce were rights of which they were possessed before. The Oudh Sub-Settlement Act (XXVI of 1866), which was enacted for the purpose of securing a better determination of certain claims by subordinate proprietors in Oudh, similarly emphasized that the rights of subordinate proprietors, which were to be enforced, were those which they held on or before the 13th February 1856. The settlement was not intended to enlarge the rights which the holders of subordinate tenures possessed. The decrees of the Settlement Courts settled the rights of the claimants as against the superior proprietor but left the rights of other persons as against the former unaffected. The instructions issued to Settlement Officers also declared that the decrees would in no way affect the rights of the persons claiming to share in the rights and interests of the decree holders.

At the time when Musammāt Nidha obtained the decree, she had three daughters in existence, whose rights the decree she obtained against the superior proprietor could not have prejudicially affected. The decree operated as a restoration of such rights as she held before, and as observed in Ganesha v. Nageshar Bakhsh Singh (2), the right of the reversionary heirs of her husband remained intact. Musammāt Nidha had, therefore, no more than a life-interest in the property covered by the decree and she had no right to bequeath the same so as to prejudice the rights of the reversionary heirs of her husband. The re-distribution made by the legatees of the property bequeathed to them by Musammāt Nidha did not operate as a family arrangement, binding on the reversionary heirs, because though after the death of Musammāt Nidha her daughters represented the estate, they had applied in the capacity of legatees and none but the legatees had consented thereto. As explained in Kunahaya Lal v. Bohra Kishori Lal (3), the true test to be applied to a transaction, which is challenged by the reversioners as an alienation not binding upon them, is whether the alienee derives title from the holder of the limited interest or life-tenant. There may be a family arrangement between heirs or possible claimants by inheritance; but there can be no family arrangement as between legatees or alienees to which the reversionary heirs are not parties.

It is further contended that Gayadin had acquiesced in the arrangement by obtaining mutation of the property entered in the name of Musammāt Ganesha in his own favour on her death, but his acceptance of that property does not imply that he had surrendered his right to the remainder. No other pleas have been pressed.

The appeals are, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 91—Promissory note, suit on—Failure to prove pro-note—Original contract, whether can be relied upon.

By the Full Bench (Pratt, J. dissenting).—Where money is lent and at the same time a promissory note is given for the loan, the creditor can sue for the money due as on the original contract of loan, if the pro-note cannot be proved. [p. 92, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Pratt, J.—Where the promissory note has been given at the same time the loan was taken, the creditor cannot sue for the money due as on the original contract of loan if the promissory note cannot be proved, unless he is in a position to prove that the loan and the giving of the note are separate transactions and that the note is not a reduction to writing of the loan transaction. [p. 94, col. 2.]

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

MAUNG KIN, J.—According to the plaint the first and second defendants went to the plaintiff in December 1916 and told him that they wanted to trade in paddy with money taken from him that season. Subsequently the third defendant offered to stand surety for advances to be made to the first and second defendants by the plaintiff. In accordance with this agreement the first defendant took Rs. 1,200 from the plaintiff and signed a promissory note for that sum on the 23rd of January 1917. Again on the 18th Feb.

MAUNG KYI v. MA ZA GALE.

ruary she took Rs. 2,400 and signed another promissory note for that sum. The plaintiff asks for a decree against all three defendants on the two promissory notes.

It has been admitted, and there is no doubt that execution of the notes has not been proved. The defense, therefore, claims that the suit must fail. The trial Court passed a decree for the sum sued for with costs against the first and second defendants, holding that the first defendant alone took the money from the plaintiff and not together with the second defendant, that the third defendant stood surety for the first defendant, and that the promissory notes were only evidence of the original contract of loan. The Divisional Court on appeal made the following observation on the last finding:—

"After reading Nga Waik v. Nga Ohet (1), I think this is so. It is quite true that the promissory notes did not express the whole contract which was for the supply of paddy to plaintiff in return for money advanced by him, but then no money was advanced till the promissory notes were executed. As far as I can see, there was no contract till they were executed. The cause of action was not completed before the promissory notes were executed, to adopt the distinction made in the quotation from Sir R. Garth made in the judgment cited."

The Court then proceeded to dismiss the suit. It seems clear that though there was a talk about advances to be made by the plaintiff to the first and second defendants in December 1916, it did not materialise until the 23rd of January and that, therefore, the taking of the money and the signing of the promissory note on the 23rd January must be taken to be one transaction, likewise the taking of the other money and the execution of the other promissory note of the 18th February. The legal question for determination then is, whether the plaintiff, having failed to prove the promissory notes, would be at liberty to sue for the amounts borrowed on the original contracts of loan.

The leading case on the subject is Shah Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2) and the law on the subject was stated by Garth, C. J., as follows:—"When a cause of action for money is once complete in itself, whether for goods sold, or for money lent, or for any other claim, and the debtor then gives a bill or note to the creditor for payment of the money at a future time, the creditor, if the bill or note is not paid at maturity, may, always as a rule, sue for the original consideration, provided that he has not endorsed or lost or parted with the bill or note, under such circumstances as to make the debtor liable upon it to some third person. In such cases the bill or note is said to be taken by the creditor on account of the debt, and if it is not paid at maturity, the creditor may disregard the bill or note and sue for the original consideration..... But when the original cause of action is the bill or note itself, and does not exist independently of it, as for instance, when on consideration of A depositing money with B B contracts by a promissory note to re-pay it with interest at six months date, here there is no cause of action for money lent or otherwise than upon the note itself, because the deposit is made upon the terms contained in the note, and no other. In such a case the note is the only contract between the parties, and if for want of a proper stamp or some other reason the note is not admissible in evidence the creditor must lose his money."

The facts in that case as stated by Garth, C. J., were these:—"The plaintiff had a claim against the defendants for the value of a share in a partnership business and it was verbally agreed between them that, in settlement of that claim Rs. 250 should be taken as the value of the share, which sum was to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiff. The defendants did in fact give the plaintiff Rs. 25 in part payment of that sum, but they were unable at that time to pay the rest... Then came the giving of the note which the lower Court treats, and we think properly treats, as a sort of loan transaction. The plaintiff gave the defendants a receipt for the remaining Rs. 225 in return for which the defendants gave the plaintiff this promissory note." The learned Chief Justice then goes on to say:—"It was, therefore, a loan of the Rs. 225 to the defendants upon the terms contained in the promissory note, and as there was no loan independently of the note, the note itself was the best evidence of the transaction, and as it could not be proved for want of a proper stamp the plaintiff could not recover upon it. The learned Chief Justice then considered the question whether the plaintiff could recover the Rs. 225 as upon the account stated. He held that the plaintiff could not for two reasons, namely, (1) he had given the defendants a receipt for that sum allowing them to retain it upon the terms of the note; and he had thus converted his original claim upon the account stated into a claim upon the promissory note; (2) his claim upon the account stated, if he had any, was barred by limitation.

So far as I can understand what happened in that case was, that there was first of all a settlement of accounts between the parties when the sum of Rs. 250 was found due by the defendant to the plaintiff. The defendant was unable to pay the whole amount thus found due and only paid Rs. 25 towards the debt. The plaintiff then gave a receipt for the sum of Rs. 225, which meant that the amount found due was thereby discharged. The promissory note was then signed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 225. The promissory note could not be proved and it was contended that the plaintiff could sue either on the settlement of the accounts or on the contract of loan which must have preceded the execution of the promissory note.

The learned Chief Justice held that the plaintiff could not sue on the settlement of the accounts, because what was found due in consequence thereof had been discharged by the plaintiff's receipt to the defendant and that the loan of Rs. 225 to the defendant was upon the terms contained in the promissory note and as there was no loan independently of the note, the note itself was the best evidence of the transaction, and as it could not be proved for want of a proper stamp, the plaintiff could not recover upon it.

In Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (3), Sheik Akbar's case (2) was considered by Petheram, C. J., and Rampini, J. The suit in that case was on a promissory note bearing a stamp of one anna. The defendant admitted the loan but pleaded payment. The trial Judge held that the promissory note should have been stamped with a two anna stamp and refused to admit it in evidence. He also held that the plaintiff had no cause of action independently of the document and dismissed the suit. The High Court held that the plaintiff had a cause of action independently of the document and also that an implied contract to re pay the money lent always arises from the fact that money is lent, even though no express promise, either written or verbal, is made to re pay it. Sheik Akbar's case (2) was relied on by the defendant. Petheram, C. J., quoted the second paragraph of the passage in which Garth, C. J., laid down the law on the subject and observed as follows:—"These words, taken alone, may seem to indicate that when a bill or note is taken for a debt the action must be brought upon the bill or note; and that if for any reason the document is excluded, the action must fail; but a reference to the earlier portion of the judgment shows that such was not the meaning of the Chief Justice, and that when he spoke of a deposit he did not mean a loan, as he then says where money is lent and a bill or note given for the loan which is not paid at maturity, the creditor may disregard the note and sue on the original consideration."

In Krishnaji Narayan Parkhi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi (4), Sheikh Akbar's case (2) was considered by Jenkins, C. J., and Candy, J. They followed Petheram, C. J., as to the interpretation of the law laid down by Garth, C. J., Before Jenkins, C. J., and Candy, J., it was contended that section 91 of the Evidence Act excludes a suit on the original consideration where the promissory note is inadmissible in evidence. Jenkins, C. J., observed on this point:—"In my opinion such a contention is not well founded. It is perfectly true that the terms of the contract contained in the Hundi can, apart from the conditions which permit secondary evidence, only be proved by the Hundi but this does not prevent proof of the loan independently of the note." Candy, J., however, cited Hira Lal v. Datadin (5), in which the case came before the High Court with special reference to the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act and quoted the following observations of Straight, J., with approval:—"The existence of the promissory note does not debar the plaintiff from resorting to his original consideration."

In Parsotam Narain v. Taley Singh (6) it was held by Aikman, J., that when money is lent on terms contained in a promissory note given at the time of the loan, the lender suing to recover the money so lent must prove those terms by the promissory note, and that if for any reason such as the absence of a proper stamp, the promissory note is not admissible in evidence, the plaintiff is not entitled to set up a case independent of the note. The learned Judge disagreed with the interpretation of Sheikh Akbar's case (2) as made by Petheram, C. J., in Pramatha Nath Sandal's case (3), and after discussing Garth, C. J., and Petheram, C. J.'s judgments finally came to the following conclusion:—"Garth, C. J., did not mean that when money is lent upon a promissory note it is open to the creditor to disregard the note and sue for the loan. What he meant was that when a loan has been made, and the debtor subsequently gives a note, the creditor may disregard the note. And the learned Judge proceeded to observe:—"Had the learned Judges who decided the case in Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (3) considered Sir Richard Garth's judgment carefully, they would have seen that Sir Richard Garth did not mean to exclude loans from the second category of cases, for when he comes to apply the principles he had laid down to the case before him, he says:—"It was, therefore, a loan of Rs. 225 to the defendants upon the terms contained in the promissory note and as there was no loan independently of the note, the note itself was the best evidence for the transaction, and as it could not be proved for want of a proper stamp, the plaintiff could not recover upon it." In support of his view Aikman, J., quotes Garth, C. J., in a subsequent case similar to Sheikh Akbar's case (2), namely, Radhakant Shaha v. Abhoychurn Mitter (7), where Garth, C. J., had said: "The second point taken by the appellants was that, even although the instrument itself was not admissible in evidence, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover upon proving the consideration for the bill. Of course, if the consideration for the bill had been an independent cause of action, complete in itself before the bill was given, the plaintiff's argument would have been well founded. But here it is stated in the plaint, and it is evidently the fact, that the Rs. 500, which was the consideration of the bill, was advanced by the plaintiffs to the defendants upon this particular bill, and as the bill itself is the best evidence of the terms upon which the advance was made, the plaintiffs could not establish their case without proving the bill. The law upon this subject was fully explained by this Court in the case of Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2)."

Aikman, J., also pointed out that the case of Hira Lal v. Datadin (5) was a case in which the plaintiff advanced money to the defendant on a deposit of jewels, and the defendant subsequently gave the plaintiff a promissory note for a balance due on the advance, which note being insufficiently stamped was inadmissible in evidence. Aikman, J., then proceeded to hold as follows:—"When a plaintiff lends money on terms contained in a promissory note given at the time of the loan, he must prove those terms by the promissory note. It appears to me that the decisions which have held otherwise ignore the provisions of sections 91, 65 and 22 of the Evidence Act; and I do not think that it can be denied that these decisions condone and encourage evasion of the Stamp Act."

In Banarsi Prasad v. Fazal Ahmed (8), Stanley, C. J., and Knox, J., held that where a plaintiff sued for the recovery of a loan secured by a promissory note and it was found that the promissory note was inadmissible in evidence as it had been cancelled, evidence of the debt is admissible aliunde. The learned Judges quoted the first set of words of Garth, C. J., in Sheikh Akbar's case (2) and said the law was clear.

In Ram Sarup v. Jasoda Kunwar (9) it was held that if a creditor has a cause of action for the recovery of money for which his debtor has executed a promissory note, separate from and independent of the note, he can recover upon such cause, in case the note for any reason cannot be put in evidence. Nor is the creditor necessarily debarred from suing on the original cause of action by the fact that it arose out of the same transaction in the course of which the promissory note was executed. The learned Judges (Richards, C. J., and Banerji, J.) overruled Aikman, J., and quoted with approval the remarks of Petheram, C. J., in Pramatha Nath Sandal's case (3).

In recent times the Madras authorities have been all one way.

In Pothi Reddi v. Velayudasivan (10) there was a contract to re-pay a loan of money with interest and the money was paid. A promissory note specifying these terms was executed later in the day by the defendant and given to the plaintiff. The promissory note was not stamped. The plaintiff brought a suit to recover the unpaid balance of the loan on the oral contract to pay. Collins, C. J., and Parker, J., held that the plaintiff could not succeed. Sheikh Akbar's case (2) was cited in support of the plaintiff's case. The learned Judges observed: "We do not understand the learned Judges to have ruled that in all cases where the original cause of action is the bill or note itself it is open to the plaintiff—if the note be lost or not receivable in evidence—to frame his suit as one for money lent independently of the note. We cannot assent to such a doctrine, and to do so would entirely nullify the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act."

In Chinnappa Pillai v. Muthuraman Chettiar (11) it was held, following Pothi Reddi's case (10), that where the loan and the execution of the promissory note were contemporaneous and constituted one transaction, a suit based on the original consideration is not maintainable. In Muthu Sastrial v. Visvanadha Pandara Sannadhi (12) the case was one where the loan and the promissory note were parts of the same transaction. Sadasiva Aiyar and Spencer, J.J., held that the lender could not sue on the original consideration for want of a proper stamp. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., remarked as follows:—"As regards the contention that, apart from the promissory note, there was an independent obligation implied from the receipt of the plaintiff's money by defendant and that that obligation could be established by proof of that fact, I think we are bound by the decisions in Pothi Reddi v. Velayudasivan (10) and Somasundaram v. Krishnamurthi (13). It is contended that Pothi Reddi v. Velayudasivan (10) is not good law, as the learned Judges misunderstood any observation of Garth, C. J., in the case of Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2) on which they relied in support of their position. I am not satisfied that the learned Judges did so misunderstand Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2). Even if they misunderstood Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2), they give independent reasons as follows:—"It is a necessary condition of every written contract that the terms should be orally settled before they are reduced to writing and to hold, when such a contract has been reduced to writing, that a plaintiff can take advantage of the absence of a stamp on the promissory note to sue at once for the return of money which he may have contracted to lend for a fixed period, would entirely defeat the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act."...To import the doctrines laid down in English cases about vague obligations to re-pay arising out of equity and not out of contract, or about obligations which can be enforced if the plaintiff skilfully draws up his plaint as one on account for money had and received concealing the real contract of loan which had been reduced to the form of a document is, it seems to me, merely trying to nullify section 91 of the Indian Evidence Act."

In Upper Burma we have the case of Nga Waik v. Nga Ohet (1) cited and relied upon by the learned Divisional Judge. This case superseded two cases, Maung Hlaw v. Nagassat (14) and Ewing v. White (15), of the same Court. In Nga Waik's case (1) Mr. (now Sir George) Shaw reviewed the case law extant up to the 15th of July 1907, when his decision was given. He came to the conclusion that Aikman, J.'s views in Parsotam Narain v. Taley Singh (6) were correct and that Petheram, C. J., and Rampini, J., in Pramatha Nath Sandal's case (3) were not correct in their interpretation of Garth, C. J.'s judgment in Sheikh Akbar's case (2). The same opinion was passed on Jenkins, C. J., and Candy, J.'s views on the subject in Krishnaji's case (4). In Lower Burma we have the case of Bally Singh v. Bhugwan Dass Kalwar (16) where Twomey, J., followed Nga Waik's case (1). In Nga Waik's case (1) the execution of the promissory note was, as in the present case, not proved.

Since the decision in Nga Waik's case (1) Aikman, J.'s ruling has been overruled in Ram Sarup's case (9). It will be seen that Petheram, C. J.'s interpretation of Garth, C. J.'s judgment has been followed in Bombay and we find no contrary decision since then in Bombay and it has been also followed in Allahabad as lately as in 1912. In Bajinath Das v. Salig Ram (17) it was held by Karamat Husain and Tudball, JJ., that if money is lent on a document which is inadmissible in evidence, the suit on the document must fail, but the plaintiff would not be debarred from bringing an action for money had and received and such a suit must be treated as a suit for money had and received, if the pleadings are properly framed. The learned Judges observed:— "None of the cases cited to us expressly lays down that where a pro-note which is inadmissible in evidence is taken in consideration of the money advanced, the plaintiff cannot sue for money had and received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use." Moreover, Jenkins, C. J., held the view that though section 91 of the Evidence Act may exclude proof of the pro-note otherwise than by the document itself or by secondary evidence, when such evidence is admissible, this does not prevent proof of the loan independently of the note. This view seems to have been founded upon the assumption that when there is a loan there is an implied contract to re-pay.

I am inclined to the following views:—
The interpretation by Aikman, J., of Garth, C. J.'s ruling in Sheikh Akbar's case (2) is correct, but section 91 of the Evidence Act only prevents proof of the contents of the pro-note otherwise than by the document, or when admissible, by secondary evidence of it, but that section cannot operate as a bar to a suit brought to recover the money lent on the implied contract to re-pay.

These views are in conflict with Twomey, J.'s view in Bally Singh's case (16). Since Sir George Shaw's ruling in Nga Waik's case (1) Aikman, J.'s ruling has, as I said before, been overruled by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court. Moreover, the point is of great importance and is likely to arise again. I would, therefore, refer to a Bench, full or otherwise, as the learned Chief Judge may determine, the following question:—

"Where money is lent and at the same time a promissory note is given therefor, can the creditor sue for the money due as on the original contract of loan, if the pro note cannot be proved?"

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

TWOMEY, C. J.—The question referred to the Bench is as follows:—"Where money is lent and at the same time a pro-note is given therefor, can the creditor sue for the money due as on the original contract of loan, if the pro-note cannot be proved."

The only decision of the Chief Court dealing with the question is that given in Bally Singh v. Bhugwan Dass Kalwar (16), in which the point was not fully argued and the Indian decisions subsequent to the Upper Burma case of Nga Waik v. Nga Chet (1) were not brought to the notice of the Court, I, therefore, followed the decision in the Upper Burma case, which fully adopted the reasoning of Sir Richard Garth in the Calcutta High Court ruling Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2). Our learned colleague in his order of reference mentions Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2) as the leading case on the subject. Although that case has not been expressly overruled, its authority has been impaired by subsequent decisions of the Calcutta High Court. Petheram, C. J. and Rampini, J., in Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath

Dey (3) held that an implied contract to re-pay always arises from the fact that money is lent, even though an express promise either written or verbal is made to re-pay it. They treated the bill or note given for the money in that case as security for the advance. In Moti Lal Saha v. Monmohan Gossami (18) Rampini and Pratt, JJ., allowed the plaintiffs to prove their loan by other evidence, where the promissory notes which they produced in proof of the loans turned out to be forgeries. The Bombay High Court in Krishnaji Narain Parkhi v. Rajmal Minikchand Marwadi (4) followed the Calcutta ruling of Petheram, C. J., and Rampini, J., and held that section 91 of the Evidence Act does not bar oral evidence in cases of this kind. In the Allahabad High Court, Sir Richard Garth's ruling in Sheikh Akbar's case (2) was strictly applied by Aikman, J., in Parsotam Narain v. Taley Singh (6). The learned Judge held that when a plaintiff lends money on terms contained in a promissory note given at the time of the loan, he must prove those terms by the promissory note, and that the decisions which have held otherwise ignore the provisions of sections 91, 65 and 22 of the Evidence Act. But the decision of Aikman, J., was definitely overruled by a later Bench decision of the Court. See Ram Sarup v. Jasodha Kunwar (9). It now appears to be settled law in Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay that a creditor who has lent money and taken a promissory note from the borrower may sue for the amount of his debt if for any reason the promissory note cannot be put in evidence. The Madras High Court for a long time consistently followed the ruling of Sir Richard Garth in Sheikh Akbar's case (2). But the remarks of the learned Judges in Chokalingam Chetty v. Annamalai Chetty (19) show a distinct re-approachment to the views of the other High Courts. See also Jambu Ohetty v. Palaniappa Ohettiar (20), in which it was held, following the English Law on the subject, that it is a question of fact with regard to promissory notes or bills or Hundis whether the parties intended them to operate as absolute or conditional payment, and the presumption is that the effect of giving and taking a note or bill is that the debt is conditionally paid, the onus being on the party affirming the contrary to show that absolute discharge was intended by the parties.

It appears, therefore, that the weight of authority is in favour of an affirmative answer to the question referred.

Section 91 of the Evidence Act prevents the contract embodied in the promissory note from being proved except by the note itself; but it is going much further to hold that the lender cannot recover on the original consideration if the promissory note is excluded. He would have a good cause of action if no promissory note had been executed, and we have to consider carefully whether he loses this cause of action altogether if he is so unfortunate as to have taken a promissory note which turns out to be a nullity. Section 91 offers no obstacle if it is held that there is in all cases of money lent a cause of action apart from the promissory note. On this point the learned Judges (Collins, C. J., and Parker, J.) in the Madras High Court in Pothi Reddi v. Velayudasican (10) remarked as follows: "it is a necessary condition to every written contract that the terms should be orally settled before they are reduced to writing, and to hold, when such a contract has been reduced to writing, that a plaintiff can take advantage of the absence of a stamp on the promissory note to sue at once for the return of money which he may have contracted to lend for a fixed period, would entirely defeat the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act." But is the defendant entitled to take advantage of the absence of a stamp so as to evade his liability altogether? It is true, as the learned Judges pointed out in the above case, that the reduction of a contract to writing is necessarily preceded by an oral settlement of the terms. But in the case of a loan for which a promissory note is executed, there is something more than a preliminary settlement of terms. One part of the contract is actually executed by payment of the money and the promissory note can be regarded merely as security for re-payment or as providing for the mode of re-payment. The whole question before us terms on whether a separate independent cause of action can be implied from the payment and acceptance of the money and whether this implied cause of action revives if the promissory note is excluded. In Sheikh Akbar's case (2) it was admitted that there may be a complete separate cause of action before the bill or note is given, but Sir Richard Garth mentions another class of cases as furnishing no cause of action independently of the bill or note, i.e., "where the original cause of action is the bill or note itself." If B gives A a promissory note on the spot for the amount lent, A, according to Sheikh Akbar's case (2), can sue only on the promissory note. But if the case be that A, having lent money to B, induces B at some later time (it may be only an hour later) to give him a promissory note by way of collateral security, then A can either sue on the promissory note, or if the promissory note be for any reason inadmissible in evidence, he can sue on the original consideration. In the one case the promissory note is regarded as a mere reduction to writing of the loan transaction: in the other case it is regarded as being itself a definite transaction furnishing a separate cause of action. And according to Sheikh Akbar's case (2) it is only in the second case that the plaintiff can resort to the original consideration if the promissory note has to be excluded. But the defect in a promissory note which excludes it from evidence may be regarded as constituting a failure of consideration which furnishes a good ground of action in a suit for the recovery of the money actually paid over. It is settled law that if A, having lent money to B, agrees to take instead of immediate payment a negotiable instrument for the amount lent and the negotiable instrument is afterwards at maturity dishonoured, then A's original rights are revived, that is to say, he can sue B for his money. The reason is that the giving of the negotiable instrument was only a conditional satisfaction of the debt, and as the condition is not fulfilled, the consideration for A's loan to B has failed. The debt which was conditionally paid is treated as subsisting throughout. So when a promissory note is given for a debt, whether earlier or contemporaneous, the promissory note is presumably given by way of conditional payment, and if for any reason the promissory note should afterwards turn out to be inadmissible in evidence, the condition has failed and the lender should be allowed to recover on his original rights.

In Sheikh Akbar's case (2) it is said that "Where the cause of suit is inseparable from the giving of the bill or note, it is obvious that the onus of proving the lost instrument must fall upon the plaintiff, and that he cannot make out a prima facie case without proving it." This is said to be a very material and practical distinction between the two classes of cases referred to in Sir Richard Garth's judgment. But it does not seem to follow necessarily that the cause of suit is inseparable from the giving of the note merely because the payment of the money and the giving of the note form one transaction. The promissory note may be, and I think usually is, given as security for the advance, and there seems to be no reason why the plaintiff should not be allowed to sue for his money in such a case without proving the promissory note. It would be for the defendant (as in the other class of cases) to say:—"Yes, but I gave you a promissory note for the amount of loan;" the onus would be on the defendant to prove the note and his defence would fail if for any reason he could not do so.

His defence would fail equally if it appeared that the note was not a valid note, for there is always an implied condition that a note signed by a debtor and given to his creditor in satisfaction of the debt is a valid note. The general effect of taking a bill or note as conditional payment is to suspend the right of action on the original debt during the currency of the instrument. But where the instrument is void or of no effect on account of want of stamp or forgery, the creditor is entitled to sue at once on the original debt. (Vide English cases cited in Chitty on Contracts, 16th Edition page 805.)

It should be noted that in the suit out of which the present reference arose, the existence of promissory notes for the debt was not set up by the defendant as a bar to the plaintiff's claim. Two sums of money aggregating Rs. 3,600 were admittedly advanced by the plaintiff to the first defendant for the purchase of paddy. It was the plaintiff's case that promissory notes were executed by the defendant at the time when the advances were made. Execution was denied and the Courts found that execution was not proved. The defendant admitted receiving the money but pleaded that she had supplied paddy in full satisfaction. The case, therefore, stood as if no promissory notes were in question; and in these circumstances I think it is clear that the plaintiff is not debarred from suing for the balance which he alleges to be still due of the money advanced by him, basing his claim on the implied promise to re-pay. I would answer the reference in the affirmative.

ORMOND, J.—A promissory note constitutes a complete cause of action in itself. Section 91 of the Evidence Act applies where the terms of a contract are reduced to writing. In the case of a loan where the borrower executes a promissory note in favour of the lender, the borrower in effect says: "I will re-pay the amount borrowed and I will give you a promissory note for the same amount"—that is the original contract. There are two distinct promises made by the borrower: (I) that he will pay the amount borrowed to the lender; and (II) that he will pay the amount due on the promissory note to the holder of the note. Each promise constitutes a separate cause of action; and it is only the second promise that is reduced to writing. The first promise remains as a separate and distinct oral promise and section 91 of the Evidence Act, therefore, does not apply to it.

The note is generally given as security for the re payment of the loan and affords the lender an additional and alternative remedy.

It may, however, be taken by the lender in substitution for and in satisfaction of the first promise, as was the case in Shaik Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2). In that case evidence could not be given to prove the promissory note because the note had not been properly stamped. The learned Judges apparently assumed that the plaintiff must nevertheless be deemed to have accepted the note in satisfaction of the debt. In such a case, however, where the note is executed by the defendant, it is generally presumed (and I think rightly so) that the plaintiff accepts the note in satisfaction of the debt, upon the implied condition that the document given by the defendant is a valid and effective promissory note; and that if the promissory note is ineffective for want of a stamp it does not operate as a payment of the debt. The debt is then not discharged but subsists as a separate cause of action.

In all cases where the defendant repudiates the promissory note, e. g., by denying execution, as is the case here, the plaintiff is at liberty to accept the plea and proceed with his suit upon the assumption that there was no promissory note.

In the present case the note was with the plaintiff and was negotiated; and the defendant, so far from proving that the note was taken in satisfaction of the debt, denied the fact of there being a promissory note at all. I would, therefore, answer the question referred in the affirmative.

MAUNG KIN, J.—I am of the same opinion as my learned colleagues, the Chief Judge and Ormond, J.

PRATT, J. I regret that I am unable to agree with the views expressed by my learned colleagues.

In S. Muthu Nadar v. S. Armuga Nadar (21) after studying the Upper Burma case of Nga Waik v. Nga Ohet (1) and the rulings referred to therein, I expressed the opinion that prima facie section 91 of the Evidence Act would seem to prohibit the oral proof of a loan, when it had been made on a promissory note.

My attention was not then called to Bally Singh v. Bhugwan Dass Kalwar (16), or it would have confirmed me still more in my opinion to know that a Judge of this Court had already held that it was not necessary to go further than the law as enunciated in the Upper Burma case referred to.

I am in complete accord with the interpretation put by the learned Judicial Commissioner in Nga Waik v. Nga Ohet (1) on Sir R. Garth's exposition of the law in the case of Sheikh Akbar v. Sheikh Khan (2). As he says: "There can be no manner of doubt that Sir R. Garth distinguished between cases in which a cause of action is complete in itself before the promissory note is given, cases, that is, where, e. g., the loan and the giving of the promissory note are different transactions, and the note is not a reduction to writing of the loan transaction, and cases where the bill or note is given as part of the original transaction, as the written record of that transaction; and that he did not intend to say that in the second of these two classes of cases the creditor may disregard the bill or note and sue on the original transaction."

(21) Special Civil First Appeal No. 77 of 1917.

MAUNG KYI v. MA MA GALE.

It is true that there have been further rulings of the Indian Courts on the point since Nga Wain v. Nga Ohet (1), but after careful perusal of the leading cases I see no reason to consider the view taken in Nga Wain's case (2) unsound.

In Moti Lal Saha v. Monmohan Gossami (18) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that, when a promissory note was a forgery, plaintiffs could succeed, if they were able to prove the loan by independent evidence. That ruling does not appear to conflict with Sir R. Garth's in Sheikh Akbar's case (2) since if the promissory note was a forgery, it could not be said that the contract had been reduced to the form of a document.

I do not agree with the interpretation put upon Sir R. Garth's judgment in Pramatha Nath Sandal v. Dwarka Nath Dey (3).

Granting further, as there laid down, that an implied contract to re-pay the money lent always arises from the fact that money is lent, even though no express promise, either oral or verbal, is made to re-pay it, it seems to me that, once a promissory note is taken, the implied promise is merged in the written promise, and section 91 of the Evidence Act applies to exclude proof of the promise except by the written record.

I notice that in this case as well as in the Bombay case of Krishnaji Narayan Par. khi v. Rajmal Manikchand Marwadi (4) the fact of the loan was admitted, so that it was not necessary to prove it by independent evidence.

The Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Sarup v. Jasoda Kunwar (9) to the effect that where a plaintiff is able to prove a loan independently and without the assistance of the note, he ought to succeed though the taking of the loan and the giving of the note were simultaneous transactions, is not to my mind reconcilable, as it stands, with the provisions of section 91 of the Evidence Act. In the Madras case of Ohokalingam Ohetty v. Annamalai Chetty (19) the bearing of section 91 of the Evidence Act upon the question in issue was not discussed at all.

The earlier Madras cases of Jambu Chetty v. Palaniappa Ohettiar (20) and Pothi Reddi v. Velayudisivan (10) are in favour of the view that oral evidence of a loan cannot be given, when it has been advanced on a promissory note, which is not admissible in evidence, unless the note is not a record of the loan transaction, or in other words unless there is a cause of action separable from the note.

Pothi Reddi v. Velayudasivan (10) was followed in the later Madras case of Muthu Sastri- al v. Visvanadha Pandara Sannadhi (12) and I agree with Aiyer, J.'s view that to treat the money paid at the very time of the execution of a promissory note, which is inadmissible in evidence, as giving rise to an independent contractual or other obligation seems inadmissible.

Section 91 of the Evidence Act provides that where the terms of a contract have been reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of terms of such contract, except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible. The section to my mind clearly applies to a promissory note, which is the embodiment in writing of the contract to re-pay a loan.

The terms of the reference are:—"Where money is lent and at the same time a promissory note is given therefor, can the creditor sue for the money due as on the original contract of loan, if the promissory note cannot be proved."

It might be argued with considerable show of reason that, if the promissory note cannot be proved, it cannot well be held to have been given. If no note was given, the creditor could obviously sue on the original loan.

It would certainly be a simple solution of the problem to hold that a note, which could be proved, could be treated as co-existent. A perusal of the order of reference, however, shows that in the present case two notes are in existence, and plaintiff relied thereon, but failed to prove their execution. The position, therefore, is that the terms of the contract to re-pay the loan have been reduced to the form of a document in each instance, but the evidence is inadequate to prove the execution of these documents by the debtor. The promissory notes having been given at the time the loans were taken, the presumption to my mind would ordinarily be that there was no cause of action independently of the notes. This, however, would be a matter of evidence in each individual case, and if in any particular instance there was a cause of action on the loan, independently of the promissory note, the plaintiff would be able to sue as on the original contract of loan.

I am not prepared to go so far as to hold that there is in all cases a cause of action independently of the promissory note.

Where a plaintiff has lent money on terms contained in a promissory note, he is bound, I consider, to prove those terms by the promissory note and is not entitled to resort to oral evidence of the loan. The written contract to re-pay is not merely collateral; it is of the very essence of the transaction.

It is certainly an apparent injustice that a creditor, who has obtained a valueless promissory note in exchange for a loan, should be debarred from recovering his debt because of the existence of a note the execution of which he is unable to prove, but that is undoubtedly the effect of section 91 of the Evidence Act as I read it. The law expects men to use ordinary prudence and to exercise reasonable precautions in the conduct of their business transactions. If a creditor takes a document for a debt and fails to ensure that his document is legally admissible in evidence or to produce satisfactory evidence of its execution, he is penalised by not being allowed to prove his debt by oral evidence. It is perhaps hardly necessary to remark that if the creditor has been induced by fraud or misrepresentation to accept a valueless promissory note, he will be at liberty to repudiate the note and sue for the recovery of the money advanced.

In a case like the present, where the contract to re-pay the loan has been reduced to the form of a document at the time of making the advance, I do not consider any real assistance is to be gained by discussing whether the promissory note is to be treated as conditional payment of the loan or otherwise.

As Aiyar, J., puts it in Muthu Sastrial (12) already quoted, "To import the doctrines laid down in English cases about vague obligations to re-pay arising out of equity and not out of contract, or about obligations which can be enforced if the plaintiff skilfully draws up his plaint as one on account for money had and received, concealing the real contract of loan which had been reduced to the form of a document, is, it seems to me, merely trying to nullify section 91 of the Evidence Act."

I cannot see my way to answer the reference in the affirmative without evading what I hold to be the clear intention of section 91 of the Evidence Act.

The crux of the matter is whether the loan transaction is independent of and separate from the giving of the promissory note, and I find considerable difficulty in giving a general answer to the reference as made without regard to the circumstances of the particular case. My answer would be that where the promissory note has been given at the same time the loan was taken, the creditor cannot sue for the money due as on the original contract of loan, if the promissory note cannot be proved, unless he is in a position to prove that the loan and the giving of the note are separate transactions, and that the note is not a reduction to writing of the loan transaction. I would remark that in the suit, of which the present reference is the outcome, defendant admitted receipt of the advances but pleaded re-payment. In view of the admission, therefore, it became unnecessary to prove the loans by separate evidence and I would hold that under the circumstances plaintiff was entitled to recover unless defendant established her plea of re-payment.

Answered affirmatively.

No. 1—RESPONDENTS.

Debtor and creditor—Debt, failure to demand, for very long period—Presumption—Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876), s. 13—Pre-emption—Price, whether entered in good faith—Fancy price, whether fictitious—Judgment, statement in, that criminal proceedings will be started against witness or party, propriety of.

Where it is found that a money-lender has allowed a debt to remain outstanding for a very long period without obtaining some document or security for it and without at any time demanding payment, the presumption is that the debt has been paid off. [p. 96, col. 2.]

In a suit for pre-emption in order to determine whether the price entered in the sale-deed has been fixed in good faith, the Court is entitled to examine whether there is any very great difference between the price and the market value of the property. If the price entered in the sale-deed greatly exceeds the market value, that fact would be relevant to the issue of good faith but it would be open to the vendee to show special circumstances which induced him to pay a fancy price for the property. [p. 97, col. 2.]

If a Court in the course of its judgment finds that a witness has given false evidence or that a party has rendered himself liable to criminal proceedings, there is no impropriety in stating in the judgment that separate proceedings will be taken against such witness or party. [p. 98, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the First Subordinate Judge, Sitapur, dated the 17th March 1917.

The Hon'ble Syed Waqir Hasan, the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Pandit Jagmohan Nath Ohak and Babu Bhairon Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Mir Muzaffar Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—On the 5th May 1915 Thakur Amar Singh, defendant No. 1, executed a sale-deed of certain property for a sum of Rs. 55,000 in favour of Narain Prasad, defendant No. 2. On the same day Thakur Amar Singh executed a deed of mortgage of other property in favour of Narain Prasad for a sum of Rs. 32,000.

The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by Thakur Durga Singh, a member of the same family as Amar Singh for pre-emption of the property sold to Narain Prasad. In his plaint he alleged that he had a preferential claim to purchase the property against defendant No. 2 who was a stranger, that the notice required by section 10 of Act XVIII of 1876 had not been issued, that the amount of the consideration stated in the sale-deed was fictitious and that the real sale price was Rs. 32,000.

The purchaser, Narain Prasad, defended the suit on the ground that as it was admitted that over Rs. 62,000 was due to him from the vendor, the plaintiff was not entitled to dispute the correctness of the consideration stated in the sale deed and that the consideration was in fact Rs. 55,000.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that as both the sale-deed and the mortgage-deed were executed on the same day for the purpose of paying off a number of old debts due from the vendor to the purchaser, the two documents must be considered as portions of a single transaction. He has further found that certain of the items mentioned as consideration for the mortgage had been fraudulently entered for the purpose of swelling the total amount of the debt due to Narain Prasad and thereby enabling a fictitious price to be entered in the sale-deed, that two of the items mentioned in the sale-deed are also fictitious, that the actual price agreed upon between the vendor and the vendee was Rs. 35,000, which was in fact the fair market value of the property. On these findings he has given the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 35,000. Against this decree Narain Prasad has appealed.

The points taken in arguing the appeal are that the lower Court was not right in the present suit in discussing the genuineness of the consideration entered in the mortgage-deed, that in fact the consideration entered in the sale-deed was genuine and that the property which the plaintiff seeks to pre-empt was sold for Rs. 55,000.

The sale deed and the mortgage-deed were executed at the same time after a settlement of accounts between the parties for the purpose of paying off all the debts due to Narain Prasad and there can be no doubt that they formed parts of the same transaction. The argument of the learned

NARAIN PRASAD v. DURGA SINGH.

Counsel for the respondent is that the total sum due from Amar Singh to Narain Prasad was inflated in order that a greater consideration than the sum actually agreed upon might be entered in the sale-deed. As pre-emption could be claimed only in respect of the property transferred by virtue of the sale-deed, the parties would naturally, if they wished to defeat a claim for pre-emption, enter only such items in the sale-deed as they might hope to be able to prove to be genuine and the items by which the total amount due was inflated would naturally find place in the mortgage-deed. In other words, Narain Prasad for the purpose of preventing pre-emption would be prepared to accept by the sale-deed property worth only Rs. 35,000 in complete discharge of debts amounting to Rs. 55,000, if at the time Amar Singh agreed to increase the mortgage-debt by a similar amount. The plaintiff-respondent would be entitled to show that although all the items mentioned in the sale-deed represent actual debts due from the vendor, yet there was an agreement between the vendor and the purchaser by which the latter was compensated for accepting property of admittedly less value in complete discharge of those debts, as such an agreement between the purchaser and the vendor would be the strongest evidence that the price fixed in the sale deed was not fixed in good faith. It would follow, therefore, that in the present instance as the sale-deed and the mortgage-deed are parts of the same transaction, the plaintiff-respondent would be entitled to show that the consideration entered in the mortgage-deed had been inflated by the inclusion of fictitious items, especially when the price stated in the sale-deed is admittedly very much greater than the ordinary market value of the property. As, however, we are of opinion that apart altogether from a consideration of the mortgage-deed two of the items mentioned as consideration in the sale-deed itself are fictitious and that, therefore, that price has not been fixed in good faith, it is unnecessary for us further to discuss whether the consideration of the mortgage-deed has also been inflated. The two items to which we refer are:—first, the item of Rs. 2,515-5-6, which is stated to be composed of the sum of Rs. 700 due on account of the value of the stamp used in the mortgage-deed of the 21st of July 1891 with interest thereon and, secondly, a portion of the item of Rs. 5,716-10, said to be due for increased amount of revenue of village Mankapur from the 21st July 1894 with interest. The learned Subordinate Judge has found both these items fictitious and we have no hesitation in agreeing with him. The learned Advocate for the appellant would urge with regard to the first item that it represents a real debt, as in paragraph 9 of the mortgage-deed of the 21st of July 1891 it is stated that in addition to the amount for which the mortgage was executed, Rs. 700 was further owed to the mortgagee on account of the price of stamp and other registration expenses and that a separate document will be executed for that amount; and he further points out that there is no evidence of the re-payment of this debt. It is admitted that no deed was executed for this debt and it is difficult to believe that had the debt not been paid off, the creditor who is a money-lender would have allowed it to remain outstanding for 24 years without obtaining some document or security for it and without at any time demanding payment. In the case of Oswald v. Legh (1) it was held that where a period of twenty years has been allowed to elapse without any demand, that fact of itself gives rise to a presumption that a bond has been paid off. We find that subsequent to 1891 there were many transactions between the parties and that earlier debts were incorporated in subsequent deeds but nowhere is there any mention whatsoever of this debt. There is also no evidence that in the creditor's account books this debt has been carried forward after the year 1903. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that other debts have also not been carried forward in the accounts, but we are unable to say whether this contention is correct or not, as all the account books have not been produced. In the peculiar circumstances of the case it was certainly for the appellant to explain why the item had not been carried forward in his accounts after the year 1903. The learned Advocate for the appellant also urges that the plaintiff-respondent should have examined Amar Singh as he would have been the best witness to say whether the debt had been paid or not, but the plaintiff-respondent's case was that the vendor and the vendee were acting in collusion to defeat his claim for pre-emption. We think that the plaintiff-respondent was justified in not citing the vendor as one of his witnesses. We find that there had been a previous litigation with regard to a 4-annas share of the same village between the plaintiff on one hand and the vendor and the vendee on the other hand, in which the plaintiff had been successful and had obtained a decree for possession of the 4-annas share with mesne profits thereon, and in that suit he had been opposed by both the vendor and the vendee. He, therefore, had good reason, apart altogether from his collusion with the vendee in the present case, to suppose that the vendor was unlikely to give evidence in his favour and the fact that the debt, even if it had not been re-paid, would have been time-barred over 20 years ago, is also a clear indication that it has not been entered in the sale-deed in good faith.

With regard to a portion of the item of Rs. 5,716-1-0 for the increased revenue of village Mankapur from 21st of July 1894 it is admitted by the learned Advocate for the appellant that this amount is not correct, but it is urged that a bona fide mistake was made without any intention to defraud. It is urged that at the time of preparing the account the appellant had not all his account books before him and that a mistake was, therefore, possible. We find ourselves unable in the circumstances to accept this argument. We have pointed out that there had been a previous litigation between the vendee and the plaintiff respondent with regard to a 4 annas share of this village and in that litigation the plaintiff-respondent had been successful. The vendee knew that the plaintiff-respondent was entitled to claim pre-emption and in the circumstances the probabilities are that the vendee would do his utmost to defeat such a claim. In any case one would have expected that in preparing the account of the amount due from the vendor he would have prepared it from his account books. We find that although enhanced revenue from the year 1894 has been included, no enhancement in fact was made up to the year 1900 and the account books of the appellant show that the revenue of Rs. 335 8-0 entered in the mortgage-deed of 1891 is the exact amount that was paid every year up to 1900. On these considerations we hold that the whole item of Rs. 2,615-5-6 and a considerable portion of the item of Rs. 5,716-1-0 entered in the consideration are fictitious.

In order to determine whether the price entered in the sale-deed has been fixed in good faith, we are entitled to examine whether there is any very great difference between the price and the market value of the property. If the price entered in the sale deed greatly exceeds the market value, that fact would be relevant to the issue of good faith [Dwarka v. Ludar (2), Ram Sarup Sahu v. Karam Ullah Khan (3)]; but it would, of course, be open to the vendee to show special circumstances which induced him to pay a fancy price for the property. In the present case admittedly the ordinary market value of the property is not more than Rs. 35,000, while the price entered in the sale deed is no less than Rs. 55,000. The reasons alleged by the vendee why he was willing to pay such a very high price are that his old debts were being paid off, that the village borders on one of his own villages, that there is a metalled road through the village and that as there is a Kothi of Raja Swami Dayal Seth at Lalpur near the village, he wanted to build a house for himself close to that Kothi for safety's sake. These reasons do not seem to us to be at all adequate and we do not think it at all likely that the appellant merely on these grounds would have been willing to accept property worth not more than Rs. 35,000 in full discharge of debts amounting to Rs. 55,000.

We, therefore, hold that the price entered in the sale-deed was not fixed between the parties in good faith and it follows, therefore, under section 13 of Act XVIII of 1876 that the market value of the property must be taken as the pre-emption price. The market value is certainly not more than Rs. 35,000, as the annual profits amount only to about 3 per cent.

of this sum and the learned Advocate for the appellant has not attempted to show that the property is worth more than this.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

We have been asked by the learned Counsel for the appellant to expunge the note at the end of the lower Court's judgment, in which it is stated that after the decision of the appeal that Court will consider the propriety of issuing notices to Bhola Nath and Partab Narain to show cause why they should not be prosecuted under certain sections of the Indian Penal Code. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the unregistered promissory notes which were mentioned in the mortgage-deed were fictitious and Partab Narain, who was the scribe of the notes, himself gave evidence that they were written on the date of the sale-deed and were antedated. If a Court in the course of its judgment finds that a witness has given false evidence or that a party has rendered himself liable to criminal proceedings, there is no impropriety in stating in the judgment that separate proceedings will be taken against such witness or party. In deciding this appeal we have not discussed the genuineness of the unregistered promissory notes referred to. Without expressing any opinion as to whether a prosecution should be instituted or not, we see no reason for holding that the lower Court was not justified in recording the note and we, therefore, decline to direct that it should be expunged.

Appeal dismissed.

(k)—Bombay Titles to Rent-free Estates Act (XI of 1852)—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Kaji inam—Resumption by Collector—Suit for declaration that order directing resumption is illegal, whether cognisable by Civil Court.

A suit by the holder of a kaji inam, based upon a decision of the Assistant Inam Commissioner under the Bombay Titles to Rent-free Estates Act, 1852, for a declaration that an order of the Collector that the plaintiff should pay certain rent in respect of the inam lands or that the lands should be forfeited is illegal and ultra vires, is cognisable by a Civil Court under section 4 (k) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, and the circumstance that the plaintiff is an alienee from the original grantee does not take the suit out of the provisions of the clause. [p. 99, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 264 of 1916, confirming the decree passed by the Assistant Judge at Belgaum, in Suit No. 4 of 1915.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. S. Rao and J. G. Rele, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff in this case sues for a declaration that the order of the Collector, dated 2nd June 1914, directing that he should pay certain rent on the lands in question or that the lands should be forfeited, is illegal and ultra vires.

The defendant No. 1 (the Secretary of State for India in Council) and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in whose favour the said order was made contended in the Trial Court that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts was ousted by section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876) and that the order was justified by the rules framed by the Government in 1908 in exercise of the powers conferred by sections 8 and 10, Bombay Act XI of 1852, and Act VII of 1863, section 2, clause (3), regarding the resumption and continuance of service lands.

The Trial Court held that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was not ousted, that the rules did not justify the order of the Collector, and that he was entitled only to levy the full assessment. It accordingly declared that the Collector was not entitled to recover from the plaintiff any sum exceeding the full assessment of the lands in suit and ordered a refund of the sum recovered in excess of the full assessment in pursuance of the Collector's order.

MAHAMADSAHEB APPALAL KAJI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The defendant No. 1 acquiesced in this view before the lower Appellate Court; and the contentions raised by defendant No. 3 as to the validity of the rules in relation to the service lands in question and as to jurisdiction under section 4 (a), paragraph 3, were disallowed by the lower Appellate Court. In the result the decree of the Trial Court was confirmed.

In the appeal before us defendant No. 1 has not raised any objection to the decree appealed from. On behalf of defendant No. 3, who is the appellant here, it is urged that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted under section 4 (a), paragraph 1. The points raised in the lower Appellate Court have not been urged before us on his behalf; and it is not suggested now that the Collector's order is justified beyond the extent recognised by the lower Courts or that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted under section 4 (a), paragraph 3. On behalf of the plaintiff, no objection is taken to the decree so far as it allows the levy of full assessment against him. Thus in this appeal we are not concerned with the merits of the decree passed by the lower Courts, but only with the question of jurisdiction raised by defendant No. 3.

It is urged that the claim relates to property appertaining to the hereditary office of a kasi, which is one of the offices expressly recognised under Act XI of 1852, Schedule B, rule 8, paragraph 1, or which is the office of a village officer within the meaning of section 4 (a), paragraph 1, and that no Civil Court can exercise jurisdiction in relation thereto. But the provision relied upon is subject to the exceptions appearing in the same section. As indicated by the proviso clause (k), if any person claim to hold property wholly or partially exempt from payment of land revenue under an adjudication duly passed by a competent officer under Act XI of 1852 which declares the particular property in dispute to be exempt, such claim shall be cognisable by Civil Courts. In the present case the plaintiff relies upon a decision of the Assistant Inam Commissioner, dated 31st December 1852, and claims in effect that the land in question is wholly exempt from assessment. The Sanad subsequently granted in 1867 is only a formal expression of that decision. Thus the plaintiff's claim is clearly within the scope of the proviso and cognisable by Civil Courts.

It may be that on the merits he may not be able to substantiate his claim fully or at all: but that does not affect the jurisdiction to consider his claim to hold the land wholly free under the decision of the Inam Commissioner.

It is contended, however, that the plaintiff claims as an alienee and not under the person upon whom the inam was conferred under the decision of the Inam Commissioner and that the exception cannot apply to him. The proviso in terms applies to any person claiming exemption from land revenue under an adjudication duly passed by a competent officer under Act XI of 1852. I do not see how an alienee can be treated as being outside the scope of the provision. Further the decision of the Inam Commissioner expressly saves the rights of other persons, whose names may not appear in the decision, and it is made clear that the decision should be taken to mean how long the land is to be continued free from assessment.

In this view of the matter it is not necessary to consider the effect of section 5 (a), which has been relied upon by the plaintiff as saving the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in a suit like the present. The plaintiff's contention is that his suit is against Government to contest the amount claimed and recovered as land revenue on the ground that such amount is in excess of the amount authorized in that behalf by Government. He further contends that the amount claimed and recovered under the Collector's order is land revenue within the meaning of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, and that it is in excess of the amount authorised by Government under Act XI of 1852 or under the Sanad. On the other side it is contended that the amount must be deemed to have been authorised under the rules framed by the Government in 1908 and that section 5 (a) cannot save the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts. The plaintiff's contention is not without force. But as I have said, it is not necessary to decide this question. The only point raised on behalf of the appellant as to the jurisdiction of the Court fails.

The question relating to the meaning of 'resumption' of an inam under Act XI of 1852 in respect of service lands pertaining to any hereditary office useful to the village community as distinguished from the State has been incidentally argued. But it does not affect the point of jurisdiction in any way. It is really a point touching the merits of the Collector's order; and neither party has objected to the decree under appeal on merits. It is not, therefore, necessary to express any opinion about it.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court confirmed.

The appellant to pay the costs of respondent No. 2. Respondent No. 1 to bear his own costs.

Defendants brought a suit to establish under-proprietary rights in 1868. Their claim was rejected but they were given a lease of the village for the term of the settlement. Through some mistake, however, the decree was not given effect to and when the Settlement Khewat came to be prepared a year later, an entry of under-proprietary right was made in their favour. The khewat was proclaimed for objections and none were made, and on all subsequent occasions the defendants claimed to be under-proprietors. In 1887 their claim was resisted by the person in possession of the estate, but it was upheld, and on other occasions it was either explicitly or tacitly admitted. The settlement came to an end in 1896, but the defendants continued to be treated as under-proprietors and on two occasions they asserted a transferable right by mortgaging portions of the land. In 1915 the plaintiff for the first time questioned the right of the defendants to be regarded as under-proprietors:

Held, that after the expiry of the settlement the defendants were in adverse possession of the village claiming title as under-proprietors, and that their title had been perfected by prescription. [p. 102, col. 2; p. 104, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

KANHAIYA L. L. A. J. C.—The dispute in this case relates to the village Kusehti which forms part of the Surajpur Estate, of which the plaintiff is the proprietor. The defendants claim under-proprietary rights in the said village. In a suit brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of arrears of rent against the defendants in respect of the village it was held by the Revenue Court that the former was not entitled to claim interest on the arrears, as the latter were under proprietors. The present suit was, therefore, filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that the defendants had no right of any kind, proprietary or under-proprietary, in the village. The defence was that the defendants and their ancestors had been in possession of the village as under-proprietors and had been effecting mortgages of their interest therein within the knowledge of the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-title, that the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-interest had been admitting the title of the defendants as under-proprietors in many proceedings and that the claim was barred by time.

The Court below decreed the claim, and the main questions for determination in this appeal are whether the defendants have acquired an under proprietary title by dint of adverse possession from more than 12 years and whether the claim is barred by limitation. It is conceded that the claim brought by Bhagwandin Singh, Dalip Singh and Durga Singh, the ancestors of the defendants, on the 25th February 1868 for a sub-settlement of the village was dismissed and that by virtue of a compromise to which the ancestors of the defendants and the then Taluqdar of the Surajpur Estate were parties, the only relief granted to the former was that they were entitled to hold a theka or lease of the village for the term of the regular settlement on a rental of Rs. 1,200 per year (Exhibit 10). The order then passed appears, however, to have been for some reason or another disregarded when the settlement record came to be prepared, for they were recorded in the pukhtadari khewat of Mauza Kusehti, which forms a part of the settlement record, the preparation of which was completed on the 16th November 1869, as pukhtadars liable to pay a jama or revenue of Rs. 1,200 per year (Exhibit D87).

On the 3rd April 1868 the then Taluqdar of Surajpur Estate brought to the notice of the Settlement Court that Bhagwandin Singh, Dalip Singh and Durga Singh were not entitled to pukhtadari rights in the village but had erroneously stated in their application for execution that they had got a decree for pukhtadari rights (Exhibit 12), and on the 7th April 1868 an order was passed by the Settlement Officer that they had been granted only thekadari rights and not pukhtadari rights (Exhibit 11). This order was communicated through the Sadar Munsarim to the decree-holders (Exhibit 16), and it is difficult to understand how in spite of the decree which was absolutely clear and the order above referred to, the names of the decree-holders came to be entered in the settlement records as pukhtadars.

The fact, however, remains that that entry remained unchallenged for the entire period of the settlement and, on the persons entered as pukhtadars dying, mutations of names were effected from time to time in favour of their heirs (Exhibit D2). That was not all. In 1869 the wajib-ul-arz of Mauza Kusehti described as an under-proprietary village was prepared, wherein it was mentioned that the holders thereof had obtained a decree for thekadari rights as under-proprietors (digri thekadari matahti) on the 25th February 1868 and a settlement of under-proprietary rights was stated to have been made with them for thirty years with effect from Kharif 1867 to Rabi 1897 and afterwards till the pleasure of the Government on a jama of Rs. 1,200 per annum, out of which the Taluqdar was to pay Rs. 650 to the Government and appropriate the remaining Rs. 550 himself (Exhibit D1). This wajib-ul-arz was probably dictated by the persons then living in the village who had claimed under-proprietary rights and may not be entitled to much weight in face of the terms of the decree which are clear and specific, but it affords evidence of the fact that even then the ancestors of the defendants were claiming under-proprietary rights and had an impression that they had obtained a decree for thekadari rights as under-proprietors.

In 1887 the village was attached in execution of a decree obtained by Jagannath against Rani Chhabraj Kuar, the widow of Mahpal Singh and the mother of the present plaintiff. Sant Bakhsh Singh, Gajraj Singh and Darshan Singh, the present defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 5, and Durga Singh, the father of present defendants Nos. 3 and 4, filed an objection, claiming that they held the village in under-proprietary right. The Counsel who appeared for the judgment-debtor, Rani Chhabraj Kuar, admitted the title of the objectors and stated that they were under-proprietors paying Rs. 1,200 per year, out of which Rs. 650 were for revenue and Rs. 550 for Taluqdari right. On the 19th March 1887 that objection was allowed and it was held that the rights of the objectors could not be put to sale and that the decree-holder was entitled to the sale of the right of the Taluqdar to receive Rs. 550 per year only (Exhibit D5). It is not clear how the estate of Rani Talewand Kuar, who was the Taluqdar of the Surajpur Estate when the decree of the 25th February 1868 was granted, passed to Rani Chhabraj Kuar, the mother of the plaintiff. At the time when Act I of 1869 was passed Raja Udit Pratap Singh was shown as the owner of the Surajpur Estate in the lists appended to that Act. He was probably succeeded by Rani Talewand Kuar and later on by Mahpal Singh, the father of the plaintiff. During the minority of the plaintiff, the estate was, according to the Gazetteer of the Bara Banki District, page 90, under the management of the Court of Wards and Rani Chhabraj Kuar could only have been in possession of the village under some assignment from Mahpal Singh or as a guardian of the plaintiff before the Court of Wards took charge of the estate. The order above mentioned restricting the sale to the right of the Taluqdar to receive Rs. 550 per year is, in the absence of proof as to the nature of the interest held by the objectors of no value except as an assertion.

SHEO DAYAL v. PIETHIPAL SINGH.

under-proprietary rights by or on behalf of the present defendants within the knowledge of the person then in possession.

During the period the Court of Wards held possession of the estate on behalf of the plaintiff receipts were granted to the defendants for rent paid by them, wherein their status as pukhtadars was acknowledged (Exhibits D60 to D67). These receipts were executed in 1893, 1894 and 1895. At the last settlement the revenue payable in respect of the village was raised to Rs. 780 per year and the rent payable by the defendants was similarly raised from Rs. 1,200 to Rs. 1,330 per year (Exhibit D2). With the expiry of the preceding settlement the lease granted to the predecessors-in-title of the defendants by the decree of the 25th February 1868 terminated and a new Record of Rights was prepared in which the defendants were declared liable for a higher rental. The Court of Wards in charge of the estate of the plaintiff sued them for arrears of rent treating them as under-proprietors (Exhibit D6). In May 1903 and again in August 1912 Jagannath Singh, one of the defendants, mortgaged some land with Satrohan Singh (D. W. No. 3) with possession.

The right of the defendants to hold possession of the village as under-proprietors was questioned for the first time in the suits for arrears of rent brought by the plaintiff in 1915 (Exhibits 1 and 2). But by virtue of the possession held by the defendants under an assertion of under-proprietary title from the time of the expiry of the lease, granted by the decree of the 25th February 1868, they acquired an adverse right which it is no longer open to the plaintiff to question. Whatever might be said against the right of the Court of Wards to bind the ward by an admission of title not justified by the circumstances, the plaintiff cannot escape responsibility for not having challenged the right of the defendants to hold possession of the village as under proprietors after he assumed the direct management of the estate. The principle of holding over does not apply, because from the time of the first Regular Settlement when the ancestors of the defendants were entered as pukhtadars, the defendants and their ancestors did not pay rent otherwise than as pukhtadars and the defendants have continued doing the same since the last settlement when the rent was enhanced. The defendants have enjoyed possession of the village under an open assertion of under-proprietary title from more than twelve years prior to the suit.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff dismissed. The defendants appellants will get their costs here and hitherto from the plaintiff respondent.

DANIELS, A. J. C.—I agree with my learned colleague that the defendants appellants have established their claim to under-proprietary right by adverse possession. The facts of the case have been sufficiently stated by him and I need not re-state them. The plaintiff-respondent relies exclusively upon the proceedings of 1867-8 and I agree that the result of those proceedings was that the appellants got a decree as thekadars for the term of the settlement and that the under proprietary right which they claimed was not decreed. Through some mistake, however, the decree was not given effect to and when the Settlement Khewat came to be prepared a year later, an entry of under-proprietary right was made in their favour. There is an order on the khewat itself (Exhibit D 87) that it should be proclaimed for objections on the spot for one month, but it is clear that no objection was made. In this khewat the appellants were definitely recorded as under-proprietors. The word "pukhtadar" is used throughout the proceedings as the vernacular equivalent of "under-proprietor". In the very papers on which the respondent relies, e. g., Exhibit 19, the appellants' claim is described as "a claim for pukhtadari right."

There is, however, no direct evidence to show that the respondent was aware of the entry and it is possible for him to plead ignorance of it. We find, however, that on every subsequent occasion of which we have any evidence the defendants claimed to be under-proprietors and their claim was either upheld or admitted. The evidence falls into four groups:—

- (1) the proceedings of 1887,
- (2) evidence relating to the period when the estate was managed by the Court of Wards on behalf of the plaintiff,
- (3) settlement proceedings of 1896-7,

SHEO DAYAL v. PIETHIPAL SINGH.

(4) subsequent acts of the defendants dealing with the property as property in which they had a heritable and transferable right.

These last are of minor importance but the statement of evidence will be incomplete without them.

As regards the proceedings of 1887 we do not know precisely under what title Musammât Ohhabraj Kuar held the village. It is clear that she cannot have been acting merely as guardian of the plaintiff, or this fact must have appeared on the face of the proceedings.

In the absence of evidence as to the nature of Musammât Ohhabraj Kuar's title it cannot be contended that the order recognizing the defendants as under-proprietors is binding on the plaintiff, but it is relevant under section 13 of the Evidence Act and is of some importance as showing that as far back as 1887 the appellants not only asserted the under-proprietary right which they now claim but asserted it successfully against the person then in possession of the estate. Persons of the status of the appellants are no doubt at a disadvantage when litigating with a wealthy Taluqdar, but it would certainly have been better if they had produced evidence to show exactly under what title Musammât Ohhabraj Kuar was at that time in possession of the village.

During the period when the Court of Wards held possession of the estate on behalf of the plaintiff, receipts were granted to defendants for the rent paid by them (Exhibits D 60 to D 67). In these receipts the defendants' status as under-proprietors was acknowledged. The receipts produced were for the years 1893, 1894 and 1895. The learned Subordinate Judge considers this evidence as if it were a gratuitous admission of title made by the Court of Wards to the prejudice of their ward which can, therefore, be ignored. This is not a fair way of looking at the matter. The Court of Wards would be the last body to gratuitously abandon any right to which it was entitled. It frequently goes out of its way to assert rights which under the looser management of the previous holder had been allowed to slumber. On the other hand, just because the Court of Wards keeps more careful records and has always enforced a system of counterfoil receipts, it is easier to get evidence of the condition of things under its regime than when an estate is managed by the owner. The value of these receipts lies in the evidence they afford as to the footing on which the defendants were treated when the Court of Wards took over the estate. It is clear that they were regarded as under-proprietors and not as mere tenants.

However much it might be open to the plaintiff to claim that in face of his decree he could not be prejudiced by the adverse entry in the first Regular Settlement, that settlement came to an end in the year 1893 or 1897 and in the new settlement a Sub-Settlement Khewat was prepared in which we find the names of the defendants recorded. Their father Durga Bakhsh Singh is also shown as lambardar from the year 1887. The annual sum payable by them to the Taluqdar was enhanced from Rs. 1,200 to Rs. 1,330 and is shown as made up of two items, Rs. 770 revenue and Rs. 550 malikana. This entry clearly shows that they were treated as under proprietors. It is hardly possible for the plaintiff to contend that he was unaware of these proceedings or that they did not constitute an assertion of adverse title against him.

To sum up the matter, the appellants, though described in the proceedings as ex-proprietors, certainly failed in 1868 to establish their claim for under-proprietary right. Through some mistake, however, the decree was not given effect to and when the Settlement Khewat came to be prepared a year later, an entry of under-proprietary right was made in their favour. The khewat was proclaimed for objections and none were made, but there is no direct evidence to show that the plaintiff was aware of the entry and it is possible for him to plead ignorance of it. We find, however, that on every subsequent occasion of which we have any evidence the defendants claimed to be under-proprietors. When their claim was resisted by the person in possession of the estate, as happened in 1887, the claim was upheld. On other occasions it was either explicitly or tacitly admitted. It was recognised when the Court of Wards was managing the estate on behalf of the plaintiff. In 1896 the settlement came to an end. If the rights which the defendants were holding were no more than those which were given by the decree of 1868, those rights came to an end with the expiry of the settlement. We should expect to find either that the Taluqdar gave them a fresh lease or that he ejected them or that he allowed them to hold over on the same rent. None of these things happened. We find the Settlement Officer treating them as under-proprietors and enhancing the revenue payable by them (it is explicitly so described in the sub-settlement register) from Rs. 650 to Rs. 780. It is in accordance with what has preceded that we find the defendant Jagannath Singh in 1903 and again in 1912 asserting a transferable right by mortgaging a portion of the land in suit. The evidence leaves no doubt that at any rate since the year 1893 the defendants have been claiming under-proprietary right to the knowledge of the plaintiff and that their title, however defective originally, has been perfected by adverse possession.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff dismissed. The defendants-appellants will get their costs here and hitherto from the plaintiff-respondent.

Appeal allowed.

Co-sharers in well, rights of—Right to irrigate lands through lands belonging to co-sharer, extent of—Presumption.

Where several persons are joint owners of a common well, it is implied in their covenant of partnership in the well that each co-sharer shall have a right to take water through the more adjacent fields. The line of irrigation, once determined, cannot be altered at the caprice of any co-sharer; and it is a fair presumption that the shortest line of lead would be that selected by the co-sharers.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 16th Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Muhammad Iqbal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the question was whether the plaintiff had irrigated his fields through the water channel along the line A. B. which skirts defendant's field.

The trial Court held that there was no sign of a water-course at the line A. B., but concluded that plaintiff had irrigated his fields not through any defined channel but by flow over the whole of defendant's field (Kiarawar).

The District Judge found the evidence contradictory and came to no definite conclusion whether a water-course had existed at A. B., but he found that even if the plaintiff had used a channel along A. B. he had not used it for so long that an easement had been created in his favour.

Now the parties are joint owners of a common well and in such cases it is implied in their covenant of partnership in the well that each co-sharer shall have a right to take water through the more adjacent fields; if then the plaintiff can establish that he did take water through the channel A. B., it must be taken that he did so in consequence of the implied agreement between the co-sharers.

It does not follow that the line of irrigation, once determined, can be altered at the caprice of any co-sharer, but it is a fair presumption that the shortest line of lead would be that selected by the co-sharers.

What the learned District Judge then has to decide is whether the plaintiff had been regularly watering his fields from the channel A. B. If the finding is in the affirmative, plaintiff has a right to a continuance of that channel, even though he cannot prove an user of 20 years.

For these reasons I accept the appeal, set aside the lower Appellate Court's decree and remand for fresh decision after a clear finding on the point indicated has been arrived at.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the recovery of money due on a promissory note alleged to have been executed by Bindeshri and Dwarka, Ratai being their surety. Bindeshri denied having executed the said promissory note. The Court of first instance found against him, but the lower Appellate Court found that the execution of the said promissory note by Bindeshri was not satisfactorily established. So far as Bindeshri is concerned that finding is conclusive and the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief as against him.

Dwarka, on the other hand, admitted having executed it. He pleaded payment but was unable to establish that plea. Ratai similarly admitted having executed the promissory note as a surety. The claim was decreed by the Court of first instance against both of them. No appeal was filed by them, but the lower Appellate Court dismissed the claim as against them also. The plaintiff wants that the decree passed against Dwarka and Ratai, who had not appealed to the lower Appellate Court, be restored. Dwarka has since died and his legal representatives have not been brought on the record. A decree can, therefore, be passed only against Ratai. He was a surety, but the abatement of the appeal as against Dwarka does not necessarily imply that the debt payable by him is extinguished or discharged. The liability of the surety continues.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim decreed with costs and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till payment against Ratai. As against Bindeshri the appeal will stand dismissed with costs here and hitherto.

Messrs. G. S. Mulgaonkar, A. G. Desai and M. H. Vakil, for the Appellants.

Mr. Coyajee (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiff sues for a declaration that he is the full owner of the land in suit and of the khatibgiri right appertaining to them, for an injunction prohibiting the defendants from recovering Rs. 450 annually from him and for a refund of Rs. 750 recovered by the defendants.

It is alleged that Fakrudin valad Mohamed Kasimsaheb was originally the khatib in Hangal and that as such he held certain lands in inam. These lands were allowed to remain with him in 1856 by the Inam Commissioner under Act XI of 1852. Under circumstances detailed in the plaint the lands and the khatibgiri came to be alienated to the plaintiff's father in 1864 by Fakrudin's daughter-in-law Pachhabi. Thereafter the plaintiff claims to have enjoyed the lands free from assessment and performed the services as khatib until the Commissioner (Southern Division) made an order on the 23rd September 1911, directing that the full economic rent be recovered from the present plaintiff and be paid to Mahomed Hanif (defendant No. 3) as long as he officiated as khatib on behalf of the inamdar. The Commissioner made this order under the rules framed by the Government in 1908 under Act XI of 1852 and Bombay Act VII of 1863, section 2, clause (3), and their general powers. The plaintiff now claims reliefs in this suit on the footing that the said order of the Commissioner is invalid and not binding upon him and that the alienation in favour of his father is good. The plaintiff also claims as an heir to Pachhabi.

It is not necessary to note all the defences, which may be gathered from the several issues framed by the lower Court. Three issues out of them were taken up as preliminary issues. Two out of these three issues were dropped as having been unnecessarily framed. The only preliminary issue considered and decided by the lower Court relates to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit. The lower Court held that the suit was barred by section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, and accordingly dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and has urged in support of the appeal that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is not ousted by section 4 (a) and that the suit is covered by the exception indicated in the proviso, clause (k) of section 4, and is also saved by section 5 (a) and (b). On behalf of the defendants it has been contended that the jurisdiction of the Courts is ousted under the first, second and fourth paragraphs of section 4 (a) and that clause (k) does not apply as the plaintiff is only an alienee, and further that the claim relating to the khatibgiri service is not covered by the proviso. Further it is contended that section 5 (a) does not apply as the amount ordered by the Commissioner to be recovered as the economic rent is really the amount authorized by the Government and that, therefore, there is no excess such as is contemplated in the first part of section 5 (a). Section 5 (b), it is urged, cannot apply to the present suit, as it relates not merely to a claim between private parties but to a claim against Government.

In the present case there can be no doubt that in 1856 the lands in question were continued as the permanent official emolument of the hereditary office of a khatib in inam under the decision of the Inam Commissioner. The office of khatib, though not expressly mentioned in Act XI of 1852, Schedule B, rule 8, clause 1, is one of the type contemplated by that clause and not by the 5th provision of that rule. The plaintiff no doubt claims the right to officiate as a khatib; but his suit in substance is to establish his right to hold the land free from assessment. It is common ground that the Hereditary Offices Act (III of 1874) does not apply to this office. The fact that the Commissioner has acted under the rules framed by the Government under Act XI of 1852 also confirms the view that Act III of 1874 has no application. The claim may be treated as relating to property appertaining to the hereditary office of khatib recognized under Act XI of 1852 under the first paragraph or in part as a claim to perform the duties of the office under the second paragraph or as relating to lands declared by Government or any officer duly authorized in that behalf to be held for service under the last paragraph of section 4 (a) of Act X of 1876. These provisions are, however, subject to the exceptions mentioned in the section. The plaintiff's claim to hold the land wholly or partially free from payment of land revenue under an adjudication duly passed by a competent officer under Act XI of 1852 is cognizable in the Civil Courts under clause (k) of the proviso to the same section. I do not think that the circumstance that he claims as an alienee takes the case out of the proviso. It is not necessary to consider the further argument based on section 5 (a), though I am by no means satisfied that the present suit is not saved under that clause so far as it seeks to get rid of the order of the Commissioner as to the economic rent. The case is very similar to the second appeal which we have just decided, and the point of jurisdiction here must be decided in the same way.

The claim to perform the service as khatib, apart from the claim to hold the lands exempt from the payment of land revenue, stands on a somewhat different footing. That claim is covered in form by the first part of the second paragraph of section 4 (a) and may be in form not cognizable by the Civil Court; but in substance that part of the claim is a matter between private parties. The suit is no doubt against Government and properly so as regards the other reliefs. But this relief by itself could well be treated as falling under section 5 (b). Besides it is a prayer of secondary importance in the suit, the principal thing being the claim as to lands being exempt from the payment of land revenue. It may be that on the merits, as to which I express no opinion, the plaintiff may fail to establish that he is entitled to officiate as a khatib, but the claim is cognizable by Civil Courts.

Several other questions have been argued in this appeal as bearing on the question of jurisdiction. But they are all questions which may affect the merits of the plaintiff's claim and will have to be considered by the lower Court when it comes to deal with the case on the merits. For instance it has been argued that the rules of 1908 under which the Commissioner has acted are not justified by Act XI of 1852, Schedule B, rule 8, clause 5, so far as they are sought to be made applicable to an hereditary office, not falling under the said clause 5. It is further argued that the Sanad relating to the land shows that the land is inalienable and that what is granted is land and that what can be resumed is the land, and not merely the assessment, and further that the Government have the right to determine as to who shall perform the service of khatib. It is also argued that whatever may be the powers of Government with regard to the office, they can only resume what they granted in inam under Act XI of 1852, that is, they may levy full assessment, but they cannot resume the possession of the lands nor can they levy the full economic rent. But these are all questions which touch the merits of the case and do not affect in any way the point with which we are concerned at present.

I would, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Court and remand the suit to that Court for disposal according to law.

Costs up to date to be costs in the suit. Two sets of costs for respondents (one for respondent No. 1 and the other for respondents Nos 2 and 3).

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 3—Pleadings—Mortgage-deed, denial of, effect of—Attestation, whether must be proved.

By putting a plaintiff to proof of the mortgage-deed set up by him, the defendant must be taken to put the plaintiff to proof of its execution, which includes its signing and attestation. [p. 109, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 25th August 1917.

Babu Basudeo Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Haidar Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The questions arising in this appeal are whether the defendant-appellant can be said to have put the plaintiffs-respondents to proof of the proper attestation of the deed on which he is sued and if so, whether proper attestation was proved. The deed is a mortgage-deed, dated the 28th February 1905. It was, therefore, executed nearly 12 years before the date of the suit—a fact which has a bearing on the value of the evidence as to what happened at the time it was executed. The lower Court has found against the defendant-appellant on both the questions stated, that is to say, it has found that the defendant-appellant cannot be said to have put the plaintiffs to proof of proper attestation and that, even if he can be held to have done so, proper attestation was proved.

The first paragraph of the plaint of the plaintiffs-respondents states that the plaintiffs are mortgagees of the defendant's property and the second paragraph sets forth the particulars of the mortgage sued on. To each paragraph the appellant in his written statement has pleaded "not admitted." Three witnesses purport to have attested the deed. One is dead, but the remaining two were produced by the plaintiffs and deposed to the defendant-appellant having signed the deed in their presence and before they signed it. This fact was also sworn to by plaintiff No. 1 himself. The plaintiffs' evidence closed on the 6th of July 1917. On the 19th July 1917 the defendant-appellant applied for the summoning of the Sub-Registrar of Salon who registered the deed, of the scribe of the deed and of a person or scribe who had signed on behalf of one of the three attesting witnesses. On the 20th August 1917 the defendant was examined as a witness for himself for the purpose of rebutting the plaintiffs' evidence as to due attestation. He stated that the deed already bore the signatures of the three attesting witnesses before he affixed his signature as the person executing the deed. This evidence was objected to by the plaintiffs on the ground that the written statement did not contest due attestation, but it was recorded by the learned Subordinate Judge after noting the objection. After giving his own evidence the defendant did not put any of the three witnesses whom he had called into the witness box. To explain the evidence in this case it is necessary to point out that the mortgage-deed sued on bears two separate endorsements of the Sub-Registrar of Salon. One is dated the 20th January 1905 and shows that the deed was presented for registration on that date but refused registration on the ground that Muhammad Fasih, who presented the deed and had produced a mukhtarnama registered at Bhongam, was not entitled by that mukhtarnama to present the document for registration. The other endorsement, dated the 1st March 1905, shows that the deed was presented by the appellant in person and duly registered. It is common ground that on the earlier date Muhammad Fasih brought the deed to the plaintiff No. 1 and requested him to come with him to the Sub-Registrar's office for the purpose of registering it. The plaintiff says that he told Muhammad Fasih after perusing his power-of-attorney that it did not appear to give him power to execute the bond on behalf of the defendant and he should further go and consult the Sub-Registrar whether he could get the document registered. As to this evidence, if the plaintiff doubted Muhammad Fasih's power to execute, it is curious that he should send him to the Sub-Registrar to ask the latter if the document could be registered. It is unfortunate that Muhammad Fasih's power-of-attorney was not put in evidence in this case, but according to the appellant he had given a special power-of-attorney in favour of Muhammad Fasih to execute the deed on his behalf as a general power-of-attorney already given to him did not give him power to execute. I have little doubt that what happened is this. There was no question of Muhammad Fasih's power to sign the deed on behalf of the defendant, that power being given him by the special power-of-attorney. On the other hand the general power-of-attorney registered at Bhongam probably did not contain any power to present for registration. This may be mere conjecture but it squares with the facts. At all events the defendant's evidence is credible, while the evidence of the plaintiffs is not only contradictory in itself but conflicts with the fact that the Sub-Registrar refused to accept the document because Muhammad Fasih had no power to present. To justify the Sub-Registrar's endorsement that Muhammad Fasih was not entitled to present the document, we must infer that Muhammad Fasih attempted to present it. We may further infer that he would not present it for registration unless the deed was already attested. I do not, however, place much reliance on the argument that the Sub-Registrar, before considering whether Muhammad Fasih had power to present for registration, must have noticed that the deed was not attested. This would be presuming something beyond what the evidence justifies in the absence of the Sub-Registrar as a witness. Again the signature of the defendant on the deed is obviously crowded in between the signature of Muhammad Fasih on the extreme left and the signatures of the three marginal witnesses. This obviously suggests that the appellant's signature, was added after the signatures of the attesting witnesses. It is suggested that when the appellant signed the deed to the left of Muhammad Fasih's signature, there may have been entered by the scribe of the deed the words "witness, witness" with a blank under them for the signature of the witnesses and that the appellant cramped his signature in order that it might not extend underneath the word "witness". This appears to me somewhat far-fetched. Even if we assume without proof that scribes do write in ink the words "witness, witness" in anticipation of the signatures of the witnesses, nothing would have been easier than for the first word "witness" to have been altered to the word executant. Both words consist of a letter and a long line. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the evidence of the plaintiffs and their witnesses rebuts the contention of the defendant as to the attesting witnesses having signed before him, and on the strength of this evidence rejected the defendant's contention which seemed to him to be based on the mere assumption that the deed was complete when presented to the Sub-Registrar. I have, however, shown that the defendant's contention was not based on a mere assumption but was supported by two strong and distinct probabilities, namely, that a person will not present for registration a document which is obviously incomplete for want of attestation and that a person signing a deed as executant will not cramp in his signature unless the space has been restricted by something following the place he signs. I have also shown that the plaintiff No. 1's evidence is self-contradictory, where he says that he doubted Muhammad Fasih's power to execute and so sent him to find out if he could present. The cumulative effect of these two probabilities mentioned in my mind entirely outweighs the plaintiffs' evidence. The defendant was not bound to produce the Sub-Registrar or the scribe. It was scarcely likely that they could strengthen his case and they might have weakened it, at least the Sub-Registrar, by prevarication.

The next point is whether the defendant put the plaintiffs to proof of attestation. Order VI, rule 8, has been invoked to support the contention that merely putting the plaintiffs to proof of the mortgage-deed was not sufficient to put them to proof of attestation. This order is not applicable. It produces Order XIX, rule 20, of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England, and the meaning of it is that the plea non est factum or "I do not admit the contract or deed" can only be taken to mean that there was no contract or deed made by the defendant. When this alone is pleaded, the defendant cannot afterwards say that there was a contract but it has no legal effect. By putting the plaintiffs to proof of the mortgage-deed the defendant must be taken to have put them to proof of execution, and execution includes signing and attestation. The plaintiffs produced evidence to prove proper attestation and the defendant was entitled to show that that evidence was false. He was not bound to indicate in his written statement how he proposed to prove that this evidence was false. I think that there is no room for doubt that to save trouble the parties to this mortgage-deed on the 1st March 1905 used the deed already executed and attested on the 28th February 1905. That they were in a hurry to get through the affair on the later date is obvious from the fact that they have even forgotten to cross out the name of Muhammad Fasih as executant, the retention of which was not only unnecessary but was improper after execution by the defendant himself.

It has been represented to me by the respondents' Counsel that if this claim of the plaintiffs is rejected on the formal ground of improper attestation, a grave injustice will be done. I agree that so far as the evidence shows the conduct of the defendant in putting the plaintiffs to proof of attestation is open to strong objection. The plaintiff No. 1 was an old school-fellow of the defendant Muhammad Ibrahim, and it is not pretended that the money secured by the mortgage was not advanced. At the same time it is not possible to hold that a deed which was not properly attested was properly attested merely in order to promote justice. There is one thing that I can do for the plaintiffs, and that is to order that a copy of this judgment be sent to the Collector of Badaun under paragraph 658 of the Oudh Civil Digest. It does not seem desirable that a Deputy Collector employed as Secretary of a District Board (Badaun) should resist his creditors' claim on a merely technical ground. That he has done so would suggest that he is seriously embarrassed.

For the reasons mentioned I allow this appeal and dismiss the suit but direct that the parties bear their own costs in both Courts.

The plaintiffs-respondents have filed cross-objections, but on an objection by the office to the sufficiency of the Court-fee they have withdrawn them. These cross-objections are, therefore, dismissed.

Appeal from the decision of the first class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Civil Suit No. 6 of 1914.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Messrs. Amin, Desai, G. N. Thakor and D. G. Dalvi), for the Appellants.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The plaintiffs in this case claimed to be the illegitimate sons of one Bhiku and sued to recover by partition their 3/5th share in the movable and immovable properties left by Bhiku. The defendant No. 1 is the legitimate son of Bhiku, defendant No. 2 is his grandson, and defendant No. 3 Bhimabai, who died during the pendency of the appeal in this Court, was the widow of Bhiku. Bhiku died in July 1912.

The defence raised was that the parties belong to the Leva Patidar caste, and occupied the same status as the Leva Patidars in Gujarat and that as such they were either Kshatriyas or Vaishyas, but not Sudras, for the purposes of inheritance. The other defence raised was that the mother was entitled to a separate share at the partition.

The first class Subordinate Judge of Dhulia came to the conclusion that the parties were Sudras, and that according to the Hindu Law the illegitimate sons were entitled to half the share of the legitimate son. He also came to the conclusion that the mother was not entitled to a share; and on the footing of these findings he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the equitable partition of the property awarding them 3/5th share as claimed by them.

From this decree the defendants appealed to this Court. The defendant No. 3, as I have said, died during the pendency of this appeal. Two points have been urged in support of the appeal; one is a question of law, and the other is a question of fact.

It is urged that the lower Court is wrong in holding that the mother is not entitled to a share when the illegitimate sons divide the property with a legitimate son and grandson. It is clear, however, that the mother is entitled to a share, when the sons divide the property; and the fact that some of the sons dividing the property are the illegitimate sons of her deceased husband cannot make any difference in the application of the rule relating to the mother's share. The mother is entitled to a share when the sons divide the property, and it does not matter whether the sons are entitled to divide the property equally or unequally. In view of the fact that the mother is now dead, it is pointed out on behalf of the respondents that the points has no practical importance. There had been no actual division of the property at the time of her death: and the lower Court did not award any share to the mother. According to the decision in Raoi Bhikaji v. Anant Laxman (1) it is clear that the extent of the shares of the three illegitimate sons would be the same now. That point, therefore, does not help the appellants in any way.

The second question is whether the lower Court is right in its conclusion that the parties are Sudras. The evidence on this point has been fully discussed on behalf of the appellants, and in view of the fact found by the lower Court as to the customs obtaining in the community to which the parties belong, it is not necessary to examine the oral evidence in detail. It is found by the lower Court that the members of the community to which the parties belong "have no Vedic rites and Sanskaras prescribed for the twice-born classes among them; that they have not the chief Sanskara, Munj, which makes a man Dwija; that they wear the sacred thread only occasionally; that this occasional wearing also is probably of a recent growth; that they have all the customs which one should expect among the Sudras, viz., adoption of a daughter's son, and of a sister's son divorce, Pat marriage, widow re-marriage and non-tonsure of the widows, which are all badges of an inferior or unregenerate caste as observed by the High Court in Gopal Narhar Safray v. Hanmant Ganesh Safray (2).

The fact that the members of this caste do not ordinarily wear any sacred thread and that all the rites which Dwijas may observe are not observed by them is indecisive. It may be said that many members of the Kshatriya and the Vaishya communities, to one of which the parties claim to belong, do not usually wear any sacred thread, and that even they do not observe all the Brahminical rites. The manner in which the ceremonies are performed is also not very helpful in determining whether the parties are Sudras or not. But the finding as to certain customs obtaining among the Leva Kunbis of the place or the district to which the parties belong is far more important. The correctness of the finding is not questioned before us. The fact that the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son is prevalent in this community shows that the parties are Sudras, for it is an established rule in this Presidency that the adoption of a sister's son or a daughter's son or a mother's sister's son is permissible only among Sudras without any proof of a special custom in favour of such adoptions. It is not suggested that the practice is based upon any special custom in this case. It is possible, however, to suggest that such a practice is attributable to a special custom. That could not be said of the practice of divorce, Pat marriage, and widow re-marriage, which supports the conclusion of the lower Court. It is clear that the caste, in which these customs are proved to obtain, can reasonably and properly be treated as Sudras, and the inference of the lower Court based on these facts appears to me to be right.

The oral evidence adduced by the plaintiffs goes to show that the parties are Sudras. In fact one witness, who is an elderly man and a Bhand of the deceased Bhiku, admits that he considers himself a Sudra. The evidence of the school-master (Exhibit 103), which appears to be reliable, helps the plaintiff's case.

The parties are Leva Kunbis residing at Changdev in the East Khandesh District. The evidence led on behalf of the defendants does not appear to me to establish any fact of any real value which could afford a reasonable answer to the inference suggested by the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs. The important witnesses examined on behalf of the defendants are Leva Kunbis of other districts; and their evidence is not of much use. It is urged, however, that apart from the oral evidence historically the Leva Kunbis in the Khandesh District belong to the same stock as the Leva Kunbis of Gujarat, that they migrated from Gujarat some centuries ago, that they must be accorded the same status which the Leva Patidars occupy in Gujarat, and that the Leva Patidars in Gujarat are Kshatriyas or Vaishyas. Several passages from the Bombay Gazetteers, Volume IX, Part I, (Gujarat Population) and Volume XII (Khandesh) have been cited to us to show the origin and history of the Leva Patidars in Gujarat and that the Leva Kunbis migrated to Khandesh some centuries ago. It is needless, in my opinion, to examine these passages in any detail, and to express any opinion as to the status of the Leva Patidars or Kunbis in Gujarat. Assuming for the sake of argument that the community to which the parties belong originally migrated from Gujarat several centuries ago and that the Leva Kunbis of Gujarat are not Sudras, it does not necessarily follow that they have retained in modern times the same customs and status as the Leva Kunbis in Gujarat may have retained. The recent history of the caste, as disclosed in the evidence, shows the adoption of customs, which are indicative of their present status as Sudras, and that in my opinion is sufficient for the purpose of this case. It is to be noted that the caste to which the parties belong, and which used to be described originally as Kunbi caste, has recently been described according to the evidence as Leva Kunbis; and it seems to me that an attempt has been made on behalf of the defendants to show, if possible, a higher status with a view to escape the liability in the present suit. The description of the caste "Pajne Kunbis," which was originally given to this caste, has apparently been changed to "Leva Kunbis" during the last twenty years. It seems to me on the evidence that the caste to which the parties belong are Sudras, whatever may have been the real status of the ancestors who migrated from Gujarat.

It is no doubt true that the test of occupation may be applied in determining the status of a particular caste. If that is applied in this case, it may be urged that the occupation of agriculture does not necessarily indicate that the parties are Sudras, as the occupation of agriculture is permissible to the Vaishya caste according to the ancient texts. But according to those texts agriculture as an occupation was permitted to the Sudras also. It is a matter of common knowledge that among cultivating classes there are many Sudras: and the fact that the Leva Kunbis are generally agriculturists is by itself not sufficient to establish that they are not or cannot be Sudras. The conclusion that the parties are Sudras is supported by the remarks in Steele's Law and Custom of Hindu Castes at pages 101 and 101 relating to Kunbis. I am satisfied that the conclusion reached by the lower Court that the parties in this case are Sudras is correct, and that the special rule laid down in the Mitakshara allowing illegitimate sons certain share in the property of their father must be applied to this case. I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 14th September 1918.

WILAYAT HUSAIN v. ZAMANI BEGAM.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava holding brief of the Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan and Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, J. K. Bannerji and S. Mustafa, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff respondent for the recovery of money due on a deed of mortgage or in the alternative for the possession of the property mortgaged and damages.

The mortgage in question was made by Jafar Quli Khan in favour of Hamid Ali Khan on the 15th February 1890. The property mortgaged was a house situated in Lucknow, which was in the occupation of the tenants of the mortgagor. The mortgage-deed provided for the payment of interest at 1 per cent. per mensem and also contained an agreement that the mortgagor shall deliver possession over the mortgaged house. But in lieu of delivering possession, the mortgagor agreed to secure to the mortgagee a rental of Rs. 10 per mensem on account of the said house. The mortgagee thus got constructive possession over the mortgaged property. He was not, however, paid any rent.

On the 15th January 1893 Jafar Quli Khan and his wife mortgaged the same house along with other property with possession in favour of Musammât Askari Begam. Musammât Askari Begam could not, however, get possession of the house mortgaged until the prior mortgage was redeemed. On the 11th December 1900 the house in question was sold in execution of a simple money decree obtained by Moti Lal against Jafar Quli Khan. It is not clear whether Moti Lal succeeded in obtaining possession.)

On the 27th May 1905 Hamid Ali Khan obtained a decree for sale on foot of his mortgage, making Moti Lal, the auction purchaser aforesaid, a party to his suit. Musammât Askari Begam, the subsequent mortgagee, was not impleaded. In execution of the said decree the mortgaged house was put to auction on the 1st September 1909 and was purchased by the plaintiff-respondent for Rs. 4,100. The plaintiff got possession on the 13th April 1910.

On the 20th September 1909, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3, who are the legal representatives of Musammât Askari Begam, got a decree for sale on foot of the mortgage held by Musammât Askari Begam subject to the prior mortgage of Hamid Ali Khan. To that suit they impleaded the legal representatives of Jafar Quli Khan and the prior mortgagee, Hamid Ali Khan, and Moti Lal, the purchaser of the equity of redemption. A sale was held in execution thereon on the 8th March 1916 and the purchase was made by the decree holders themselves. They got possession. On the strength of that purchase they ousted the plaintiff respondent and obtained possession through Court on the 22nd October 1916.

In the present suit the plaintiff seeks the recovery of the purchase money paid by her with the money spent by her over repairs and the supply of the water connection exclusive of interest chargeable on the above sums. In the alternative she claims possession and mesne profits. Her object is to give the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 an opportunity to redeem the mortgaged property, of which she was deprived when Hamid Ali Khan brought the mortgaged property to sale in execution of his decree in satisfaction of the prior mortgage.

The Court below was of opinion that the plaintiff could not recover anything except the money due on her mortgage. It found that the expenditure said to have been incurred over repairs and over the fitting of the house with the water-connection was not proved nor necessary. On behalf of the defendants-appellants it is urged that in adjusting the accounts the Court below has not proceeded on the right basis, for it has not taken into account the entire rent derived from the house mortgaged. On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent it is argued by way of a cross-objection that the plaintiff was entitled to claim interest from the 1st November 1909 to the 13th April 1910, inasmuch as she did not get possession till the latter date, that she was entitled to claim the money spent over the repairs of the house mortgaged and in connecting it with the water-supply and that the interest awarded as damages from the date on which the plaintiff was dispossessed ought not to have been at a rate lower than that stipulated for in the mortgage-deed.

It is clear from evidence that though the mortgage-deed held by Hamid Ali Khan provided for the delivery of possession over the mortgaged house, the mortgagee did not actually get possession or the rent stipulated for except for a period of 10 or 11 months. The Court below rightly allowed the mortgagee interest due to him on the mortgage up to the 1st November 1909 crediting Rs. 110 on account of the rent realized by the mortgagee during the 11 months he was in possession. The learned Counsel, who appears for the defendants-appellants, does not contest this portion of the finding of the Court below.

It is equally clear that from the 1st November 1909 to the 13th April 1910 the plaintiff is entitled to claim interest at the stipulated rate, for she did not get possession till the latter date. The Court below has erred in disallowing the interest for that period. The amount to which the plaintiff is entitled on that account is Rs. 54-5-4.

The real points of contest between the parties relate to the period during which the plaintiff had been in possession since her purchase. It appears from the evidence of Muhammad Azim Khan and the other witnesses adduced in the case that when the plaintiff got possession, the house was badly out of repair. No tenant was willing to take it unless it was put in proper order. Mr. Fanthome wanted to take it on a rental of Rs. 20 per mensem, if all necessary repairs were carried out and the connection with the water works supplied to make the house comfortable to the tenant. The evidence of Sundar Lal shows that the repairs of the house cost Rs. 675. The fitting of the house with the necessary connection for the supply of water is shown by the evidence to have cost about Rs. 225. The effect of these outlays was that the house was able to fetch a rent of Rs. 20 per mensem. It would be inequitable to disallow to the mortgagee what he spent over the repairs and improvements aforesaid and charge him at the same time with the enhanced rent which he realized in consequence thereof. The learned Counsel, who appears for the plaintiff respondent, states that if the amount spent by his client over the repairs and the improvements aforesaid be allowed to him with interest thereon at the stipulated rate, he would be willing to give credit for the rent which his client realised in excess of the stipulated interest.

Under section 76, clause (d), of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), a mortgagee in possession is not bound, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, to make any repairs which cannot be paid out of the rent and profits of the mortgaged property. The mortgagee did carry out the repairs and improvements in this case with the object of realizing enhanced rent, and it seems equitable that she ought to have the benefit of the enhancement which the money which she had spent had brought about. The approximate amount of the enhanced rent which the plaintiff realized during the period of her possession was Rs. 780. The repairs and water connection cost more. The advantage, if any, is, therefore, on the side of the defendants-appellants. The plaintiff is willing to forego the balance.

The only other point raised in the appeal relates to the amount of damages, which the Court below has awarded to the plaintiff on account of her dispossession. The damages ought not to have been awarded at a rate lower than the interest to which the plaintiff was entitled. In fact she could have claimed the entire rent as damages if no interest was to be allowed to her. The Court below has allowed interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the amount of the purchase-money paid by her, but as pointed out in Gouri Shanker Singh v. Rai Bajrang Bahadur Singh (1), the purchase-money paid by the plaintiff is not to be taken into consideration in assessing the amount of the mortgage money due to the plaintiff. The plaintiff can either get interest on the basis of the mortgage or damages to the extent of the rent of which she was deprived. It would not be equitable to award merely stipulated interest on the principal money, because the money which she has spent over the repairs and improvements would in that case be left out of account. She ought, therefore, to get Rs. 300 as damages for the period of her dispossession.

sion from the 22nd October 1916 to the 21st January 1918.

A question has also been raised as to the form which the decree in this case should take. As the purchaser in execution of a decree on the foot of a prior usufructuary mortgage, the plaintiff has stepped into the shoes of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. As the purchaser of the rights of the mortgagee, she is entitled to enforce the mortgage and to obtain possession of the mortgaged property either by getting a decree for sale or seeking the possession of the mortgaged property. As the purchaser of the rights of the mortgagor, she is not entitled to claim possession, because the mortgagor had already parted with his right to possession in the first instance to Hamid Ali Khan and in the next instance to the predecessor in interest of the defendants-appellants. The only right which was left with the mortgagor after these two mortgages was a right to redeem. The right to possession did not form any part of it so long as the two prior mortgages by which he had parted with that right remained unredeemed. As explained in Sheo Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ghazi-ud-din (2), the rights of a puisne mortgagee cannot be affected by the provisions of a decree to which he was not a party, and a person, who purchases in execution of that decree, can do exactly what the holder of the prior mortgage or the mortgagor could do, no less and no more. As a person who has stepped into the shoes of the mortgagee, the plaintiff-respondent is entitled to possession or to a decree for sale; as a person who has stepped into the shoes of the mortgagor, she is not entitled to possession because the mortgagor had himself parted with that right in favour of the defendants-appellants. A decree for sale would obviate a multiplicity of suits and meet the requirements of this case.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs and the cross objections allowed in so far that the plaintiff-respondent will be entitled to recover Rs. 3,218 5-4 with proportionate costs here and hitherto and future interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum till payment. Six months' time will be allowed for payment. In case of non-payment the mortgaged property will be liable to sale. The decree will be framed in terms of Order XXXIV, rule 4, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and there will be a further decree for Rs. 300 with proportionate costs here and hitherto by way of damages and future interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till payment against the defendants-appellants.

Appeal dismissed; Cross objections allowed.

Hindu Law—Partition, suit for—Manager, whether bound to keep accounts—Expenses during pendency of suit, how to be met.

The manager of a joint family is not obliged to keep accounts while the family remains joint, and when a partition is asked for, partition takes place of the property as it exists in the hands of the manager [p. 116, col. 2.]

When a suit is filed for partition of joint family property, there is a severance of interest from the date of the filing of the suit, and for purposes of inheritance and succession the family members are no longer considered joint, but so far as the family property is concerned, the family is considered as one entity until the moment comes for division, and then each party gets his actual share. In the meantime if there are any expenses which should be properly incurred by the joint family purse, those expenses are taken out of the family property and they cannot be debited to any particular co-parcener. [p. 116, col. 2; p. 117, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the joint first class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Suit No 42 of 1909.

Mr. Jayakar (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for the Appellants.

Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—This was a partition suit filed in 1909. It is not disputed that the plaintiffs on the one hand are entitled to one-half of the plaint properties, while the defendants are entitled to the other half. A preliminary decree was passed, and it was referred to a Commissioner to take the accounts of the family property. On his report the defendants filed certain objections, and again it was referred to a second Commissioner to consider the accounts in the light of defendants' objections and he took the accounts and made up a final balance sheet. The result was as shown in the final decree of the learned Subordinate Judge at page 3 — "The defendants shall pay to the plaintiffs Rs. 4,623 10 0 as mesne profits of the Nipani lands for the years 1905 to 1909. They shall also pay Rs. 2,878-8-0 and Rs. 704 and Rs. 257."

The plaintiffs appealed, and though it does not appear in their objections which they filed what their real objections were to the decree, yet now their Counsel has objected on the ground that the learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt with certain items which were found by the first Commissioner, and objected to by the defendants. In the first place, if it is a fact that the learned Judge omitted to deal with certain items in the account when he was dealing with the Commissioner's report, that ought to have been pointed out to him by the defendants' Pleader. Now five years after the final decree was passed, and without any particulars having been alleged regarding these objections, we are asked to send back the case to the learned Judge so that he may deal with these items, which we are told he has omitted to consider. We are not satisfied by any means that the learned Subordinate Judge omitted to deal with these points, or that they were not dealt with by the second Commissioner. The second Commissioner's report is extremely full, containing every detail of the family property, and at this distance of time it is very difficult for us to say with any degree of certainty that the accounts have not been fully gone into, that all the objections have not been dealt with, and that the learned Judge in dealing with the Commissioners' reports has not fully gone into every item and decided the case after such consideration. We are not, therefore, disposed to accede to the appellants' suggestions, and so far the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Now we have to deal with respondents' cross-objections. They object to the plaintiffs being held entitled to claim mesne profits for the years 1905 to 1909. I do not understand on what principle these mesne profits were allowed by the learned Subordinate Judge. As I have always understood the Hindu Law on the point, the manager of a joint family is not obliged to keep accounts while the family remains joint, and when a partition is asked for, partition takes place of the property as it exists in the hands of the manager. It may be that the opponents may urge that the manager had in his possession family property and that he must account for its disappearance, and that was the case in a suit recently before me on the Original Side. But that was a different matter to asking the manager to account for the rents of the joint family lands, and I think Mr. Rao's contention is correct, and that the learned Judge was wrong in ordering that the plaintiffs should recover their shares of the mesne profits from the defendants.

Then Mr. Rao objected to the marriage expenses of the 1st plaintiff being deducted out of the joint family purse. No doubt from the date of suit there is a severance of interest, and for purposes of inheritance and succession the family members are no longer considered joint. But it does not follow that thereafter, until the joint family property is actually divided, it does remain joint. Otherwise this difficulty would arise that immediately after the suit was filed, the person in charge of the family property would have to open a separate ledger account for each co-parcener, and would have to debit to his account all expenses made on his behalf. It would be necessary to do that if Mr. Rao's contention were correct. I have never heard of any such procedure being followed during the course of partition proceedings. As far as the joint family is concerned, it is considered as one entity until the moment comes for division, and then each party gets his actual share. In the meantime if there are any expenses which should be properly incurred by the joint family purse, those expenses are taken out of the family property, and they cannot be debited to any particular co-parcener. Therefore, in my opinion, the learned Judge was correct as regards those expenses.

Then it has been proved that Rs. 9,429-5-6 were recovered by the Deputy Nazir as guardian of the appellants under a promissory note of the 16th October 1908. The defendants sued to recover their share by a separate suit which was resisted by the appellants successfully, but it was on account of that suit that this particular sum was left out of consideration when taking the account of the joint family property. It is perfectly clear that this is an asset of the joint family property, and that the defendants were entitled to half that amount.

The result of this judgment will be that the item of Rs. 4,626-10 0, which was directed by the order of the lower Court to be paid by the defendants to the plaintiffs, goes out, and defendants have to pay Rs. 3,839-8 0. Against that they will be entitled to recover half of Rs. 9,429-5-6, so that in the end there will be a balance due to them from the appellants. If anything has been paid by the defendants under the decree of the lower Court, the appellants must restore that amount. We make no order as to the costs of the cross-objections.

HEATON, J.—I concur.

Order accordingly.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17, 49—Mortgage—Redemption, proof of—Receipt, unregistered, admissibility of—Possession given to mortgagor, effect of—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 31—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Suit to recover profits of mortgaged land and value of trees cut down by mortgagee, whether cognizable by Civil Court.

No particular form of document is required to redeem a mortgage. [p. 118, col. 1.]

An unregistered receipt cannot in itself be used as evidence of redemption of a mortgage, but the Court is entitled to take it into consideration as evidence of the fact that on a particular date a particular sum was paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and this, coupled with the fact that the mortgagor was put into possession of the property and has continued in possession of it, is good evidence upon which the Court might base its finding that the mortgage has been redeemed. [p. 117, col. 2.]

A suit by a mortgagor, after redemption, to recover from the mortgagee the profits of the mortgaged property and the value of certain trees alleged to have been cut down by the defendant, is exempted from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court by Article 31 of Schedule II to the Small Cause Courts Act and is, therefore, cognisable by a Civil Court [p. 118, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the First Additional Judge, Aligarh, dated the 7th September 1917.

Mr. P. L. Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows. The plaintiff sued to recover one-third of the profits of a grove plus one-third of the value of certain trees which he alleged had been cut down by the defendants. The plaintiff's title was based on his assertion that he had redeemed one-third of the mortgage on the property. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that redemption had not been proved. On appeal the learned Additional Judge of Aligarh allowed the appeal and decreed the suit. On appeal before me the main argument is that the lower Appellate Court should not have admitted in evidence a certain receipt and that if that receipt were not admitted there would be no legal evidence on which the Court could base its findings. The objection to the receipt is to the effect that it had not been registered. Not having been registered, obviously it could not be used in itself as evidence of redemption of the mortgage. It in itself could not in any way affect the mortgage, but I think the lower Court was entitled to take it into consideration as evidence of the fact that on such a date so much money had been paid and that, coupled with the fact that one-third of the mortgaged property was then given into possession of the plaintiff and has been in his possession ever since, was good evidence on which he could find as a fact that the plaintiff had redeemed one-third of the mortgage. No particular form of document is required to redeem a mortgage. That being so, in my opinion the appeal fails. As my decision is open to appeal under the Letters Patent, I proceed to decide a preliminary objection which was raised as to the hearing of this appeal. It was argued by Mr. Panna Lal on behalf of the plaintiff that section 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure barred this appeal as the suit was of the nature of a Small Cause Court suit and its value was less than Rs. 500. On behalf of the appellant it was urged that under Article 31 of the Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) such a suit was exempted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. Mr. Panna Lal relied on a case reported as Bindraban v. Sahodra (1), which was a decision of a Divisional Bench. That case is, however, not very helpful, because neither in the arguments nor in the judgment itself is any reference made to Article 31 of the Schedule, nor are any reasons given in the judgment for the view which was taken. In Sheo Bodh v. Surjan (2) and in Drig Pal Singh v. Kunjal (3) the scope of Article 31 has been considered and it seems to me that according to the view taken in those two rulings this suit would come within the scope of the concluding part of Article 31. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

XXII, r. 3 (2)—Suit, abatement of—Non-survival of right to sue—Costs, award of, out of deceased plaintiff's estate—Discretion of Court.

Courts have a discretion to award costs to a defendant in a case where a suit abates on the cause of action not surviving the death of the plaintiff, out of the deceased plaintiff's estate. The words 'costs of and incident to all suits' in section 35 of the Civil Procedure Code are wide enough to cover such a case. [p. 119, cols. 1 & 2; p. 120, col. 1.]

For the purpose of calculating Pleader's fees such a case should be treated as similar to one dismissed for default of prosecution after framing issues. [p. 120, col. 1.]

"Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Cuddappah, in Appeal No. 261 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Proddattur, in Original Suit No. 721 of 1916.

Civil revision petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the District Court, Cuddappah, in Appeal Suit No. 261 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Proddattur, in Original Suit No. 721 of 1916.

Mr. M. O. Parthasarathy Aiyangar (with him Mr. M. O. Tirumalachariar), for the Appellant.—The Court has a discretion to award costs where the suit abates by the cause of action not surviving on the death of the plaintiff. The language of section 35, Civil Procedure Code, is wide enough to cover the case. It will be a hardship to parties if the Court is not invested with such a power, as no separate suit lies for the recovery of costs as damages. The power to award costs should not be limited to particular classes of cases. See Sakyahani Ingle Rao Sahib v. Bhavani Bozi Sahib (1).

Mr. O. V. Subramanya Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The only statutory provision relating to costs is that found in Order XXII, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code. There is no reference in it to cases of non-survival of the right to sue on the death of a plaintiff. Section 35 should be read as applying to cases where both parties are on the record. Otherwise Order XXII, rule 3, would be superfluous. There is no good ground for awarding costs where the suit fails from no default of the plaintiff or his legal representative.

The Munsif did not exercise any discretion in awarding costs. He has calculated the Pleader's fee as if it was decided after contest. That is wrong.

JUDGMENT.

KRISHNAN, J.—In this second appeal and the civil revision petition two questions have been raised for our decision, namely, (1) whether when a suit abates on account of the death of a sole plaintiff the right to sue not surviving and it is dismissed in consequence, the Court has power to make an order granting defendant's costs out of the estate of the deceased and (2) when such an order is made by the District Munsif, an appeal lies against it to the District Judge at the instance of the deceased's legal representatives.

On the first question the learned District Judge held that the Court had no such power. No doubt, as pointed out by him, the case before us is not one to which Order XXII, rule 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure applies, for that Order does not seem to refer to a case where the right to sue does not survive on the death of the sole plaintiff. Sub rule (2) of rule 3, which in terms authorises the Court to grant costs to the defendant against the estate of the deceased plaintiff, applies only where no application is made within time under sub rule (1) for adding the legal representatives of the deceased as a party, and not to a case where no such application can be made at all. There is no reference in the whole of Order XXII to a case where, on the death of the sole plaintiff, the right to sue does not survive. Order XXII, therefore, cannot be relied on to support the order as to costs in the case before us. This was conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellant.

He relies, however, on section 35 of the Code itself. Under that section, "the costs of and incident to all suits" are in the discretion of the Court and the Court is given full power to decide by whom and out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid. This power exists even where the Court has no jurisdiction over a particular suit. The language of the section is clearly wide enough to cover the present case. It is, however, argued that we should limit the scope of the section to cases where both parties are on the record, as otherwise the provision as to costs in Order XXII, rule 3, clause (2), will be rendered redundant. I do not think the redundancy pointed out is a proper ground for cutting down the scope of the section when there is nothing in its language to justify such limitation. As no separate suit lies between parties to a suit to recover the costs as damages, it stands to reason that a Court should have wide powers in awarding costs in all matters brought before it by parties and we should not, therefore, limit its powers unless it is clear that the Legislature meant to do so in any particular case. I am not, therefore, prepared to limit the scope of section 35 by any implication derivable from the existence of the provision as to costs in Order XXII, rule 3, clause (2). So far as I am aware, the power to grant costs against the estate in cases like the present has never been challenged and the practice has been to grant costs in suitable cases. One such example at any rate has been brought to our notice from the Law Reports. See Sakyahani Ingle Rao Sahib v. Bhavani Bozi Sahib (1). It is true the failure of the suit when plaintiff dies without the right to sue surviving cannot be attributed to any default on the part of the plaintiff or of his legal representative. But on the other hand there may be no reason whatever for mulcting defendants in costs by making them bear their own costs. The question has to be judged in each case as to what would be the proper order as to costs, and the Court must exercise a careful discretion in making its order. But to hold that the Court has no power to deal with costs in such a case in any circumstances will prevent the Court from granting the costs to the defendant, even in a case where it is clear to it that the plaintiff's suit is a vexatious and baseless one, the trial having advanced far enough before the plaintiff's death to draw such an inference.

Being of opinion that the Court has a discretion to award costs to a defendant even in a case where a suit abates on the cause of action not surviving the death of a plaintiff, I consider the decree of the learned District Judge, based entirely on his view that no such discretion exists, must be set aside.

It was argued by the respondents' Vakil that the District Munsif did not himself exercise any discretion in this case and that if he did, it was not a proper one. It is clear from his judgment that, though he thought he had power under Order XXII, rule 3, clause (2), to make the order as to costs, he did exercise a discretion in the matter; that rule also makes it discretionary for the Court to pass such an order. I do not think there is any valid ground for interfering with his discretion in this case. But it has been brought to our notice that in calculating the defendant's costs he has been awarded Pleader's fee in full as if the case had been tried and disposed of. It seems to me this case should be treated for the purpose of calculating Pleader's fee as similar to one dismissed for default of prosecution after framing of issues. Only one-half of the full fee should have been awarded under the rules. With this modification the order of the Munsif as to costs must be confirmed.

In the view I am taking it is unnecessary to express an opinion on the 2nd question raised by the learned Advocate for the appellant. I would allow the second appeal and set aside the decree of the District Judge and restore that of the Munsif with the modification above stated, and allow the appellant his costs in the lower Appellate Court and in the second appeal in this Court from the estate of the deceased Subbamma as the respondents acted as executors of her estate in appealing to the District Court and in supporting the District Judge's decree in this Court. The civil revision petition is dismissed with costs.

In a suit by a husband against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, the cause of action arises in the wife absenting herself from the husband's residence, and, therefore, a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such residence is situate is competent to try such suit.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 27th July 1917.

Mr. M. L. Sandal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff against his wife for restitution of conjugal rights and against three other defendants, praying that an injunction be issued against them not to interfere in any way with the plaintiff's wife coming to reside with him. The suit was brought in the Court of the Munsif of Shahjahanpur. The defendants all reside in the district of Hardoi in the province of Oudh. The Trial Court decreed the suit. The defendants other than defendant No. 1, the wife, appealed. In their grounds of appeal it was urged that the suit was not cognisable by the Court of Shahjahanpur. The same plea had been raised in the Trial Court and formed the subject of an issue. There the Court held, and rightly held, following the ruling of Lalitagar Keshargar v. Bai Surai (1), that the cause of action against the wife arose in absenting herself from the plaintiff's residence, which was in Shahjahanpur. It is not quite clear how the Court had jurisdiction against the other defendants. But I find that neither Court has come to any finding that the present appellants prevented or would in the future prevent the defendant No. 1, the wife, going back to her husband. This being so, I think the appeal must succeed. The result is that I allow the appeal and set aside the decree Appeal from the judgment and decree of the High Court, Bombay, in its Civil Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 13th July 1916, dismissing an appeal from the judgment and decree of that Court (Beaman, J.) in its Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 2nd October 1915, which dismissed a suit brought by the appellants.

FACTS are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. With regard to the question of following the money and notice, the material portions of the original judgment are as follows: "Even assuming that the whole of this Rs. 65,000 had been the plaintiff's money and that Vaidya was holding it in trust for them, it would be necessary, before the Bank could be made answerable to the plaintiff Co. in this suit, to show that the said money had been paid into the Bank definitely earmarked as trust money and as such capable of ascertainment now out of the remaining funds of the Bank with the knowledge of the Bank at the time the payment was accepted.

..... But the case is certainly much complicated when we find that Vaidya is himself Secretary, Treasurer and Managing Agent of the Bank. On the general principle of notice in such cases, there can be little doubt or difficulty. The cases relied on by the defendant Co., viz., Marseilles Extension Railway Co., In re, Credit Foncier and Mobilier of England, Ex parte (1), Hampshire Land Co., In re, Portsea Island Building Society, Ex parte (2), David Payne & Co., Ltd., In re, Young v. David Payne & Co. Ltd. (3) and Coleman v. Bucks and Oxon Union Bank (4), are all very clear and positive upon the point that the knowledge of a Director as a Director, or a Solicitor acting in two capacities, is not necessarily the knowledge of the co-Directors, or of those parties who are respectively employing the Solicitor. But there is no authority, and as far as I can see no case such as I am dealing with has yet arisen, which would go the length of saying that the knowledge of the Secretary, Treasurer and Managing Agent of the Bank is to be imputed to the Bank as a whole. Here, we have to look at the Memorandum and Articles of Association which are Exhibit No. 1 in this case, and it is clear that all the practical business of the Bank is entrusted to the Secretaries, Treasurers and Managing Agents, subject to the general control doubtless of the Board of Directors. But the very use of the term "agent" certainly does suggest that private knowledge fraudulently withheld by such an agent might not necessarily be imputed to the controlling Board, that is to say, the Board of Directors."

TEXAS COMPANY v. BOMBAY BANKING COMPANY.

Bank to be trust money, circumstances which are commonly found to exist in cases following upon the decision in Hallett's Estate, In re, Knatchbull v. Hallett (5). But there certainly are dicta of Jessel, M.R., in that case of the most general character which might be thought to support the plaintiffs' contention that if the Bank be affected with knowledge that the whole of Rs. 65,000 was misappropriated as trust money when put into the Bank by being put to private uses, then the Bank is liable to the defendants (plaintiffs) to make it good out of the larger sums at present in the hands of the defrauding trustees. In the absence of notice, however, it is clear that no such doctrine could possibly assist the plaintiffs in the facts here disclosed. For the payments in themselves do not suggest any misappropriation of trust moneys. They are quite ordinary payments by a man who has a running account in the Bank and is heavily indebted to the Bank at the time. The Bank, as I have said, is under no obligation to inquire whence the money has come. It is not as though Vaidya had a balance to his credit, but he had to pay his own debts. But for the fact that in Mr. Binning's language Vaidya was himself the Bank, the result would evidently be that the plaintiffs had no case whatever. But are they in any better position because of the double character of Vaidya? As Director it is hardly contended that his knowledge would affect the Bank as a whole. That point is too clearly covered by the authority of the cases I have cited. As Manager and Agent is the case any better? Here really comes a question of fact, and if we take the real management of the Bank to be in the hands of the Directors, then I think that that question of fact will have to be answered against the plaintiffs."

Mr. F. D. Mackinnon, K. C. (with him Mr. Hansell), for the Appellants.—The moneys paid into the Bank were the moneys of the appellants, because they were moneys which their agent held in trust for them. The appellants are, therefore, entitled to follow the moneys. The Bank knew that they were trust moneys: Coleman v. Bucks and Oxon

Union Bank (4), David Payne & Co., Ltd. In re, Young v. David Payne & Co. Ltd. (3), Cave v. Cave (6), Kennedy v. Green (7) referred to.

Mr. Upjohn, K. C. (with him Mr. E. B. Raikes), for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The appellants are a Corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of Texas in the United States of America and either owing or having control over extensive oil fields. Their head office for India is in Bombay, and for the purpose of securing distribution of kerosene oil throughout the district of Bengal, they entered into an agreement in writing, on the 25th October 1911, with one Prabhakar Govind Vaidya, whereby he was appointed for five years their exclusive agent for the sale of such oil within the named areas on certain specified terms.

So far as they are material to the present dispute, these terms provided that, on receipt by the Company of an order from the agent for kerosene oil, they would give to him a delivery order for the quantity required in exchange for a deposit by him with the Company of such an amount of certain specified securities as should, at the market rate at the date of the deposit, represent 5 per cent. excess of the market rate of the oil, and that they should have power to realise the securities after seven days' notice of the failure by the agent to remit the sale-proceeds of the oil, in respect of which the deposit was made. The price at which the oil was to be sold by the agent was to be named by the Company from time to time, and the agent guaranteed that the full sale-proceeds should be paid to the Company, his commission being 4 annas per 8 gallons of oil. Sales were to be for cash, credits were to be at the risk of the agent, and the agent expressly agreed to remit to the Company all sale-proceeds directly they became due, without any deduction on any account. The only other material provision of this agreement was clause 23, which is in the following terms:—

"23. The Agent has deposited with the (6) (1880) 15 Ch. D. 639; 49 L. J. Ch. 505; 42 L. T. 730; 28 W. R. 793.

Company the sum of Rs. 5,000 in 5 per cent. Tansa Bonds as a guarantee of good faith, which amount is liable to confiscation by the Company for any breach of any clause of this Agreement and it is hereby expressly agreed and understood that the interest accruing on such Tansa Bonds. Deposit will be paid to the Agent by the Company so long as the Agent faithfully observes and performs the conditions of this Agreement."

The agent proceeded to make this agreement effectual by entering into a series of sub-agency agreements between himself and a variety of people operating in the district, constituting them as agents on terms which provided for a smaller rate of commission but in other respects following the provisions of his agreement with the Texas Oil Company. They are entitled sub-agency agreements; but, except so far as Vaidya is referred to as being the sole agent for the Texas Oil Company, no reference whatever is made to the Company in the agreement, and no privity whatever is established between the Company and the sub-agent. Clause 23 of the original agreement found its equivalent in clause 24, which ran as follows:—

"24. The Sub-Agent shall deposit with the Sole Agent the sum of money which the Sole Agent may fix from time to time as a guarantee of good faith which amount is liable to confiscation by the Sole Agent for any breach of any clause of this agreement and it is hereby expressly agreed and understood that interest at per cent. per annum accruing on such deposit will be paid to the Sub-Agent by the Sole-Agent as long as the Sub-Agent faithfully observes and performs the conditions of this Agreement."

Considerable business appears to have been done under these agreements, and large sums of money were received by Vaidya pursuant to their terms, both from the sale of the oil and from the deposits made under clause 24, the deposits alone amounting to at least Rs. 52,000 in September 1912. In addition to Vaidya's position as agent for the Texas Company, he was also a member—together with one Kothavle—in a firm, V. N. Apte & Co., and this firm were the secretary, treasury, and agent of the respondent's Bank.

In October of 1912 Vaidya, who had various accounts with the Bank, was overdrawn to the extent of about Rs. 300,000. At the beginning of this month the Bank finding themselves face to face with fast gathering financial difficulties, Kothavle was asked by two directors to obtain from Vaidya the money that he owed to them. Vaidya was then returning from England, and on his return an interview took place between him and Kothavle, with the result that Vaidya sent to the Bank the sum of Rs. 65,000—Rs. 60,000 in October and Rs. 5,000 in the following February. Of this sum, Rs. 60,000 was paid in cash by cheques drawn by or on behalf of Vaidya on the Indian Specie Bank, Bombay, and Rs. 5,000 by a cheque on the Eastern Bank, Bombay. The monies so received were credited by the Bombay Bank as to Rs. 52,000 to the personal account of Vaidya, as to Rs. 8,000 to the account of Kothavle, and Rs. 5,000 to an account headed Vaidya's Texas Account.

It appears to be accepted in these proceedings that the whole of these monies came from the monies provided by the sub-agents, either by way of guarantees or by monies paid for oil purchased; as to Rs. 45,000 from actual deposits and purchase monies of oil, and as to Rs. 20,000 by a loan granted to Vaidya on the security of certain bonds which had been purchased by him out of monies derived from the same source.

The Bombay Bank suspended payment in October 1913, and on the 13th February 1915 the appellant Company instituted the proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen, claiming re-payment of the sum of Rs. 65,000 in priority to other creditors of the Bank, on the ground that such sum represented their money in the hands of Vaidya, and had been received by the Bank with knowledge of this fact. In order that this claim should succeed, it is essential that the appellant Company should be in a position to establish two independent facts:—

First, that the money was theirs and held for them by Vaidya as trustee, and Secondly, that the Bank knew this fact when they received it.

If they fail in establishing both these points, the question as to how the money was dealt with does not arise.

TEXAS COMPANY v. BOMBAY BANKING COMPANY, LD.

With regard to the first matter, the Trial Judge, Mr. Justice Beaman, held that the aggregate amount of the deposits made by the sub-agents with Vaidya was some Rs. 68,000 in cash, and he decided that these monies were never in any real sense the plaintiffs' monies at all. Upon the character and quality of these monies, so far as they represented deposits, their Lordships, from the evidence before them on this appeal, have no hesitation whatever in accepting the conclusions of the learned Judge. There is no evidence to show that the Oil Company ever expressly or impliedly authorised Vaidya to enter into any sub-agency agreements at all, nor that they ever knew of the actual agreements or of their terms. It has already been pointed out that the agreements did not establish any privity of relationship between the Texas Company and the sub-agents; nor did the course of business between the Company and Vaidya necessarily imply that the parties must be assumed to contemplate the establishment of such sub-agencies. The appellants, however, say that such priority is established by section 194 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, which is in these terms:—

"Where an agent, holding an express or implied authority to name another person to act for the principal in the business of the agency, has named another person accordingly, such person is not a sub-agent, but an agent of the principal for such part of the business of the agency as is entrusted to him."

The answer to this contention is to be found in the fact already mentioned that Vaidya never did have express or implied authority to name any person to act for the Texas Oil Company in the business; that he did not appoint them to act on behalf of the principal but on behalf of himself, and that the guarantees and deposited monies were to secure him as against them, and not for the security of the Oil Company. If, therefore, the Rs. 65,000 consisted entirely of these deposited monies, there would be no need for any further investigation into the matter; but in truth the appellants made a strong case for showing that only Rs. 52,000 were properly attributable to this source. In these circumstances it might have been necessary to hear the respondents upon the question as to what was the true extent of these monies, and whether there was not, in the circumstances, some material difference between them and the sale monies, had it not been that their Lordships have come to the clear conclusion that, from whatever source the money was drawn, it was not paid into the Bank under circumstances that affected them with knowledge of any infirmities in Vaidya's title. The notice that it was alleged they received was, first, by reason of the form in which some of the cheques were drawn, and, secondly, by reason of Vaidya's association with the firm of Apte & Co. Upon the form of the cheque the notice is assumed to come from the signature, which in four cases is in these terms:

"B. R. Manerikar,

per pro P. G. Vaidya,

Sole agent for Bengal & U. P."

Manerikar was the head clerk and manager of Vaidya's agency for the appellants, and the signature was authorised and honoured; but there is nothing on the face of these documents that would lead the Bank to doubt that Vaidya was perfectly entitled to deal with the monies to which they related, in whatever manner he thought fit. To affect a Bank with knowledge of the ownership of monies paid into the accounts of their customers by the mere form of the signature on the negotiable documents by which such monies are transferred is to proceed far beyond the recognised limits of the doctrine of notice, and such a principle, if accepted, would create a serious embarrassment to the conduct of banking business. The case of Coleman v. Bucks and Oxon Union Bank (4) is an authority to show that even a direction to carry money to the credit of a customer's trust account, when no such account existed, is insufficient for such a purpose. Had Vaidya's account, to which the proceeds of the oil business were paid, been kept with the Bombay Bank under circumstances that could fairly impute to them knowledge that the monies were not Vaidya's, different considerations would apply [see Gray v. Johnston (8)], but in this case there is nothing beyond the fact that a cheque signed per pro with a statement that Vaidya is sole agent for Bengal and the United Provinces is handed in to the bank to be placed to the credit of Vaidya's account. Indeed, if the ledger account of the Indian Specie Bank be correctly stated in the record, there is nothing on the face of that account itself to suggest any infirmity in Vaidya's title, for it is simply headed: "Account of P. G. Vaidya, Esq.," and there is no explanation offered of the meaning of the signature, which indeed appears to have been quite unnecessary, for the cheque for Rs. 5,000 drawn on the 22nd February 1913 is signed without any such qualification, and is met out of the same account. Probably because of the infirmity of the proposition it does not appear from the documents and judgment that this point was ever raised in the whole course of the proceedings until the hearing of this appeal. As to verbal notice the only person with whom it appears that any interview took place was Kothavle, and both Vaidya and Kothavle's evidence are in agreement upon the fact that Kothavle was told that Vaidya had complete control over the monies, and to quote Kothavle's own evidence, Vaidya told him that the monies of all the cheques belonged to his rock oil business, as is shown by the following extract from this evidence :—

TEXAS COMPANY V. BOMBAY BANKING COMPANY, LD.

"A. . . . Vaidya told me that the monies of all the cheques belonged to his rock oil business.

"Q. And that he had full power and authority to give you those monies ?

"A. Yes.

"Q. He did not tell you that he was giving you some one else's money ?

"A. No.

"Q. As far as you knew, the monies belonged to Vaidya ?

"A. They did as far as I knew.

"Q. You told your directors so after the monies were paid, viz., that Vaidya had paid in monies belonging to himself ?

"A. Yes."

This evidence, which appears to have been accepted by the Trial Judge, and was certainly not impaired by cross-examination, is complete for the purpose of showing that neither by the knowledge of the Directors nor of Kothavle can notice be imputed.

There remains only the question of whether the knowledge of Vaidya himself is sufficient to form the necessary link. With regard to this it is important to observe that the Banking Company, though governed in the ordinary way by a Board of Directors, had, by Articles of Association, appointed the firm of V. N. Apte & Co. secretaries, treasurers and agents, and provided that they should have the general management of the business. But this is entirely insufficient to bring home to the Company notice of an irregularity on the part of Vaidya in his own private concerns which was only within his knowledge, and was solely due to his own improper conduct.

There is no principle and there is no authority to establish that, in such circumstances, the Bank could be affected with notice, and authorities indeed establish the exact opposite of such a proposition.

Without considering the earlier decisions it is sufficient to refer to the two cases of Oave v. Oave (6) and David Payne & Co. Ltd., In re, Young v. David Payne & Co. Ltd. (3). In the former, a Solicitor, who was the sole trustee of a settlement, paid the trust money in the joint name of his brother and himself and used the fund in the purchase of land, which was conveyed to his brother alone. The property was then mortgaged in favour of a mortgagee for whom the trustee acted as Solicitor; but it was decided that this fact could not affect the mortgagee with notice of the improper use of the trust money in the purchase of the estate.

In the latter case, the Director of a company induced the advance by them of £6,000 on the security of a second mortgage debenture in another Company, with the intention of using the money for the purpose of forwarding a scheme in which he was personally interested, a scheme outside the scope of their business. No other Director of the lending company knew anything of the circumstance. It was sought to affect the lending company by the knowledge which the Director possessed. Lord Wrenbury —then Buckley, J.—decided that no such notice could be imputed, and he stated the law in terms which their Lordships regard as accurate and appropriate. He said :—

"I understand the law to be this : that if a communication be made to an agent which it would be his duty to hand on to his principals, . . . and if the agent has an interest which would lead him not to disclose to his principals the information which he has thus obtained, and in point of fact he does not communicate it, you are not to impute to his principals knowledge by reason of the fact that their agent knew something which it was not his interest to disclose and which he did not disclose."

And this view was again supported in the Court of Appeal.

The facts in the present case do not, in their Lordships' opinion, go so far to constitute notice as those in the cases mentioned. In fact, they amount to nothing more than this, that a Company wanting payment of a debt from one of its agents asked that payment should be made, and obtained part of their debt without any knowledge whatever of the sources from which the money came. It would be straining the doctrine of notice beyond all reasonable limits to hold that in such circumstances moneys received in absolute good faith should be earmarked with some independent ownership, because the debtor, who was also a servant of the company, committed a fraud in order to discharge his obligations.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SAMBASHIVA—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, para. 17 (4)—Arbitration, reference to—Parties inactive for six years—Reference, whether cancelled—Agreement to refer, whether can be filed.

On 24th December 1912 the parties, agreed to refer their differences to arbitration. On the 29th December 1912 they fell out and nothing was done under the agreement of reference for six years. After the lapse of that period one of the parties applied under paragraph 17 of Schedule II to the Civil Procedure Code to have the agreement filed;

Held, that the conduct of the parties, coupled with the long and unexplained delay, amounted to a cancellation of the agreement and that, therefore, the agreement could not be filed. [p. 127, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Chanda, in Civil Suit No. 31 of 1918, dated the 23rd December 1918.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 74 of 1911, on the file of the Additional District Judge, Chanda, Madhao, the present appellant, sued the respondent Sambashiva for a partition of certain property. The application to sue as a pauper failed. On 24th December 1912, parties executed the agreement Exhibit P. 1 agreeing to submit their differences as regards partition to the arbitration of Rajam Sakharan Komti of Babupeth, Ramlu Jagappa Komti of Lohgaon, and Balwant Atmaram Brahmin Naik of Chanda.

On 27th December 1912 Madhao is said to have presented to the arbitrators a list of property to be partitioned, and on the next day Sambashiva also gave a list of the property in possession of both. According to the appellant he was abused on the 29th December 1912 before the Panchas by Sambashiva, who expressed his unwillingness to proceed with the arbitration. Having got so far in the settlement of their differences, nothing more seems to have been done until 29th July 1918, nearly six years later, when Madhao appellant gave Sambashiva a notice, Exhibit D 1. That document states, inter alia:—

"It was decided that you and myself should make an amicable settlement, and arbitrators were appointed, and you and myself together executed a deed of agreement in their favour on 24th December 1912. But the arbitrators have not made an award; and you do not give me the share. You are, therefore, being informed by notice that there is only a short time left for me during which I may bring a suit. It appears to be the intention of the arbitrators and yourself to let the period of limitation for my suit expire. I have now no confidence that the arbitrators will do the work; and I have informed the arbitrators by a notice that the deed of agreement is cancelled; and have cancelled the deed of agreement. You should, within 8 days from to-day, give my share of all the immoveable and moveable property and obtain a receipt from me."

Sambshiva's reply is Exhibit P-2. He stated:—

"The dispute between you and me is still before the arbitrators for settlement. I had never any objection to have a settlement made through arbitrators; nor have I any even now. Similarly, the arbitrators also never refused to make an award. It is you yourself who procrastinated. You cannot in this way cancel the agreement given to the arbitrators. If, while the matter is pending before the arbitrators, you take any other proceedings, or bring any claim against me, you will be responsible for the expenses, etc., I may incur therefor."

Madhao's answer was an application filed on 26th June 1918 under Schedule II, rule 17 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The respondent non-applicant pleaded inter alia that he has now a strong objection to one of the arbitrators, Balwantrao Naik, being allowed to arbitrate owing to the relations between them being strained. He asked that some other man be appointed with the consent of both parties in Balwantrao's place. The appellant applicant then denied that relations between non-applicant and Balwantrao were strained and the proceedings went to trial.

The Additional District Judge finds that under the law a new arbitrator could not be substituted for Balwant. He was satisfied that the non-applicant and Balwant Naik were not now on good terms and this fact made the non-applicant lose all confidence in Balwant, and that the fact that the two were on bad terms together with the lapse of time was sufficient cause under rule 17, Schedule II of the Civil Procedure Code, to justify a refusal to file the agreement, though he holds that if the relations between the parties were unchanged, mere lapse of time would not enable any of them to withdraw from the arbitration. The application was dismissed.

We think that the conduct of the parties, dating from shortly after the date of the agreement, is sufficient to show that they had abandoned the idea of arbitration. The long and unreasonable delay of some years is not properly explained. We think that this conduct has broken the contract of the parties to refer the matter between them to arbitration. The appellant in his notice admits that he had cancelled the agreement.

It has been found, and we think rightly, that relations are strained between Balwantrao and the respondent and that the remaining arbitrators are partisans. There are thus reasons for the respondent's position that he is unwilling to submit the case now to the arbitration of a man who has quarrelled with him. We think the application has been rightly dealt with and, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs. We fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 150.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 66—Benami purchase at execution sale, whether illegal—Statutory provision barring equitable jurisdiction of Court, construction of—Purchase at execution sale in benami of one of several heirs, whether deprives other heirs of their right—Tenant having attorned to beneficial owner, whether can refuse to pay rent to his heirs.

Although the object of section 65 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to discourage benami purchases at Court sales, it does not render such purchases illegal. Inasmuch as the section bars the equitable jurisdiction of the Court, it must be strictly construed and should not be extended beyond its express terms. [p. 128, col. 2.]

Where a Muhammadan father purchased a jote at an execution sale with his own money in the name of one of his sons and settled it with a tenant, who attorned to him and after his death paid rent to his heirs for some time:

Held, that having been brought upon the land by the father, it was not open to the tenant to say after the father's death that he was not the tenant of his heirs, and that a suit for rent brought by the heirs would not be barred under section 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure, simply because the father had purchased the jote at an auction sale in the name of one of his sons. [p. 129, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jalpaiguri, dated the 7th March 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Jalpaiguri, dated the 28th February 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.—Defendant No. 2 had purchased the land in dispute at an execution sale held in August 1902. As the sale certificate was in his name, I submit that section 66, Civil Procedure Code, is a clear bar to the maintainability of the suit of the plaintiff.

Babu Hemendra Nath Bose, for the Respondents.—The object of section 66, Civil Procedure Code, is not to render benami purchases illegal, but only to discourage them. That section must be strictly construed. The father was the real purchaser of the jote within which the land held by the principal defendant stands. My suit cannot be barred by section 66. Refers to Sasti Ohurn Nundi v. Aunopurna (1).

The tenant paid rent to the father who brought him upon the land and after his death to his heirs, and so there cannot be any bar to the suit under section 66.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, in reply.—Sasti Ohurn Nundi v. Aunopurna (1) is distinguishable. In that case pleadings showed possession. Here plaintiff did not proceed on the footing of possession.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was instituted by the plaintiffs for recovery of rent for the period in suit, on the allegation that the rent claimed from the principal defendant, the tenant, was payable to the plaintiffs and the pro forma defendants as co-sharers who used jointly to realise same, but inasmuch as the pro forma defendants had not joined with the plaintiffs, they had been added as parties.

(1) 23 C. 699.

The prayer is for a decree against the principal defendant and in the alternative against the pro forma defendants, should it be found that they had realised the plaintiffs' share. The principal defendant denied relationship of landlord and tenant and defendant No. 2 Mahammad Emaratulla Sarkar supported him, on the ground that the land in suit had been purchased by him alone at an execution sale which took place in August 1902. He contended that inasmuch as the sale certificate was in his name, section 66, Civil Procedure Code, was a bar. We cannot take that view in this case. The object of that section no doubt is to discourage benami purchases at Court sales, but not to render such purchases illegal. Inasmuch as the provisions of that section bar the equitable jurisdiction of the Court, it has been repeatedly held that the section must be strictly construed and not extended beyond its express terms. It has been found by both the Courts that the defendant Emartulla's name was used by his father Haji Mehor Buksh, who was the real purchaser of the jote within which the land held by the principal defendant stands. It has also been found that the tenant defendant was brought on this land by the Haji and that after his death the tenant paid rent for one year to Dalal Buksh, one of the Haji's sons who according to the plaintiff was authorised to collect rent on behalf of all the heirs of the Haji. This allegation has been held proved. Defendant No. 2 relied upon certain decrees which he had obtained against some tenants of other lands in the jote, which are evidently of no value as the other heirs of the Haji were not parties therein. In the Settlement Khatian the names of all the heirs of the Haji are recorded as proprietors. The Courts have not accepted the allegation that the principal defendant paid rent to defendant No. 2 alone, as no rent receipts or collection papers were produced.

In the circumstances above mentioned, we think the suit is not barred by section 66. It was held in Sasti Ohurn Nundi v. Aunopurna (1) that when the plaintiff was in possession since the time of the sale for some years and when such possession was sought to be disturbed by the defendant by setting up a purchase in his own name, a suit was competent by the plaintiff for declaration of his title and for other reliefs incidental thereto. It was held in Musammatt Buhuns Kowur v.

RACHANGAUDA IRANGAUDA PATIL v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Buhocree Lall (2) that section 317 does not make all benami transactions invalid, nor read with section 316 does it confer upon the ostensible purchaser a title against the real purchaser. It merely declares that a suit shall not be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that he was only the ostensible purchaser. In Bishan Dial v. Ghazi-ud-din (3) Sasti Ohurn v. Aunopurna (1) was not fully accepted but the learned Judges said that the section would not apply where the suit was based not on the ground that the purchase was benami but upon some other independent ground. It seems to us upon the facts of the case, inasmuch as the tenant paid rent to the father who brought him upon the land and after his death to his heirs, it is not barred under section 66, Civil Procedure Code, simply because the father purchased the jote at an auction sale in the name of one of his sons. In Bodh Singh Doodhoria v. Guneschunder Sen (4) it was held that the provisions of Act VIII of 1859, section 260, were designed to check the practice of making benami purchases at execution sales, i.e., transactions in which one party secretly purchases on his own account in the name of another party. They cannot be taken to affect the rights of members of a joint Hindu family, who by the operation of law are entitled to treat as part of their common property an acquisition, howsoever made by a member in his sole name, if made by the use of the family funds. In this case a Muhammadan father bought the property with his money although in the name of one of his sons. He settled the land with a tenant who attorned to him and paid his heirs rent after his death. Having been brought upon the land by the father it is not open to the tenant to say after his death, although he had paid rent to the heirs, that he is not their tenant but the tenant of the son in whose name the sale certificate stood. To hold that the heirs are precluded from suing the tenant for rent under these circumstances would work great injustice. We hold that the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—RESPONDENT.

Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1873), s. 4 (a), whether ultra vires—Government of India Act 1853 (21 & 22, Vict. C. 106), s. 65—Vatandar patil, dismissal of—Suit for declaration that dismissal is illegal, maintainability of.

Plaintiff, who was a vatandar patil, was dismissed from his post and his life-interest in the patilki vatan was forfeited. He brought a suit against the Secretary of State for a declaration that the order of dismissal was illegal and for possession of the vatan lands;

Held, (1) that the suit was barred by the provisions of section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act; [p. 130, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act was not ultra vires of the Government by virtue of the provisions of section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1853, inasmuch as the plaintiff could not have brought a suit claiming the same relief against the old East India Company. Appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Bijapur, in Suit No. 2 of 1915.

Mr. Setlur (with him Messrs. Ratanlal Kanchhodas and Hiralal J. Kania), for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MACLEOD, C. J.—The plaintiff in this suit was a sixteen-anna Vatandar Patil owing 23 Vatan lands in the village of Talikot in the District of Bijapur. By Government Resolution No. 7950 of 26th August 1914 it was resolved that Government concurred in the opinion expressed by the Commissioner in paragraph 3 of the memorandum. Sanction was accorded to the dismissal of Rachangauda Irangauda from the post of Revenue and Police Patil of the village of Talikot and to the forfeiture of his life-interest in the Patilki Vatan of the village. He then brought this suit against the Secretary of State for India in which the following relief was claimed: (a) a declaration that the order of Government is illegal and does not legally effect forfeiture within the meaning of section 61 of the Watan Act; (b) consequently the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the Vatan lands with mesne profits from date of suit.

The District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by section 4 (a), paragraph 1 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, and that as he had no doubt in the matter he was precluded from referring the matter to the High Court under section 13 of the Act. That section provides that subject to the exceptions thereafter appearing, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction with respect to any of the following matters: (a) claims against Government relating to any property appertaining to the office of any hereditary officer appointed or recognized under Bombay Act No. III of 1874 or any other law for the time being in force, or of any other village officer or servant, or claims to perform the duties of any such officer or servant, or in respect of any injury caused by exclusion from such office or service.

There can be no doubt that the plaintiff's suit comes within the purview of those words, but it has been argued that that Act is ultra vires of Government in its powers of legislation on the authority of Secretary of State for India v. Moment (1). It was laid down in that case that the effect of section 65 of the Government of India Act, 1858, was to debar the Government of India from passing any Act which can prevent a subject from suing the Secretary of State for India in Council in a Civil Court in any case in which he could have similarly sued the old East India Company. The appellant, therefore, has to satisfy us that he could have sued the old

East India Company claiming the relief which he asked for in the present suit. Counsel for the appellant was not able to refer us to any authority which could convince us that such a suit as the present one could have lain against the old East India Company. We were referred to Regulations XVI and XVII of 1827. But there is nothing in those Regulations, which provide that a claim to Inam lands was cognizable by the Court of the East India Company. That is made clear by the preamble to Act XI of 1852, which states "Whereas in the Territories of the Deccan, Kandeish, and Southern Mahratta Country, and in other Districts more recently annexed to the Bombay Presidency, claims against Government on account of Inams and other Estates wholly or partially exempt from payment of land revenue are excepted from the cognizance of the ordinary Civil Courts...and whereas it is desirable that the said claims should be tried and determined without further delay", the enactment was passed. Then under section 2 the Governor of Bombay in Council was empowered to appoint an Inam Commissioner with so many Assistants, and such subordinate establishment as might be necessary for the purposes thereafter mentioned. By section 7 no decision or order of the Inam Commissioner, or of any of his Assistants, or of the Governor in Council under the provisions of this enactment, so long as the same shall be in force under such provisions, shall be questioned or avoided in any Court of law.

It is thus perfectly clear that before 1858 such a claim as the plaintiff's in the present suit was not cognizable by the ordinary Civil Courts. Therefore, section 4 (a) (1) of Act X of 1876 was not ultra vires. Therefore, in my opinion, the decision of the learned District Judge was correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

HEATON, J.—I agree. There is no doubt whatever, it is not pretended that there is any doubt on this point, that the present suit is barred by section 4 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act, if that section enunciates the law. But it is said that the section, at any rate in so far as it bars a suit of this kind, is ultra vires. It is for the appellant to show that this is so.

EKOJI KUNBI v. AKAJI KUNBI.

He relies on the case of Secretary of State for India v. Moment (1). That throws us back on to section 65 of the Statute 21 and 22 Vic, c. 106. That section and the case referred to open up a large variety of possible points, but so far as we have been able to inquire into the law as it existed when that Statute was enacted, i.e., in the year 1858, it is not shown that a suit would have lain against the East India Company for an act of this kind. In other words, it is not shown that the provisions of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act are ultra vires in so far as they affect the suit. Therefore, I think the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

EKOJI KUNBI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

AKAJI KUNBI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Possession and dispossession, suit on basis of—Burden of proof—Limitation—"Confession and avoidance," defence of, nature of.

In a suit for possession upon a dispossession the plaintiff is bound to establish a subsisting title and possession within 12 years immediately preceding the commencement of the suit. [p. 133, col. 1.]

Dharani Kanta v. Gabar Ali Khan, 18 Ind. Cas. 17; 17 O. W. N. 389; 25 M. L. J. 95; 13 M. L. T. 185; (1913) 1 M. W. N. 157; 15 Bom. L. R. 445; 17 O. L. J. 277 (P. C.), followed.

A defence of confession and avoidance can be said to have been raised only when the defendant completely admits the basis of the plaintiff's claim but seeks to avoid the effect of that admission by pleading, for example in the case of a suit on a contract, performance, fraud, release, limitation or otherwise. [p. 133, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the 2nd Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 242 of 1913, dated the 22nd January 1919, arising out of Civil Suit

No. 244 of 1916 in the Court of the Munsif, Basim, dated the 14th September 1918.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The judgment in this second appeal will govern the disposal of No. 60 B, except for one point which will be separately dealt with. It will also suffice for the determination of Second Appeal No. 61, B. There is a fourth appeal (No. 62-B), the hearing of which has had to be postponed because the respondent has not yet been served. These four appeals arise out of separate suits, namely, Nos. 244, 243, 240 and 235 of 1916 respectively.

In each of the four suits the plaintiff, who is the appellant in this Court, claimed exclusive title to and possession of certain sub-numbers of three or more out of the following survey Nos. in Mauza Krishna:—

Nos. 26, 32, 38, 60 and 61.

With regard to Nos. 26, 32 and 38 the plaintiff pleaded that his grandfather Suryaji acquired a one-third share at a time when the recorded khatadar was one Jhingraji who himself owned a similar share, the remaining one-third share belonging to Vikramji. He also stated that a latter khatadar was Vithoba, grandson of Jhingraji, and that about 40 years back a partition was effected under which the plaintiff obtained certain sub-Nos. in each of the five fields including the sub-Nos. now in dispute.

With regard to Nos. 60 and 61 his case was that a one third share in them also was acquired by his grandfather Suryaji, the remaining two shares belonging to Jhingraji and Vikramji respectively, and that the shares were separated at the partition 40 years back; of these two fields he alleged Suryaji to have been the recorded khatadar. His case generally was that he as his grandfather's successor was in sole possession of the entire one-third share up to the year 1913 when the respective defendants dispossessed him of certain portions, leaving him in possession of the rest.

It is common ground that one-third of each field belongs to the successors-in-title of Jhingraji and Vikramji respectively and the plaintiff himself alleged that Jhingraji's grandson Vithoba and Vikramji's son

EKOJI KUNBI v. AKAJI KUNBI.

Ishnaji are his kinsmen "in the seventh or eighth degree." He also said that the defendants are related to him "in the eighth or ninth degree."

The case for the defence was that the defendants owned a one-third share in each of the five fields jointly with the plaintiff and that they were in joint possession till the year 1913, when a partition was effected in accordance with which certain sub-Nos. were allotted to the plaintiff, the rest (including all those sued for) being distributed among the defendants. This partition was established to the satisfaction of the officer in charge of the Record of Rights before whom in December 1913 the plaintiff claimed, as he does now, to be the exclusive owner of the entire one-third share in each field.

The Trial Judge, who first decided the suits in July 1917, placed upon the plaintiff the burden of proving that the fields were acquired by his grandfather Suryaji and that he had been in exclusive possession till 1913, and decided both the questions thus raised in the negative. He also found on other issues embodying the points raised for the defence that the five fields constituted ancestral property in the hands of the plaintiff, the defendants and other persons, and that the plaintiff and defendants were in joint possession till a partition was effected by a panchayat in 1912 or 1913. He was unable to decide the exact relationship between the plaintiff and the defendants. On these findings the suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff appealed in all four cases to the District Court and they were remanded by an Additional District Judge, who attaching undue importance to the matter of relationship considered that the burden should have been laid on the defendants to prove the exact relationship between them and the plaintiff. The trial was also said to have been unsatisfactory for want of complete pleadings and sufficient identification of the plots in dispute.

Before the new trial took place, maps were put in showing each of the five fields and its sub-Nos. and the name by which each field was locally known was also given. The following issues were then framed :—

"1. Whether defendants are related to the plaintiff as alleged by them ?

"2. Whether the defendants had joint possession over the plots in suit till 1912 as alleged by them?

"3. Whether there was a partition in 1912 as alleged by defendants and whether the plots in suit fell to the shares of the respective defendants at the said partition as alleged by them?

"4. Whether the plaintiffs were in exclusive possession of the plots till 1913 ?

"5. To what relief are the parties entitled ?"

The plaintiff examined one more and the defendants two more witnesses and the Trial Judge, the successor in office of the officer who had written the first judgment, decreed each of the four claims. He held that the defendants had failed to establish the correctness of the pedigree given by them; that the alleged joint possession and partition were also not established; and that the plaintiff must be taken to have been in exclusive possession of all the fields.

The case was again taken to the District Court in appeal and another Additional District Judge held that the burden of proof had been wrongly laid on the defendants; that the exclusive possession and title of the plaintiff had not been made out; and that the presumption afforded by section 6-I, Hyderabad Assigned Districts Land Revenue Code, 1896, was not rebutted, the decrees in favour of the plaintiff were, therefore, reversed and his claim was dismissed.

In this Court the main point urged on behalf of the plaintiff is that the burden of proof should have been placed upon the defendants to show the joint title and possession upon which they rely. Section 101, Indian Evidence Act, is relied upon in this connection. The terms of that section are as follows :—

"Whoever desires any Court to give judgment as to any legal right or liability dependent on the existence of facts which he asserts must prove that those facts exist.

"When a person is bound to prove the existence of any fact it is said that the burden of proof lies on that person."

It is said that the defence was really one of "confession and avoidance." In my opinion this is clearly not a case in which the defence can be accurately described by that technical term of old English pleading, which finds no place in the Current Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court. Where a suit is brought on a contract the defendant may admit that he made the contract, but avoid the effect of that confession by pleading performance, fraud, release, limitation or otherwise. In such a case there is a complete admission of the basis of the claim. In the present case the plaintiff claims exclusive title and possession and neither of these was admitted in whole. The plaintiff did not claim and does not desire to have joint possession of the plots sued for, nor could he be allowed to obtain such relief except on the theory that the defendants were his co sharers and on admitting them to joint possession of the plots, which he admittedly holds exclusively since 1913 by virtue of the alleged partition. There was in fact not a confession but a traverse. Moreover, the present suits are for possession as upon a dispossession, and the plaintiff is bound in accordance with a well-settled rule to establish a subsisting title and possession within 12 years immediately preceding the commencement of the suit: see Dharani Kanta v. Gabar Ali Khan (1). The section of the Evidence Act relied upon by itself suffices to show that it was for the plaintiff to prove what the defendants did not admit, namely, that his possession was to be accounted for by an exclusive title.

It is said that the defendants dispossessed the plaintiff in view of the approaching inquiry by the officer in charge of the Record of Rights and that no title could be conferred by that officer. The Record of Rights, however, shows that the defendants have long been in occupation and that they obtained the shares shown against their names as the outcome of an award given by a panchayat in September 1912. There is a presumption that the entries to this effect are true and there is also evidence to support them: for instance, Lakshman Kunbi (D. W. No. 3), who was a member of the panchayat and is related to both sides, spoke to the joint cultivation and the subsequent division. Altogether there is ample basis for the finding that the plaintiff was not in exclusive possession as he alleges and he has undoubtedly failed to establish acquisition by his grandfather Suryaji of the entire one-third share.

The lower Appellate Court declared itself satisfied that the defendants and the plaintiff are descended from a common ancestor. It is objected here that sufficient reasons for this conclusion have not been given. It seems to me, however, that the existence of a common ancestor follows necessarily from the admission of the plaintiff himself in his written reply to the defence. In describing the defendants as his relatives "in the eighth or ninth degree" he necessarily implied that they had a common ancestor. There is, therefore, no force in this contention.

In the sixth ground of appeal the lower Appellate Court is said to have failed to have noticed that certain receipts executed at the panchayat were not produced in evidence and to have ignored the statements made by the defendants' own witnesses, to the effect that Suryaji was separate in mess and estate from the persons said to have been his brothers. With regard to the receipts I would observe that the witness Laxman Kunbi already mentioned deposed to execution of one receipt only, which was in favour of the panchayat and was subsequently filed in the Court of the Tahsildar and not returned to the panchas though they asked for it. With regard to the relations between Suryaji and his alleged brothers I am not referred by the appellant's Pleader to any specific statements. The plaintiff himself is 50 years old and none of the witnesses for the defence is over 60, while most are considerably younger. It is, therefore, quite unlikely that any of them knows much about Suryaji, who according to the plaintiff himself died 40 years ago.

Lastly it is contended that the evidence for the plaintiff was not considered by the lower Appellate Court in the manner required by law. It is complained that the statements of the plaintiff as P.W. No. 1 and Krishnaji (P. W. No. 2) regarding dispossession have been ignored and that the P. Ws. Nos. 3 to 6 have not even been mentioned. I am also referred to certain books marked Exhibits P.2 and P.3 and known as proti (revenue receipt) books, which are said to show that Suryaji acted as the sole owner of all the fields. I find, however, from the third paragraph of the lower Appellate Court's judgment that the evidence of every single witness for the plaintiff has been considered. The paoti books have not been translated, and all I have been able to discover from a cursory inspection of them is that Suryaji paid revenue for Nos. 60 and 61, a fact which is accounted for if he was the recorded khatadar as pleaded by the plaintiff. It is well known that in Berar the recorded khatadar was frequently not the sole owner and as already mentioned, the plaintiff admitted in his reply to the defence that in respect of three fields, Jhingraji and after him Vithoba was recorded as sole khatadar. Much of the time of the Trial Judges who dealt with the case was wasted in dealing with the question of the exact relationship between the plaintiff on the one hand and each of the defendants on the other. This point was not really material in view of the plaintiff's own admission. He has failed to make out the facts on which he based his claim, namely, that his grandfather Suryaji acquired the one-third share in each of the five fields and his own exclusive possession for 12 years before 1913, and his claims in Suits Nos. 244, 243 and 240 were rightly dismissed.

This appeal and No. 61-B are accordingly dismissed. In the lower Courts costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

*Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 2 (7), 17—
Agreement to grant lease, whether compulsorily

Agreements to lease which are compulsorily registrable under the combined operation of section

2, sub-section (7), and section 17 of the Registration Act are those agreements which import a present demise or the creation of an immediate interest. [p. 136, col. 1.]

In order to determine whether an agreement is compulsorily registrable, the intention of the parties as declared by the words of the instrument must govern the construction. [p. 136, col. 1.]

An agreement between the parties that at a future time one of them shall become the tenant, provided certain things are intermediately done by the landlord or his agent so as to put the premises into a certain state which the agreement describes, is not an agreement of demise but an agreement to demise at a future date on the performance of certain conditions and is not, therefore, required to be registered. [p. 136, col. 2.]

Mr. Bahadurji, acting Advocate-General, and Mr. Campbell, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Setalvad and Desai, for Defendant
No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for specific performance of an agreement to lease. The facts are not in dispute. In December 1914 the Presidency Post Master was looking for premises for a new Post Office and entered into negotiations with the 1st defendant, who was constructing a building called the Sutar Chawl. The Presidency Post Master gave the defendant particulars as to the nature and extent of the accommodation required and the defendant made the following offer in a letter, dated the 1st February 1915:—

"With reference to the Post Office Superintendent's interview with me, I have arranged with Messrs. Mistry and Bhedwar, Architects, to have an accommodation for a Post Office at Sutar Chawl measuring about 650 Sq. Yds. and shall let it to you on a lease for ten years on the following conditions:—

"1. The rent for the place would be Rs. 175 per mensem.

"2. The counters and a shelf would be supplied by me.

"3. The electric installation to be made by me, but will be maintained thereafter by you.

"The place would be ready for occupation by the 1st April 1915."

The Presidency Post Master then obtained the sanction of the Post Master General and replied as follows on the 13th of February 1915:—

"In continuation of my letter J. Musjid/2 dated the 6th February 1915, I have the honour to say that the Post Master,

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA v. MAHOMED YUSUF ISMAIL.

General, Bombay, has accepted the proposal. I shall, therefore, be much obliged if you will kindly do the needful now with a view to enable me to move the present J. Masjid Post Office into your new building in the Sutar Chawl with effect from the 1st April 1915. The Post Master General has further desired me to insert the optional clause in the lease, i. e., giving the Post Office the option to renew the lease for another five years. Kindly acknowledge receipt of this letter."

To this defendant replied on the 16th of February 1915 as follows:—

"With reference to your letter No. Juma Masjid/2, dated the 13th instant, I am making the necessary arrangements."

The defendant proceeded to make what he called the necessary arrangements, that is, to adapt the premises for use as a Post Office; but by the 1st of April these arrangements were not complete. The counters were not varnished, the shelves were not put up, and the electric lights were not installed. Nevertheless the Post Office went into occupation on the 1st of April and the improvements were completed in the following month.

Mr. Murtree, the Presidency Post Master, says that he did not tender a lease for execution on entry into possession as the improvements had not been completed. After they were completed he instructed a subordinate to do so. But the defendant made no reply and the matter was lost sight of. But the Post Office continued in possession and paid the stipulated monthly rental.

Subsequently the 1st defendant leased the same property to two rent farmers, the 2nd and 3rd defendants, and they served the Post Office with a notice to quit; and this led to the institution of the present suit.

On these facts the questions that arise are those embodied in the first two issues: Does the correspondence disclose a completed agreement? If so, is it inadmissible in evidence for want of registration?

Now, I think, it can hardly be disputed that there was a completed agreement. The defendant's letter of the 1st of February was an offer embodying all the terms of the proposed lease. It is true that the Presidency Post Master's reply was not an unqualified acceptance but suggested a further condition of an option of renewal. It was in fact an acceptance with a counter-offer, which the defendant in turn accepted by his letter of the 16th of February. The acceptance was not express, but it is clearly implied in the statement that the defendant was making the necessary arrangements, specially in view of his subsequent conduct in giving possession to the Post Office.

The next question is the more difficult one: whether these letters embodying the agreement to lease are inadmissible in evidence in view of section 49 of the Indian Registration Act. That section enacts that no document which is required by section 17 to be registered shall, when unregistered, be received as evidence of any transaction affecting property comprised therein. There can be no doubt that an agreement may be a transaction affecting property, although it does not create an interest in the property. I think it is clear from the terms of section 91 of the Indian Trusts Act, where the same words "affecting property" are used.

The question then resolves itself to this: Whether the registration of this correspondence embodying the agreement to lease is compulsory under section 17. Now, the period is more than one year, and, if the agreement be equivalent to a lease, registration will be compulsory under section 17, sub-section (1), clause (d). The Advocate-General for the plaintiff refers to the case of Panchanan Basu v. Ohandi Oharan Misra (1), where Jenkins, C. J., described an agreement to lease as falling under clause (h) of section 17 of Act III of 1877, corresponding with section 17 (2) (v) of the present Act (XVI of 1908). But, I think, it is clear that this reference was an oversight, for that sub-section does not apply to leases and applies only to instruments described in section 17, sub-section (1), clauses (b) and (c). The substantial reason given in the judgment was that in the document there considered no immediate interest was created and there was no present demise. This accords with the rule deducible from Purmananddas Jiwandas v. Dharsey Virji (2) and the recent judgment of this Court in Kessowji v. Bai Kesarbai (Appeal No. 2 of 1909) that agreements to lease which are compulsorily registrable under the combined operation of section 2, sub section (7), and section 17 of the Registration Act are those agreements which import a present demise or the creation of an immediate interest.

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 443; 37 C. 808; 14 C. W. N. 874.

Does this agreement import such a demise? Under the authorities "the intention of the parties as declared by the words of the instrument must govern the construction:" Poole v. Bentley (3) and "where there is any doubt as to the operation of the contract, the Court must endeavour to discover the intention of the parties from the contents of the instrument, and if we see a paramount intention that the instrument shall operate as a lease, we must hold it to be such, although it may contain conflicting expressions:" Pinero v. Judson (4).

Now, there are no words of present demise in the correspondence. "I let" or "I agree to let" have been held to be words of present demise but here the words are "shall let." Again, as to the intention of the parties, the terms of the agreement and the collateral circumstances negative a present demise. The defendant offers to provide accommodation for a Post Office and to make the necessary improvements, and the plaintiff accepts subject to a counter-offer which is itself accepted. The making of the improvements was a condition precedent to the acceptance of the tenure and there can be no doubt but that the plaintiff could have refused to enter into possession on the 1st of April if counters had not been constructed. The parties, therefore, could not have intended the agreement to operate as a present demise. And the fact that the plaintiff waived the previous construction of some of the improvements and did enter into possession on the faith of the defendant's promise to complete does not affect this conclusion.

For the defendant it is contended that the fact of plaintiff entering into possession and paying rent is conclusive that there was a demise. No doubt there has been a demise, but how? Not under the agreement which was executory, but by implication from the fact that the defendant put the plaintiff into possession. When that was done on the 1st of April the agreement became executed and there was a demise. Nevertheless, on the 16th of February the agreement was still executory and imported no present demise. To quote the words of Baron Alderson in Gore v. Lloyd (5):

"Looking at the whole of this instrument, it appears to me that it was not intended to give an immediate right to the party to be from that moment, and before the execution of any lease, a tenant from a future day, but that the true construction of the instrument is, an agreement between the parties that at a future time one of them shall become the tenant, provided certain things are intermediately done by the landlord or his agent, so as to put the premises into a certain state, which the agreement describes. Then, it being shown that this agreement has been performed, and that the tenant is occupying the land, the terms of the agreement, coupled with his occupation, make him a tenant upon the conditions specified as the terms of the future lease."

That is exactly the case here. It is not an agreement of demise, but an agreement to demise at a future date on the performance of certain conditions.

In Regnart v. Porter (6) an agreement containing prospective stipulations by the landlord to lay out money on the premises was held not to operate as a demise in presenti. There were similar stipulations in Staniforth v. Fox (7), but they were held to be merely accessory in view of the express words "does this day agree to let" and the simultaneous payment of part of the rent. The recent case of Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Earl of Derby (8) illustrates the converse case of conditions to be performed by the tenant. There was an agreement to lease for a term commencing from Lady Day 1910. The agreement was concluded by correspondence of the 5th of April 1910, subject to certain conditions to be performed by the lessee, and the Court held that this was not the case of a tenancy actually created by agreement but an agreement which provides the conditions on which a lease can be demanded.

Sir Chimanlal for the defendant refers to Barry v. Nugent (9) and Doe d. Walker v. Groves (10) for the proposition that an agreement may operate as a present demise, although the execution in the future of a formal document was contemplated. No doubt, that will be so, if such can be collected to have been the intention of the parties. But that is not the case here and the extreme informality of the agreement concluded by the correspondence supports the contention that there was no intention to make a present demise.

The agreement is, therefore, not barred by section 49 of the Indian Registration Act.

It is further contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the Crown is not bound by the Registration Act. But, in view of my finding on the construction of the agreement, I need not enter into a detailed discussion of this question and shall content myself with referring to section 17, sub-section (2), clause (vi), and section 90 as containing an implication which takes away the prerogative of the Crown.

It is not contended that the delay in filing the suit disentitles the plaintiff to specific performance. The delay in this case leads to no inference of acquiescence, for the plaintiff was in possession. Nor has anything occurred in the interval which would make the grant of the relief claimed inequitable. On the other hand, the equities are in favour of the plaintiff for there has been part performance and the plaintiff has been put into possession.

The second and third defendants are subsequent lessees with notice, for plaintiff's possession was notice. They can, therefore, be made to join in the execution of the lease under section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act.

The agreement is not stamped, but is nevertheless admissible in evidence in view of the exemption of Government contained in the proviso to section 3 of the Indian Stamp Act.

The following issues were framed:—

(1) Whether there was a concluded agreement in correspondence between plaintiff and defendant No. 1 as alleged in paragraph 2 of the plaint?

(2) Whether, if the first issue is found in the affirmative, the correspondence is admissible in evidence as the agreement to lease being not registered and not stamped?

(3) Whether the plaintiff is not merely a monthly tenant?

(4) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of the alleged agreement?

(5) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to an option of renewal for a further period of five years?

My findings thereon are: (1) in the affirmative; (2) in the negative; (3) in the negative; (4) in the affirmative; (5) in the affirmative.

There will, therefore, be a decree in terms of prayer (a) to the plaint against the 1st defendant. The second and third defendants ordered to join in the execution of the said lease. The plaintiff to recover his costs from the 1st defendant.

Suit decreed.

final decree is passed, such payment falls within the scope of rule 2 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, and unless it is certified to the Court as required by that rule, it cannot be pleaded as a bar to the execution of the final decree. [p. 140 col. 2.]

The expression "the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree" in rule 2 of Order XXI of the Code merely indicates the Court to which certification is to be made, and in the case of a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit, the Court which is to receive the money payable under it is clearly the Court indicated. Appeal against the order of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 144 of 1918, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, in Execution Petition No. 463 of 1917, in Original Suit 8 of 1913.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, Advocate-General (with him Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Aiyar), for the Appellant.—The adjustment pleaded clearly falls under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. The defendant alleges certain payments in pursuance of an agreement with the decree-holder. That is an adjustment of the decree within the meaning of the rule, and not having been certified, it could not be pleaded in bar of execution.

The Full Bench ruling in Ohidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (1) relates to an agreement for temporary stay of execution, which is not the case here. One of the terms of the agreement in that case was that the decree was not to be temporarily executed and the agreement itself was an answer to the execution. Here the payments pleaded amount to an adjustment. The fact that the agreement was before the preliminary decree does not affect the question. The Full Bench ruling has to be re-considered. See Piran Bibi v. Jitendra Mohan (2).

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and S. Rangachariar, for the Respondents.—The agreement here was before the date of the preliminary decree. It does not fall under Order XXI, rule 2. It comes within the scope of the Full Bench ruling in Ohidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (1). The rule is no bar to its being pleaded.

The payments are only performance of a reciprocal contract.

The only executable decree was the final decree and the adjustment was prior to it.

Rule 2 only refers to executable decrees, and the point for consideration is if the adjustment was prior to that decree.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises in execution of a mortgage decree for sale for Rs. 1,800 and odd obtained by the plaintiff-appellant against the defendants-respondents. The 3rd defendant, one of the respondents, pleaded that the decree had ceased to be executable by reason of an oral agreement between him and the plaintiff, the conditions of which on his part he had performed. The District Munsif disallowed his plea as not properly pleadable in execution, and took no evidence as to the existence of the agreement which was denied by the other side or of its terms or of its alleged performance by him. The District Judge reversed that decision and remanded the case for disposal on the merits. The appeal to us is against his decision.

The question to be considered is whether the defendant is barred from setting up his plea in execution: and it has to be decided on the allegations made by him, as no evidence has yet been taken. He alleges in his counter-petition that, at the request of the plaintiff, he agreed to settle the family disputes of one Murugathammal, a friend of the plaintiff's, and to induce her creditors, as she was in financial difficulties, to forego portions of their claims, that in consideration of his trouble he was to be allowed to treat the suit claim as fully satisfied on payment of Rs. 550 to her creditors and that in the meanwhile plaintiff was to get a decree as sued for as a guarantee for defendant's due performance of his part of the contract, but the decree was not to be executed if defendant did perform his part. He states that he did all that was necessary and paid Rs. 550 to four creditors of Murugathammal.

The agreement is said to have been entered into just before the preliminary decree was passed. The 3rd defendant tried to plead it in answer when the application for the final decree was made, but his objection was overruled on the ground that under Order XXXIV, rule 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, only payments made directly into Court could be considered. The High Court, however, then observed that his right, if any, would only be to plead the agreement in execution. That, of course, was not a decision that he could do so: that question we have now to decide.

The main objection raised by the learned Advocate-General for the appellant is based on Order XXI, rule 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure. He contends that if the payments alleged are true, there was an adjustment of the decree within the meaning of that rule when they were made; and as it was not certified to the Court it could not be pleaded in bar of execution. On the other side, it is contended that we have here a case of an agreement prior to decree falling within the scope of the Full Bench ruling in Ohidambaram Chettiar v. Krishna Vathiyar (1) and, therefore, it is pleadable in execution and Order XXI, rule 2, is no bar to it.

We may say that the Advocate-General urged that this Full Bench ruling itself required re-consideration and that we should in any case confine it to the facts of the case before the Full Bench, which he says was one of an agreement for a temporary stay of execution. As the majority of the Judges approved of and followed the previous decisions of our High Court which were not cases of temporary stay and also the decisions in Laldas Narandas v. Kishordas Devadas (3) and Gauri Singh v. Gajadhar Das (4) and refused to follow the Calcutta view, we will not be justified in cutting down the effect of the Full Bench in the manner suggested. We think the Full Bench decided that any pre-decree agreement between parties to a suit, by the terms of which the passing of the decree is not to be objected to but the execution is to be stayed in whole or in part either temporarily or for all time, can be pleaded and given effect to in execution proceedings and Order XXI, rule 2, is no bar to it. Though the arguments of the Advocate-General against the view of the Full Bench and in favour of the Calcutta view to the contrary as stated in Benode Lal Pakrashi v. Brajendra Kumar Saha (5) and Hassan Ali v. Gauzi Ali Mir (6) are not without force, we consider we are bound by that ruling. It is eminently desirable that on a question of procedure there should be certainty and finality.

The question then is whether the present case is one falling within the scope of the Full Bench ruling as we understand it. It will be noticed from the terms of the agreement in that case, as set out in the judgment of Phillips, J., that it was one of the terms that the decree was not to be executed for a certain time, so that the agreement by itself was an answer to execution. In the present case, however, it is conceded that the agreement by itself was no answer to the execution of the decree; for it to become a proper answer it was absolutely necessary that defendant should perform his part of the contract and make the necessary payments. Whether we view the payments as performance by a party to a reciprocal contract under section 54 of the Contract Act as urged by the learned Vakil for the respondent, or as the performance of a condition precedent for the agreement not to execute to come into force, it is clear the payments were necessary to enable the defendant to object to execution. The adjustment of the suit claim was only complete on the day the last of these payments was made. On the allegations of the defendant there can be no doubt that his plea is that the suit claim was completely satisfied or "adjusted in whole" when he made the payments.

Though the agreement was entered into before the preliminary decree was passed, the payments alleged are stated to have been made after it but before the final decree was passed. In the Full Bench case the adjustment by agreement was wholly prior to the decree, but here we have a case of an adjustment subsequent to the preliminary decree but prior to the final decree. The two cases are, therefore, distinguishable. But it has been strenuously argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent that as the adjustment was prior to the final decree which was the only executable decree, we should hold that that rule did not apply to the present case, following the reasoning of the Full Bench on the point.

The answer to the above contention depends on the view we take of the scope of rule 2 as to whether it covers a payment under, or adjustment of a preliminary mortgage decree in a suit for sale. The learned Advocate-General has drawn our attention to the ruling in Piran Bibi v. Jitendra Mohan (2). It was decided there that a payment made out of Court to the mortgagee after the passing of the preliminary decree and before the final decree fell within the rule. The respondent's Vakil argues that we should not follow this ruling, because there is a difference of opinion between the Calcutta High Court and ours as to whether a pre-decree agreement can be pleaded in execution. That difference, however, has nothing to do with the applicability or otherwise of rule 2 and we cannot, therefore, uphold his contention.

This ruling was recently followed by a Bench of this Court in Singa Raja v. Pethu Raja (7), where the learned Judges say: "it may be that if between the passing of the preliminary decree and the passing of the decree for sale the defendant obtains a certificate under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, he can take advantage of that to reduce the amount for which the property is to be sold." No doubt this is not a decided expression of opinion that rule 2 applies, but it shows their inclination on the question. As we are also inclined to take the same view that such an adjustment or payment falls within the rule, we are prepared to follow the above rulings.

So far as the reason of rule 2 is concerned, we can see no difference between a payment after the preliminary decree and one after the final decree. The preliminary decree settles once for all the amount to be paid just as the decree in an ordinary money suit does. The payment or adjustment may, therefore, be rightly treated as made after the decree in the suit. The words of the rule are, we think, wide enough to cover such payments or adjustments. The learned Vakil for the respondent insisted strongly on these words of the rule, viz., "the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree," as showing that the rule referred only to executable decrees. But these words are used only to indicate the Court to which certification is to be made. In the case of a preliminary decree such as the one we have here, the Court which has to receive the money payable under it is clearly the Court indicated. We do not think an inference adverse to our view as to the scope of the rule can properly be drawn from these words.

We must, therefore, hold that the adjustment pleaded in this case falls within Order XXI, rule 2, and that the Full Bench case is distinguishable and that as admittedly it had not been certified to the Court as required by that rule, it cannot be pleaded in bar to execution.

The order of the District Judge must, therefore, be reversed and that of the Munsif restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Held, that in determining whether the devise of Rs. 500 per annum to Nagendra was in the nature of an annuity or was in fact a gift of the corpus, it was unnecessary to consider whether the provisions of section 160 of the Succession Act were more favourable to the annuitant than the provisions of English law, inasmuch as under both the question was one of intention. [p. 143, col. 2.]

Although the segregation of any particular property is the common mode of indicating an intention of the testator to make an annuity perpetual, yet that is not the only mode and the Will may indicate an intention in other ways that the sum payable is really not an annuity or at any rate is intended to be perpetual. [p. 143, col. 2.]

The intention of a testator must be gathered by reading the Will as a whole. [p. 145, col. 2.]

Where words of inheritance are not used by a testator with regard to any of the gifts which are admittedly absolute, the absence of such words with regard to a particular gift does not make it limited to the life of the donee, if the Will in other respects contains a clear intention of the testator that the gift is not so limited but is absolute and perpetual. [p. 145, col. 2.]

The provisions of sections 130 to 134 of the Probate and Administration Act relate to interest on annuities or legacies payable by the executor, and cannot apply to a sum to be paid out of the profits of immovable property which a legatee was entitled to as part of the properties obtained by him under a Will, and which was in his enjoyment for several years before his death, and which devolved upon his heirs. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Hooghly, dated the 18th February 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 20th August 1916.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Babu Debendra Nath Mandal, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Sircar and Babus Sib Ohandra Palit and Profulla Ohandra Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover Rs. 1,563 on the basis of the Will of the late Babu Bijoy Kissen Mukherjee of Uttarpara.

Bijoy Kissen died on the 17th Magh 1300 leaving seven sons and several daughters. Of his sons, the eldest, was Narendra Nath, the second Surendra Nath and the third Nagendra Nath. It is unnecessary to mention the names of the other sons. Narendra died on the 16th Pous 1312, and Nagendra died on the 20th Magh 1318. The appellants are the sons and grandsons of Narendra Nath, and the respondents are the sons of Nagendra Nath.

Bijoy Kissen, by his Will dated the 16th Magh 1300, devised his movable and immovable properties to his sons and gave certain legacies to his daughters and other persons. By the first paragraph of his Will he gave to his eldest son Narendra Nath certain Mauzas within Lot Dwarbashini and certain other Mouzabs in the same lot were given to his second son Surendra Nath. Certain other properties were also given to each of them, which are set out in schedules 1 and 2 respectively to the Will. Similarly some specified properties were given to each of the other sons including Nagendra Nath in other paragraphs of the Will, and these are set forth in the schedules. In the second paragraph it is stated: "The profits from the said Lot Dwarbashini are much larger than those from the Mahals allotted to my other sons, and out of the Mahals allotted to my other sons certain portions of the Mahals within Lot Pantra allotted to my third son Nagendra Nath Mukherjee, fourth son Satyendra Nath Mukherjee and fifth son Jatindra Nath Mukherjee are under water. In regard to the profits of the aforesaid Lot, Dwarbashini, I make this provision that my eldest son Narendra Nath Mukherjee shall, year after year, go on paying to my third son Nagendra Nath Mukherjee the sum of Rs. 500 per annum out of the income from the Mahals that he (Narendra) shall obtain, as per schedule 1 and comprised within Lot Dwarbashini, and shall execute in terms of this Will an agreement in favour of the said Nagendra Nath Mukherjee promising to pay the same, that after my death, if the said Narendra Nath Mukherjee does not pay it and execute the agreement amicably, then my third son, the said Nagendra Nath Mukherjee, shall, under the provisions of this Will, be competent to take legal action and by instituting a suit recover the said amount from the Mahals appertaining to the share as per schedule 1 and obtaining a decree realise the same, year after year, from the said Narendra Nath Mukherjee, and all these Mahals and other properties shall be fully liable for the said amount; and further, that my second son Surendra Nath Mukherjee shall, after my death, pay from the profits of the Mahals as per schedule 2 within Lot Dwarbashini, that he shall obtain, the sum of Rs. 1,000 per annum to the aforesaid Satyendra Nath, Jatindra Nath

PANCHAGOPAL MOOKERJEE v. KALI DAS MUKHERJEE.

Mukherjee, that is to say, Rs. 500 annually to my fourth son Satyendra Nath Mukherjee and Rs. 500 annually to my fifth son Jatindra Nath Mukherjee and execute separate agreements in favour of the said Satyendra Nath and Jatindra Nath Mukherjee each, promising to pay profits at the rate of Rs. 500 per annum, and that if such agreements be not executed, the said Satyendra Nath Mukherjee and Jatindra Nath Mukherjee shall take legal steps and institute separate suits to recover profits at the rate of Rs. 500 per annum, as provided by this Will, out of the profits of the Mahals representing the share as per schedule No 2 and obtaining a decree against the said Surendra Nath Mukherjee, realise the same, and all the properties specified in schedule No. 2 shall be fully liable for the said amounts."

The third paragraph which refers to the properties given to Nagendra and the fourth and fifth sons runs as follows:—A ten annas share of Lot Pautra bearing No. 44 of the Touzi of the District Hooghly Collectorate and carrying a Sadar Jama of Rs. 11,158-14-6 per annum constitutes my Zemindari and a six annas my Patni under the shares of the late Kali Kinkar Choudhury of Barnumera, District 24-Paragannahs. A sum of Rs. 750 per annum is payable to the heirs of the said Kali Kinkar Choudhury as profits of the said Patni Mahal. Certain Mouzas appertaining to the said Lot as also the sum of Rs 500 per annum out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini and certain other properties specified in schedule No. 3 to this Will are allotted (by me) to my third son Nagendra Nath Mukherjee, and the said Nagendra Nath Mukherjee shall obtain the same after my death. I also allot to my fourth son Satyendra Nath Mukherjee certain Mouzas comprised within the said Lot and Rs. 500 per annum out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini as well as certain other properties specified in schedule No. 4, and the said Satyendra Nath Mukherjee shall obtain the same after my death. I further allot to my fifth son Jatindra Nath Mukherjee certain Mouzas appertaining to the said Lot and Rs. 500 per annum out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini as well as other properties specified in schedule No. 5, and the said Jatindra Nath shall obtain the same after my death. My other sons shall have no concern with the said properties, nor shall the said Nagendra Nath, Satyendra Nath and Jatindra Nath Mukherjee be competent to dispute with one another regarding the properties allotted to them respectively." The other provisions of the Will which have a bearing upon the question before us will be referred to later.

The plaintiffs, who as stated above are the sons of the third son Nagendra, brought this suit on the allegation that the right to the sum of Rs. 500 payable annually out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini to Nagendra was not restricted to the life of Nagendra but descended to his heirs and as the defendants (the heirs of Narendra) had stopped payment after the death of Nagendra, the present suit was brought for the recovery for the arrears from the latter part of 1313, and for the years 1319 and 1320, with interest thereon at 12 per cent per annum. The defence was that the provision for the payment of Rs. 500 annually was personal to Nagendra, and the right to get it ceased on his death.

The Courts below concurred in holding that the gift of Rs. 500 annually was in perpetuity and that the plaintiff's father was given an absolute and heritable interest in the same and accordingly gave a decree for the sum claimed in the suit to the plaintiffs. The defendants appeal to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the Rs. 500 provided by the Will to be paid annually by Narendra to Nagendra is an annuity that, under section 160 of the Indian Succession Act, the legatee is entitled to receive for his life only unless a contrary intention appears by the Will and that there is no such intention. Reference is also made to the English authorities on the point. On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the respondents that the devise is not in the nature of an annuity but is in fact a gift of the corpus, and that in any case the intention of the testator was to make it perpetual.

The English law on the point is thus stated by Fry, J., in Blight v. Hartnoll (1): "As a general rule there can be no doubt that the gift of an annuity to A is a gift of the annuity during the life of A and nothing more. It is equally free from doubt that where the testator indicates the existence of the annuity without limit after the death of the person named and, therefore, implies that it is to exist beyond the life of the annuitant, there the annuity is presumed to be a perpetual annuity. It is equally without doubt that there are cases in which the Court has come to the conclusion that the gift is not really that of annuity, but the gift to a person of the income arising from a particular fund without limit, and there the Court holds that the unlimited gift of the income is a gift of the corpus from which the income arises."

In Lett v. Randall (2) the rule is thus stated by Lord Campbell, L. C. :—"To make an annuity created by Will, perpetual, there must be express words in the Will so describing it, or the testator must, by some language in the Will, indicate an intention to that effect. The most common indication is a direction by the testator to segregate and appropriate a portion of his property from the interests or profits of which the annuity is to be paid. Where this is done, the annuity when mentioned in the Will represents the corpus so appropriated and the corpus passing by the bequest of the annuity, the annuity may be said to be perpetual." But if the gift is expressly one of annuity, the fact that it is secured by a fund or payable out of the income of a fund or the rentals of land does not make it perpetual, unless the testator shows an intention to dispose of the whole fund. See Jarman on Wills, 6th Edition, pages 1138-1139, and the cases cited therein.

Section 160 of the Indian Succession Act, which is applicable to Hindus, lays down: "Where an annuity is created by Will the legatee is entitled to receive it for his life only, unless a contrary intention appears by the Will. And this rule shall not be varied by the circumstance that the annuity is directed to be paid out of the property generally or that a sum of money is bequeathed to be invested in the purchase of it."

(2) (1860) 2 De G. F. & J. 398; 3 Sm. & G. 83; 30 L. J. Ch. 110; 6 Jur. (N. s.) 1859; 3 L. T. 455; 9 W. R. 130; 45 E. R. 671; 129 E. R. 123.

It is urged on behalf of the appellants that the fact that the annuity is payable out of the income or profits of any property is not an indication to make the annuity perpetual unless the whole of the property or fund is disposed of, in which case the unlimited gift of the income might be held to be a gift of the corpus from which the income arises, that in the present case the portion of Lot Dwarbashini out of which Rs. 500 is payable to Nagendra having been given absolutely to Narendra, there could not have been any such intention and that section 160 of the Succession Act goes farther and says that the annuity is not perpetual, not only where it is made payable out of property generally, but also where a sum is bequeathed to be invested in the purchase of it. On the other hand it is contended on behalf of the respondents that under the Indian Succession Act, it is only where the annuity is payable out of property generally or out of money bequeathed to be invested in the purchase of it, that the annuity is to be held to be limited to life in the absence of a contrary intention, and not where it is payable out of the profits or income of a particular property as in the present case and that in the present case, it is not an annuity at all, and even if it is an annuity, it is a gift of part of the corpus of Dwarbashini representing the sum of Rs. 500 annually.

We think it unnecessary to consider whether the provisions of section 160 of the Succession Act are more favourable and otherwise to the annuitant than under the English law, because under both the question is one of intention. No doubt the segregation of any particular property is the common mode of indicating an intention to make an annuity perpetual, but we do not think that that is the only mode and the Will may indicate an intention in other ways that the sum payable is really not an annuity, or at any rate is intended to be perpetual.

The main question for consideration, therefore, is whether the sum of Rs. 500 payable to Nagendra is an annuity and if so, whether there was an intention to make it perpetual.

The scheme of the Will appears to be to make an equal division of the properties as far as possible among the sons, and to allot specific properties to each of the sons, so that there might not be disputes which frequently arise where properties are held jointly. The properties, however, are not of equal value and the profits of Lot Dwarbashini are much larger than those from the Mahals allotted to the other sons. Instead of dividing Dwarbashini into small portions it was given to the first two sons, certain specified Mouzas in the Mahal being given to each of them, and they were to pay a portion of its profits to some of the other sons. In consideration of the fact that the profits of that Mahal were larger and also because certain portions of the Mahals allotted to the third son, Nagendra, and to the fourth and fifth sons were haja, it is provided that Nagendra is to get rupees five hundred annually out of the profits of the portion of Mahal Dwarbashini allotted to the share of Narendra, and the fourth and fifth sons are to get each a sum of Rs. 500 from the profits of the other portion of Dwarbashini, which was allotted to the share of the second son Surendra. The profits of the Mouzas allotted to the second son in Mahal Dwarbashini seem to be larger than those of Mouzas allotted to Narendra, as the former is to pay Rs. 1,000 (Rs. 500 each to the fourth and fifth sons), whereas Narendra is to pay Rs. 500 to Nagendra only. Now the share given to Nagendra consists of certain properties mentioned in the third schedule and the sum of Rs. 500, which he is to get out of the profits of Mahal Dwarbashini from Narendra. It is distinctly stated in the 3rd paragraph of the Will that certain Mouzas appertaining to the said lot (Lot Pautra) "as also the sum of Rs. 500 per annum out of the profits of Lot Dwarbshini and certain other properties specified in schedule No. 3 to this Will are allotted to my third son Nagendra Nath Mukherjee."

It appears, therefore, that the sum of Rs. 500 per annum out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini formed part of the share allotted to Nagendra and stands on the same footing as the properties specifically allotted to him. The shares allotted to the fourth and the fifth sons also similarly consist of certain properties and the sum of Rs. 500 (each) out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini payable to them by the second son Surendra.

It is true that no words of inheritance have been used with reference to the sum of Rs. 500 payable out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini, but the Will nowhere uses such words. The same expression used with reference to the gift of the immovable properties to each of the sons is used with reference to the sum of Rs. 500 payable out of the profits of Lot Dwarbashini, and admittedly the gift of the immovable properties allotted to each of the sons is absolute. The gift of Dwarbshini to Narendra and the second son was absolute subject, however, to the payment of Rs. 500 annually as directed in the Will, and made a charge upon the property, and subject to the gift over as provided in paragraph 22 of the Will.

There is some indication in the 22nd paragraph of the Will that the gift of Rs. 500 was not personal. That paragraph runs as follows:—"God forbid, if any of my sons dies leaving only a childless widow and no heirs such as sons and daughters, in that case the properties, etc., allotted to his share shall be divided and taken in equal shares by those of my sons surviving at the time, and my sons shall go on paying to such childless widow of my deceased son during her lifetime an allowance for maintenance and performance of pious acts at the rate of Rs. 35 per mensem." Now the words "properties, etc., allotted to his share" would include the sum of Rs. 500 to be paid out of the profits of Dwarbashini to Nagendra and the fourth and fifth sons, being part of the share allotted to each of them, and the clause provides that on the death of any of the sons without issue his share, which (in the case of Narendra and the fourth and fifth sons) would include the said sum of Rs. 500, would devolve on the surviving sons. This shows that the gift of Rs. 500 was not limited to the life of Nagendra or the fourth and fifth sons.

It is contended that the reason why Rs. 500 was given out of the profits of Mahal Dwarbashini to Nagendra and the fourth and fifth sons was that portions of the Mahals allotted to them were haja at the time, that it was not likely that the lands would continue in the same condition for ever and that, therefore, the payment of Rs. 500 was intended to enure only for the life of Nagendra, within which period the testator probably expected that the condition of the lands would be changed. But in the first place, the expression haja thakai does not necessarily mean that it was temporarily under water; it refers to the character of the land and implies the liability to be flooded or being under water. In the next place, the suggestion does not support the contention that the payment of the sum of Rs. 500 was limited to the life of Nagendra, because Nagendra might die the day after the death of the testator and in that case the payment would cease according to the appellants' contention, even if the Mahals allotted to Nagendra continued to be in the same condition (haja) after Nagendra's death.

The Will provides that Narendra would execute an agreement to pay the sum of five hundred rupees to Nagendra, but no argument can be founded on it in favour of the appellants, as the agreement was to be executed whether the payment is held to be limited to the life of Nagendra or not. Probably it was supposed that an execution of the agreement by Narendra would facilitate realization of the amount and would bind Narendra more effectually.

Reliance is placed upon the 8th paragraph of the Will, which runs as follows:—"I give to my eldest son Narendra Nath Mukherjee and second son Surendra Nath Mukherjee properties of larger values and yielding larger profits on condition that they shall train and educate my minor sons, protect their persons and maintain them. If they neglect to do anything on behalf of the minors they shall be fully liable to the minors for losses caused by infringement of the above terms, and the properties as per schedules Nos. 1 and 2 shall also remain liable for the said losses." It is contended that this paragraph militates against the view that the intention of the testator was to equalize the shares. The first two sons were, no doubt, to train and educate the minor sons, the 6th and 7th sons. But the expense to be incurred for the education of the minor sons was not to be met by first and second sons from their own pockets. The 6th paragraph provides that the properties allotted to the minors were to be held in Ijara by the first five sons during their minority, the net profits payable to each of them being fixed at Rs. 2,750 out of which Rs. 500 was to be spent for the education of each, and the balance invested in Government promissory notes. The minors were not given anything out of the profits of Dwarbasini and it may be that in consideration of the first two sons training, educating and maintaining the minors, the latter were not to get anything from the former out of the Dwarbasini. However that may be, so far as Nagendra and the fourth and fifth sons are concerned, the second paragraph of the Will clearly shows that a sum of Rs. 500 out of the profits of Dwarbasini was given to each of them not only because the profits from Dwarbasini are much larger than those from the Mahals allotted to the other sons, but also because portions of the Mahals allotted to Nagendra and the 4th and 5th sons were haja. The Will must be read as a whole, and reading it as a whole we think that the clear intention of the testator was that the sum of Rs. 500, which is made payable out of the properties of Dwarbasini by Narendra to Nagendra, is not really an annuity, and in any case it was not limited to his life only, but forms part of the properties allotted to him and is absolute and perpetual, and this is the view which has been taken by both the Courts below. The whole difficulty has been raised by the absence of any words of inheritance, but as stated above, such words have not been used by the testator in any part of the Will, even with regard to gifts which admittedly are absolute.

The next question relates to interest. The Courts have decreed interest at 12 per cent. It is contended that having regard to the provisions of section 132 of the Probate Act, the plaintiffs are not entitled to more than 6 per cent. interest. But we think that the provisions of sections 130 to 134 relate to interest on annuities or legacies payable by the executor, and cannot apply to the sum of Rs. 500 to be paid out of the profits of Dwarbasini.

which Nagendra was entitled to as part of the properties obtained by him under the Will, and was in enjoyment of for several years before his death, and which devolved upon the plaintiffs as his heirs.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

INDOJI JITHAJI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KOTHAPALLI RAMA CHARLU AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Self-acquired property devised by father to sons, whether ancestral property in sons' hands—Release of co-parcener's share for consideration, whether transfer—Release, whether voidable by creditors—Death of releasor before action taken by creditors, effect of—Rights of creditors—Partition in status, when effected—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53.

The self-acquired property of a Hindu devised by him to his sons will be regarded, in the absence of an express intention to the contrary by the deviser, as ancestral property in the hands of the sons and not as their separate and self-acquired property. [p. 148, cols. 1 & 2; p. 151, col. 2.]

Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram, 3 M. H. C. R. 50 at p. 55, Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar, 24 M. 429; 11 M. L. J. 210, Venkataramiah Pantulu v. Subramaniam Pillai, 26 Ind. Cas. 393; 16 M. L. Whether in any given case property was intended to pass to the sons as ancestral or self-acquired property is a question of intention turning on the construction of the instrument of gift, the bias being in favour of ancestral property in the absence of words to the contrary. The fact that the grandsons' names are not mentioned in the instrument does not tend to show that the property is not ancestral. [p. 152, col. 1; p. 148, col. 2.]

Per Spencer, J.—A partition of family property among Hindus cannot be treated as a transfer within the scope of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, as it only effects a change in the mode of enjoyment of the property and is not an act conveying property from one living person to another. [p. 151, col. 1]

A document whereby a co-parcener relinquishes his incorporeal right to have a partition effected of joint family property is not a transfer which can be avoided by his unsecured creditors under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, if they have taken no action to attach his rights prior to the relinquishment. [p. 151, col. 2.]

Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act must be strictly construed, as it is a statutory provision and Courts have no power to extend statutory provisions by analogy to transactions which do not fall within the scope of the Statute. [p. 152, col. 2.]

Per Abdur Rahim, J.—The law requires some unequivocal and definite expression of an intention on the part of a member of a joint family, to the effect that in future he would regard himself as a separated member, before a severance can be held to have been effected, and the expression of such intention must be communicated to the other members or at least to the manager of the family. From the mere fact that a member of a joint family asks for a partition it is not to be necessarily inferred that he intended a separation of status before a partition was effected. [p. 150, col. 2.]

A relinquishment by a co-parcener of a large share in family properties in lieu of an inadequate and wholly disproportionate cash consideration received from the other members operates as a severance of the joint status and if it is effected to defeat creditors, the document may be avoided by the latter under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. [p. 149, col. 2.]

Appeals against the decrees of the District Court, North Arcot, dated the 30th March 1918, in Original Suits Nos. 13 and 14 of 1917.

FACTS.—The question in the case was the legal effect of a release deed executed by a Hindu son to his father prior to the son's death. There was also the further question whether the father and son were divided during the life. The contention was also that the creditor of the son had no remedy now that the son was dead and his share in the joint family had been taken by others by survivorship.

Mr. V. Ramadoss, for the Appellants.—The release is bad under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. It must be, if valid, for good consideration and bona fide; see Ohidambaram Chettiar v. Sami Aiyar (1), confirmed by the Privy Council in Ohidambaram Ohettiar v. Srinivasa Sastrial (2). See also Hakim Lal v. Moosahar Sahu (3), confirmed in Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (4). The grantee under the release knew full well of the involved circumstances of the son. See Alagappa Ohetty v. Dasappa Ohettiar (5).

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—The property in the hands of the grantee did not come to him through the release. It was the self-acquired property of his own father, which the latter devised to him. Hence it is his separate property over which the deceased had no manner of right. The decision to the contrary in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) is wrong in principle. When property is devised, there is no difference if the devisee is a relation or a stranger. Farther, a joint family is not a corporation, Shadogopa Naidu v. Thirumalaswami Naidu (7). A son to whom his father leaves his self-acquired property by Will takes the property under the Will, and not by inheritance. See Jugmohandas Mangaldas v. Mangaldas Nathubhoy (8), followed in Nanabhai Ganpatras Dhairyavan v. Achratbai (9), Bai Diwali v. Patel Becharadas (10), Timanacharya v. Balachory (11). Even Parsotam Rao Tantia v. Janki Bai (12) lays down the same view. No doubt Calcutta takes a different and uniform view. I submit that the Bombay view is the correct one.

Section 53 does not apply. The arrangement is a pure family arrangement. The release deed is, therefore, valid.

Mr. Ramadoss, in reply.—The Madras view has been uniform from Tara Chand v.

Reeb Ram (13) onwards and Calcutta has also taken the same uniform view throughout from Muddun Gopal Thakoor v. Ram Buksh Pandey (14).

The evidence proves a clear division in status.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The plaintiff, appellant, sued on several promissory notes executed by one Ranga Charlu, who died about six months before the institution of the suit, asking for a decree for Rs. 3,237.8.0 on account of principal and interest due on the notes and seeking to recover the amount out of his assets consisting of the share which, it is alleged, Rangacharlu had in the properties in the possession of the 1st defendant, his father, defendants Nos. 2 to 4, his brothers, and the 5th defendant, his widow. The main questions are, firstly, are the properties in dispute the ancestral properties of the family in the hands of the 1st defendant or his self-acquired and separate property, secondly, if ancestral, was there a division of status between Rangacharlu on the one hand and his father and brothers on the other, and, thirdly, is the instrument, Exhibit II, which is described as a release executed by Rangacharlu in favour of the 1st defendant, valid and operative as being made in bona fide settlement of a family dispute or is it liable to be avoided as being made to defeat Rangacharlu's creditors?

The 1st defendant obtained the property under a Will of his father, dated the 12th September 1910, wherein he describes the properties as his self-acquisition. He then bequeaths the properties in equal halves to the 1st defendant and to the minor son of the testator's deceased younger brother, his undivided co-parcener, and some small amounts to other persons. The main bequest was to the testator's son, the 1st defendant, and to the younger brother's son in equal moieties. There can be little doubt in my opinion that upon those facts the property would be ancestral property in the hands of the 1st defendant, according to the ruling of this Court in Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (13) and Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6). The question was fully discussed in the last-mentioned case, where it is laid down that "a father may leave his self-acquired property to descend to his sons as ancestral property or if he makes any disposition of it in favour of a son, he is at liberty to preserve for it the character of ancestral property. Whether in any given case, the property was intended to pass to the son as ancestral or as self-acquired property is a question of intention turning on the construction of the instrument of gift. If there are no words indicating a contrary intention, the natural inference should be that the father intended the sons to take the property as their ancestral estate." I may mention that the property in dispute there had also been devised under a Will, so that the ruling is a direct authority on the question before us. While laying down this proposition the learned Judges were careful to point out that any observation in the case reported as Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (13), to the effect that a Hindu cannot make a free disposition of his self-acquired property by gift or by testamentary disposition, was no longer good law in the light of later decisions. The decision in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) has been followed in a recent case reported as Venkataramiah Pantulu v. Subramaniam Pillai (15) and as I read the judgment of Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., in Krishnaswami Naidu v. Seethalakshmi Ammal (16), I do not think that they meant to question the correctness of that ruling. I should hold, therefore, that the law on the point as enunciated in Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (13) and Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) is settled so far as this Presidency is concerned.

In Calcutta the rule seems to be even more absolute in favour of such property being regarded as ancestral. See Hazarimal Babu v. Abani Nath (17). In Bombay, however, the law as expounded at least in the earlier cases was different. In Jugmohandas Mangaldas v. Mangaldas Nathubhoy (8) the matter was elaborately considered, and it was laid down that the self-acquired property of a Hindu devised by him to his son will be regarded as the self-acquired and separate property of the son and not as ancestral property. In a recent case, however, in that Court, Ahmedbhoy Habibbhoy v. Sir Dinshaw M. Petit (18), Beaman, J., seems to contend against the soundness of that ruling, and in any case, he understands it to lay down nothing more than that it is a question of the intention of the testator whether the property bequeathed by him is to be treated as ancestral or self-acquired in the hands of the donee. The Allahabad High Court's interpretation of the law was on the lines of the Bombay High Court. See Parso-tam Rao Tantia v. Janki Bai (12).

I do not think there is anything to show in this case that the 1st defendant's father intended that the property should be held by the 1st defendant as his self-acquired property. The fact that the testator did not mention in the Will the two sons of the 1st defendant who were living at the time does not in my opinion tend to rebut the presumption that the property is to be held by the 1st defendant as ancestral. The fact that such a presumption is raised by the law would in itself account for the non-mention of the 1st defendant's sons in the Will. On the other hand, the fact that the testator divided the property equally between his son and his younger brother's son supports the inference, that he meant the property to be enjoyed as ancestral property. I, therefore, agree in the finding of the District Judge on this point.

The next question we have to deal with is as to the validity of Exhibit II. The circumstances in which the document came into existence were briefly these. Ranga-charlu, who was the eldest son of the 1st defendant, was a reckless young man, addicted to women and drink. He borrowed money on promissory notes from Sowcars and consequently his father and the other relations were displeased with him. When the creditors clamoured for payment Ranga-charlu resorted to his father, the 1st defendant, who naturally did not like to be harassed in this way and he and his friends put their heads together to devise means of meeting the situation. They then hit upon the arrangement embodied in Exhibit II.

The learned Judge in the lower Court upholds the arrangement in Exhibit II as having been made in bona fide settlement of a family dispute. But I am unable to accept this conclusion. No doubt Exhibit II does mention that the 1st defendant, claiming the property as his self-acquired property, denied that Rangacharu had any share in it and that in order to settle all disputes the 1st defendant agreed to give Rs. 5,000 to Rangacharu and in consideration therefor he abandoned his claim to the property and released all his rights and interests therein, if any. Now, in the first place, the value of the property concerned is at least a Lakh and a half. According to law, Rangacharu had 1/5 share in it, which would be worth Rs. 30,000. There was no doubt as to the source of the property or how it devolved on the 1st defendant and on the date of Exhibit II the law in this Presidency, as I have tried to show, was settled. It is possible all the same that the 1st defendant believed bona fide that it was his self-acquired property in spite of the rulings of this Court. But I do not find upon the evidence, excepting the recital in Exhibit II, that there was really any dispute as to the character of the property and the share of Rangacharu therein. It was stated during the argument that Exhibit II was drafted by a lawyer. The lawyer has not been examined and there is no evidence that he advised the 1st defendant and Rangacharu or either of them that the property was ancestral in the hands of the 1st defendant. In fact beyond the recital in Exhibit II there is nothing to show that the 1st defendant claimed the property as his self-acquired property. On the other hand, Exhibit II came into existence because of the pressing demands of Rangacharu's creditors. All the circumstances show that the object of the arrangement was to protect the property from the claims of Rangacharu's creditors. It is probable that if not the entire Rs. 5,000, the consideration for Exhibit II, a substantial amount was paid to Rangacharu, but no portion of this amount reached the hands of his creditors; for Rangacharu seems to have made himself scarce with the money. There can be little doubt that Rangacharu in executing Exhibit II must be imputed with the intention of defeating his creditors, as that was the inevitable result of his act, and the 1st defendant must be held to have known this and aided his son in evading his creditors, as by the transaction evidenced by Exhibit II he would benefit himself largely at the expense of Rangacharu's creditors. I hold, therefore, that Exhibit II is voidable at the instance of the plaintiff upon the principle enunciated in section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The next question is whether Rangacharu had separated himself before his death. The law on the subject is fully enunciated by the Privy Council in Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (19). They say (page 1047*) "... Separation from the joint family involving the severance of the joint status so far as the separating member is concerned, with all the legal consequences resulting therefrom, is quite distinct from the de facto division into specific shares of the property held until then jointly. One is a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of any one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others without being subject to the obligations which arise from the joint status; whilst the other is the natural resultant from his decision, the division and separation of his share which may be arrived at either by private agreement among the parties, or on failure of that by the intervention of the Court. Once the decision has been unequivocally expressed and clearly intimated to his co-sharers, his right to obtain and possess the share to which he admittedly has a title is unimpeachable;" and at page 1050: "The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways, either by explicit declaration or by conduct. If it is an inference derivable from conduct it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit."

In this case the oral evidence relied on in support of separation is mainly that of the 1st defence witness, a relation by marriage of the 1st defendant, who says that "he (i.e., Rangacharlu) was fully determined on partition and made his father aware of it. He was not going to his father's house. During the one month it was a question of how much was to be given to him. The 1st defendant did not like to give him anything because he was a spendthrift and a rake." The 4th witness, whose sister is married to the 1st defendant and who took a very active part in bringing about an arrangement under Exhibit II, says in examination-in-chief: "Rangacharlu came to me and was demanding his share for a month previous to the release deed. He was demanding Rs. 10,000. I told his father and advised him to give him something. His father refused and said there was no reason why he should pay out of his property and Rangacharlu was in a bad state. We three mediators settled Rangacharlu should be paid Rs. 5,000. We told the 1st defendant and he said he could not pay so much. We prevailed upon him and he agreed. Rangacharlu also consented to Rs. 5,000. Exhibit II was brought into existence and Rangacharlu signed it. Money was paid to him before he signed. Sami Chetty said Rangacharlu complained he did not get food when he went to his house and was demanding his share. Then we settled, taking everything into consideration." The learned Vakil for the appellant stated in the opening that separation took place about 12 days before Exhibit II was executed. In any case he argued that Exhibit II created a division of status as found by the District Judge.

Some reference was also made to Exhibit J. The District Judge, however, finds that it was not proved that the original document of which Exhibit J is a copy was duly executed, and no serious attempt was made before us to show that that finding is wrong. Exhibit J undoubtedly would, in my opinion, show clearly that there had been a separation on or before 5th August 1914. The oral evidence I have cited may not, if it stood alone, be clear enough to show an unequivocal expression of Rangacharlu's intention to separate himself from the joint family and to enjoy henceforward his share in the joint family property in severalty. It is quite probable that Rangacharlu, who was in need of money, might have on different occasions expressed a desire to have a partition and might have communicated that desire through common friends or relatives to his father. The law requires some unequivocal and definite expression of an intention on the part of a member of a joint family, to the effect that in future he would regard himself as a separated member, and that the expression of such an intention must be communicated to the other members or at least to the manager of the family. From the mere fact that a member of a joint family asks for a partition it is not to be necessarily inferred that he intended a separation of status before a partition was effected. Did Rangacharlu then separate himself by executing Exhibit I? I have held that that document was executed in order to defeat creditors and the plaintiff on that very ground contends that it does not bind him. The question, however, is did Rangacharlu by executing Exhibit II express an intention to relinquish his status as a member of the joint family? If he did so, it would make no difference so far as its effect on his joint status is concerned, even if his further object was to defeat his creditors. As I read that document, though its apparent design was to settle a family dispute, its real object was that Rangacharlu should by receiving Rs. 5,000 relinquish his share in the property; and he says in so many words: "I have.....no concern with the same hereafter and excepting the tie of relationship by blood the relation through property no longer subsists as between you and me." It is a formal registered instrument and I hold that it contains a clear and unambiguous expression of a desire on the part of Rangacharlu to sever the joint status.

As I have held that Exhibit II is not binding on the plaintiff, the result will be that the judgment of the District Judge will be reversed and there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the sum of Rs. 3,287-80 with interest at 6 per cent, until payment. The appellant is entitled to his costs from the respondents both in this and in the lower Court.

My learned brother, however, would confirm the judgment of the lower Court.

INDOJI JITHAJI v. KOTHAPALLI RAMA CHARLU.

Under section 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure, therefore, the appeal will be dismissed with costs as against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and the decree will be in accordance with his judgment.

SPENCER, J.—These suits were brought by a money-lender to recover money lent upon promissory notes, Exhibits A to F, to one Rangacharu, a spendthrift youth, who is now dead. The 1st respondent is Rangacharu's father, the 2nd, 3rd and 4th respondents are his brothers, and the 5th respondent is his widow. It is sought to make them liable for payment. A few months after the execution of these promissory notes, a release deed (Exhibit II) was drawn up and signed by Rangacharu, whereby he took a lump sum of Rs. 5,000 in full quittance of his right, if any, to be given a share in the entire property, moveable and immoveable, acquired by Rangacharu's father Ramacharu under the Will of his father Bhujungacharu.

The plaintiff impugns Exhibit II as being a fraudulent document got up to defeat Rangacharu's creditors, while the defendants maintain that it represents a bona fide family settlement for good consideration.

It has been held in several cases that where land is transferred with the intention of converting it into cash and thus putting it beyond the reach of the transferor's creditors, the transaction is obviously one calculated to defeat the creditors in a most effective manner vide Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Co. Ltd. (20).

But we have not been referred to any case in which a partition of family property among Hindus has been treated as a transfer within the scope of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. A partition is a division or an agreement among co-owners to make a division of their joint property in severalty. It effects a change in the mode of enjoyment of property, but it is not an act of conveying property from one living person to another. Exhibit II is not in terms a division of property, nor is it a transfer or a release of property, but it purports to be a relinquishment of the executant's inchoate right to have a partition. The plaintiff would have had no ground for complaint if Rangacharu, his debtor, had been given more and had received it in a form more readily available for attachment by his creditors. The plaintiff's position may be regarded first from the standpoint of the property possessed by Ramacharu being his self-acquired property. If the estate bequeathed under Rangacharu's grandfather's Will was enjoyed as self-acquired property in the hands of Rangacharu's father, then Rangacharu could not claim as a matter of right to be given any definite portion of it. He had no more than an expectant right to succeed to a part of it on his father's death, which has not yet occurred. Now that Rangacharu is dead, his creditors can have no right whatever over the absolute estate of Rangacharu's father and the plaintiff's suit would necessarily fail against respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

If, on the other hand, this property was ancestral property in the father's hands at the time when the promissory notes which are the basis of the plaintiff's claim were executed, then Rangacharu had no exclusive ownership in any single item of that property. He had undoubtedly a right to demand a partition of the ancestral property in the management of his father, but the plaintiff did not obtain a transfer of that right from him, as another creditor (plaintiff's 3rd witness) did by his hypothecation deed of July 31st, 1914 (Exhibit L) before Rangacharu relinquished it under Exhibit II on August 12th, 1914. Thus the plaintiff was never in a position to insist upon an equal distribution of immoveable property being made among the members of his debtor's family. He was an unsecured creditor, and as such, he had to take his chances of getting his money whenever an opportunity occurred of attaching the debtor's property. A money-lender who lends money to a junior member of a joint family always runs the risk of losing his money if the debtor dies before he gets a decree and attaches the debtor's undivided share.

If the debtor died without becoming divided, all the remaining interest that the debtor possessed in the ancestral property of his family passed to the surviving members of that family. But if Exhibit II created, as it appears to have done, a severance of status between Rangacharu and his father and brothers, then all that Rangacharu got by the partition before his death was the sum of Rs. 5,000 and that is all that became available for satisfying his unsecured creditors. Exhibit II contains these words:—"Whereas I and your other sons * * * were living as a joint family * * * you know that I, not finding our house a suitable habitation, have taken to separate living * * * I have received Rs. 5,000 in cash from you this day. So I have hereby relinquished the entire right and interest, if any, that I may possess in respect of the entire property, moveable and immoveable, that may be in your possession, that is to say, all the immoveable properties described below, other moveables and outstanding debts due from others as per documents, etc. I have, therefore, no concern with the same hereafter and excepting the tie of relationship by blood, the relation through property no longer subsists as between you and me." After such a clear and unequivocal statement it is impossible to conceive of Rangacharu's continuance in the undivided family to which his father and brothers belonged. The document cannot be treated as a nullity by one who lays claim to an interest in the property of those who were parties to it. So the plaintiff has no means, apart from section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, of avoiding the effect of Exhibit II, and he cannot avail himself of the provisions of that section unless he shows.

(1) that the document was in substance a transfer of immoveable property;

(2) that it was intended thereby to defeat or delay the transferor's creditors, and he must fail if the defendants prove it to be an act done bona fide and for consideration.

I have already given reasons for thinking that partitions of co-parcenary property do not fall within the scope of section 53 which deals with transfers of immoveable property, seeing that every member of a co-parcenary has before a partition takes place a common interest in and a possession of every item of ancestral property, and that the subjects of partition and settlements, though proposed to be included in the Bill of 1877, were found unsuitable and were designedly left out and a separate Act (Act IV of 1893) was enacted, in which no provision for the protection of creditors corresponding to section 53 of Act IV of 1882 is included. I think that this section must be strictly construed as it is a statutory provision, and I doubt whether Courts have the power to extend statutory provisions by analogy to transactions which do not fall within the scope of the Statute. (I refer to the definition of "Transfer of property" in section 5, Transfer of Property Act). Exhibit II cannot be impugned as fraudulent in a general sense, as it does not violate the legal rights of anybody.

On the second point the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that Exhibit II represented a bona fide settlement and I agree with him on this point.

As he observes, it is not likely that Rangacharu would have voluntarily taken less than he could get, as he had somehow to maintain himself after separation from his family. If Exhibit J, produced for the plaintiff and spoken to by P. W. No. 2, which is an uncertified copy of an unregistered document, is of any value, it only goes to help the defendants' case by showing that Rangacharu tried to get Rs. 30,000 as his share on partition.

But he only got Rs. 5,000 through Exhibit II, which, as stated in the recital of that document and as spoken to by defendants' witnesses Nos. 1, 3 and 4, was the result of the intervention of mediators, the amount being fixed at that figure, partly because the 1st defendant's elder brother had once taken a similar amount from the family chest when he became separate some years previously and partly because some doubt was felt at the time whether Rangacharu was strictly entitled to any share in property received by his father under the Will of his grandfather, as it was regarded as the father's self-acquisition.

The learned District Judge has held on the authority of Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) that 1st defendant took this property as ancestral property, although it was self-acquired property in the hands of the testator. A number of decisions have been cited by respondents' Vakil, from which it appears that while the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts have treated property acquired through the Will of a grandfather as self-acquired, the Madras and Calcutta High Courts have inclined to the view that it is prima facie ancestral.

Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (13) and Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) have been followed by judgments of a single Judge in Venkataramiah Pantulu v. Subramaniam Pillai (15) and Shadagopu Naidu v. Thirumalaswami Naidu (7), and not directly dissented from in Yethirajulu Naidu v. Mukunthu Naidu (21) which turned on the construction of a particular Will. The decision in Mangaldas's case, Jugmohandas Mangaldas v. Mangaldas Nathubhoy (3), though followed in Nanabhai Ganpatrao Dhairyawan v. Achratbai (9) in the judgment of a single Judge, has come in for much criticism from Beaman, J. in Ahmedbhai Habibbhai v. Sir Dinshaw M. Petit (18) and the case in Muddun Gopal Thakoor v. Ram Buksh Pandey (14), from which the view taken in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) started, has been cited with approval by Mookerjee, J., in Hazari-mal Babu v. Abani Noth (17).

After all, what was laid down in Nagalingam Pillai v. Ramachandra Tevar (6) was that the question whether the property passed to the son as ancestral or self-acquired property was in every case a question of intention depending on the construction of the Will or gift deed, the bias being in favour of ancestral property in the absence of words to the contrary. Exhibit IV contains a bequest of Rs. 3,500 in favour of the children of the testator's divided eldest son, a provision of maintenance in favour of his daughter and a gift of the testator's half share in certain ancestral property for charitable purposes, but after a preliminary statement that the entire property enjoyed by the testator is his self acquisition, the Will proceeds to an equal division of the bulk of it between his own son (1st defendant) and his younger brother's son Sabbana Charyulu and closes with a protest against the equality of the division being hereafter called in question. There are no words to indicate an intention on the part of the testator that his son should enjoy his portion as self-acquired property. The ammonite, which formed a kind of family idol, was left to be enjoyed by the son and the nephew in common. On the construction of the Will, the learned District Judge rightly held on the 3rd issue that the property became ancestral property in the hands of the 1st defendant.

But the idea in the minds of the parties to the settlement that in the eye of the law this property was the self-acquired property of the 1st defendant explains to some extent why no more than Rs. 5,000 was offered to and accepted by Rangacharu and thus throws light on the bona fides of the compromise.

As I think that Exhibit II should be upheld as a bona fide family settlement, the appeals in my opinion fail and should be dismissed with costs. I also observe that if for any reason Exhibit II were to be treated as a voidable document and vacated, then as it is not shown that Rangacharu became divided at any other time, he must be taken to have lived and died undivided, in which case the whole of his share passed by survivorship to the remaining members of the joint family, against whom the unsecured creditors have no legal claim for payment of his debts, before this suit was instituted. Thus in any case the 5th respondent alone is Rangacharu's heir after he became divided and the other respondents are not liable to be made to pay his debts by a decree of Court. In the result I would give the plaintiff a decree against 5th respondent with costs in both Courts and dismiss the appeals against the other respondents and direct him to pay their costs.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. MAHARAJA OF BOBBILI.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

APPEAL FROM THE MADRAS HIGH COURT.

July 11, 1919.

Present:—Viscount Haldane, Lord Buckmaster, Lord Dunedin and Lord Shaw.

SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—APPELLANT

versus

MAHARAJA OF BOBBILI—RESPONDENT.

Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865), s. 1—“Engagement with Government,” easement, whether amounts to—Forfeiture of servient estate, effect of—Dominant estate, whether liable to pay cess.

When the Government in India forfeits an estate, the Crown takes that estate tantum et tale as it stood in the subject against whom the forfeiture is exercised: it takes it, therefore, subject to all existing easements. [p. 159, col. 1.]

Where a Zemindar had an easement to irrigate his estate free from an artificial channel passing through the estate of his neighbour, and Government forfeited the neighbour's estate for rebellion:

Held, that the Zemindar had an “engagement with the Government” within the meaning of the proviso to section 1 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act of 1865 and that, therefore, he was not liable to pay the irrigation cess imposed under the Act. [p. 159, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, dated the 27th October 1915, affirming a decree of the District Judge of Vizagapatam, dated the 9th December 1909.

FACTS.—The respondent sued for refund of cess levied upon him in 1907 under Madras Irrigation Act VII of 1865 and paid under protest, and for a declaration that he was entitled to use the water for irrigating his village of Narayanapuram free of cess. He alleged, inter alia,

(a) that the irrigation channel in question was constructed more than a century ago by the Zemindar of Palkonda, an estate since forfeited by Government,

(b) that his lands had ever since been irrigated from it and that he and his predecessors-in-title had from time to time repaired the channel and constructed sluices to it at their own expense,

(c) that he was entitled to the irrigation of his lands from the channel free of charge as a riparian proprietor and by virtue of long user, custom, prescription, and easement, and according to an understanding and agreement between his predecessors-in-title and the then Zemindars of Palkonda and (since the Palkonda estate was forfeited and became the property of Government) between his predecessors-in-title and himself on the one hand and the Government on the other.

By his written statement appellant pleaded that both the river and channel were the absolute property of Government and were a Government source of irrigation: he denied the understanding or agreement and the right by user, custom, prescription or easement alleged: and he claimed to be entitled to levy water rate upon all lands in the suit village, on which a second wet crop was now raised, in excess of the Permanent Settlement wet area.

The District Judge at first held it unnecessary to decide the issue whether the river in question (the Suvarnamukhi) belonged to Government, and that the only question was whether Government was entitled to levy cess for water taken from the channel: that the channel was constructed by the Palkonda Zemindar between 1690 and 1780, and now belonged to Government: that as the channel was an artificial one, the plaintiff could have no right based on riparian ownership: and that no such custom as alleged by plaintiff was proved. He found, however, the following facts in plaintiff's favour:—

(1) that in 1814 the Palkonda Zemindar admitted the right of plaintiff's predecessor to irrigate his land from the channel through five sluices:

(2) that in 1865, 1901 and 1903 Government had recognised respondent's right to irrigate his lands from the channel, and had allowed him to construct masonry sluices at his own expense, and that the Government had done nothing to improve the supply since the forfeiture in 1833:

(3) that no charge was levied by Government till 1907.

From these facts he inferred a grant or agreement by the Palkonda Zemindar, by which Government were bound, as they could only succeed to the Zemindar's title to the channel subject to existing rights. He, therefore, decreed the suit.

On appeal the Madras High Court (Sir Arnold White, C. J., and Oldfield, J.) remanded the case to the Trial Judge for findings upon the issue whether the Suvarnamukhi river belonged to Government and the following further questions:

SECRETARY OF STATE v. MAHARAJA OF BOBBILI.

(1) whether the 160 acres in respect of which the Government claim the right to levy water-cess were at the time of the Permanent Settlement taken into account as wet land for the purposes of the settlement; (2) whether subsequently to the Permanent Settlement there has been an engagement with the Government under which the plaintiff has become entitled to irrigation free of separate charge as regards these 160 acres.

The District Judge found that the river belonged to Government: and (1) that the lands in question were not irrigated until after the Permanent Settlement: (2) that after the Permanent Settlement there was "an implied agreement by Government to supply the plaintiff with water from the channel as before the forfeiture of the Palkonda Zemindari," and he further held that the Government engaged that this should be free of any separate charge.

These last two findings were considered by the same Bench of the Madras High Court. As to (1) Oldfield, J., after examining the evidence at length, concurred with the Trial Judge: as to (2) he held that even assuming a grant or undertaking by the Palkonda Zemindar, no "engagement with the Government" could be inferred. Sir Arnold White, C. J., expressed some doubt as to (1) but was not prepared to differ from the finding thereon. As to (2) he held that even assuming that the obligation to supply water, originally incumbent on the Palkonda Zemindar, devolved upon Government, it did not follow that Government was not entitled to levy a tax for the use of the water; he, therefore, by a different process of reasoning, agreed with Oldfield, J., that there was no "engagement with the Government" excluding the cess. But the question whether the river from which the channel took off was a Government river still remained: the finding on that issue came before a different Bench of the High Court, consisting of Sir J. Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Aiyar, J., and these learned Judges agreed that as the banks and bed of the river did not belong to the Government until below the point at which the channel took off, the river itself was not a river belonging to the Government within the meaning of the Act. On this ground they affirmed the decree in plaintiff's favour passed by the District Judge.

Sir Erle Richards, K. O., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellant.—The words "river, stream, channel, tank or work" in section 1 of the Madras Irrigation Cess Act are disjunctive: it is not necessary that the river from which the channel takes off should belong to Government: it is enough that the channel does. The ownership of the channel passed to Government on the forfeiture in 1833. Unless, therefore, there was an "engagement with the Government" within the meaning of the proviso, the cess was properly levied. The High Court, having held there was not, should have allowed the appeal.

The High Court have rightly held there was no "engagement" within the Act. Such an engagement cannot arise out of user subsequent to the Permanent Settlement. That question was left open when in Kandukuri Balasurya Prasadha Row v. Secretary of State (1) it was held that an engagement arises out of the permanent settlement of lands then irrigated. The imposition of a cess in this case is not in breach of any engagement with the Government made at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and since that time there has been nothing in the nature of a bilateral transaction between the owners of the land and Government from which an agreement can be implied. The question upon the proviso is not one of proprietary right or of easement, but of engagement—of contract: whether there is a contractual right to have the water free of cess. The proviso does not purport to preserve all existing rights.

Mr. Upjohn, K. O., Sir W. Garth, K. O., and Mr. Parikh, for the Respondent, were not called on.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Madras dated the 27th October 1915, which affirmed a decree of the District Judge of Vizagapatam, dated the 9th December 1909. The suit was brought by the Maharaja of Bobbili, viz., the present respondent, for the refund of a sum levied under the

SECRETARY OF STATE v. MAHARAJA OF BOBBILI.

Madras Irrigation Cess Act (VII of 1865), and paid under protest, and for a declaration that he was entitled to use the water from a certain channel for irrigation of the village of Narayanapuram, free of the cess.

The respondent was the owner of a village called Narayanapuram in the district of Vizagapatam. For upwards of a century the lands of this village have been irrigated by the water of the Suvarnamukhi river flowing through an artificial channel known as the Sakarapalli channel. The river runs through the respondent's estate (amongst others), and its banks and bed in its course through that estate admittedly belong to him.

The history of the facts may be stated in one or two sentences. The Suvarnamukhi river rises in Zemindari land and flows through Zemindari land up to the suit village of Narayanapuram. From this river a channel was constructed by a Zemindar of Palkonda, no doubt for irrigation purposes. Apparently in order to obtain a suitable flow, the river had to be tapped at a point considerably above the Palkonda lands, and the river being so tapped, the channel proceeded therefrom through the lands of inter alios the predecessor of the present Maharaja, who is the respondent.

The Trial Judge is of opinion that the channel was probably constructed somewhere between 1690 and 1780. The evidence is not clear as to the exact date at which certain sluices, four of which still remain, were constructed from the channel for the purpose of irrigating the respondent's lands. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that the irrigation of the village is not proved to have taken place prior to the Permanent Settlement of the year 1801, notwithstanding the fact that, as already stated, the Trial Judge is of opinion that the channel itself was constructed many years earlier. It is unnecessary for the Board to enter upon the question whether a conclusion of this kind, which is more of the nature of a conjecture with regard to the probabilities of an obscure situation, could be classed as a concurrent finding of fact precluding a different finding here; but their Lordships must not be held as acceding to the view, founded upon the state of the Permanent Settlement record, that the absence of express notice of the sources of water supply warrants the conclusion that such a supply—from the channel admittedly in existence then and for many years before—was not furnished to the respondent's lands.

As to the state of matters at the beginning of the 19th century, their Lordships agree with the view of the District Judge when he says:—

"The plaintiff relies upon Exhibit C as showing that in 1814 the then Zemindar admitted the right of plaintiff's predecessor to irrigate his lands from the channel through five punathas (sluices). There can be no doubt about this. This document was proved as Exhibit IV, in the connected suit, Original Suit No. 13 of 1906 on behalf of the defendant. Its existence was then probably not known to the plaintiff, as it was only produced for the first time at the hearing of Original Suit No. 13 of 1906. It shows conclusively that while the Palkonda Zemindars owned the channel, the plaintiff's right to irrigate his Narayanapuram lands through five punathas was admitted and recognised, and that no labour or contribution was provided by the village for repairing the channel. The oral evidence shows that the Zemindar (plaintiff) is in fact only enjoying four punathas now."

Two outstanding facts accordingly appear with regard to the irrigation of this property, namely, that for over at least one hundred years it has been enjoyed as matter of right; secondly, that no pecuniary return was made therefor. In short, the case appears to be the simple one, viz.—that for land given as part of the channel artificially constructed for irrigation purposes, a right to draw off water as it passed was conferred upon the respondent's predecessors and himself, and that that right has been enjoyed by them ever since. It is in these circumstances that the question arises whether the respondent is liable to pay an irrigation cess in virtue of the Madras Act No. VII of 1865, as amended by Madras Act V of 1900. No claim therefor in respect of these lands was made until the year 1907. Payment was made under protest, and the present suit to determine liability was instituted.

The case depends upon the proper construction to be put upon the Act

referred to. Its preamble is not without importance:—

"Whereas, in several districts of the Madras Presidency, large expenditure out of Government funds has been, and is still being, incurred in the construction and improvement of works of irrigation and drainage, to the great advantage of the country and of proprietors and tenants of land: and whereas it is right and proper that a fit return should, in all cases alike, be made to Government on account of the increased profits derivable from lands irrigated by such works; it is enacted as follows:—"

So far as the preamble goes, the Act would not appear to be directed against lands such as those of the respondent; for it is admitted that no works or action of the Government have either created or increased the supply of water to his lands. It is nevertheless true, as was indicated by Lord Parker in his judgment in Kandukuri Balasurya Prasadha Row v. Secretary of State (1), that section 1 of the Amending Act makes operative provisions somewhat in excess of the apparent ambit of the preamble. If so, the section must govern.

It is in the following term:—

"Sections 1 and 4 of the Madras Act VII of 1865 . . . shall be read and construed as if at the time of the passing of the said Act there were and had been inserted in lieu of the said sections the following, viz:—

"(a) Whenever water is supplied or used for purposes of irrigation from any river, stream, channel, tank or work belonging to or constructed by Government, and also,

"(b) whenever water by direct or indirect flow or by percolation or drainage from any such river, stream, channel, tank or work from or through adjoining land irrigates any land under cultivation or flows into a reservoir and is thereafter used for irrigating any land under cultivation, and, in the opinion of the Collector, subject to the control of the Board of Revenue and the Government, such irrigation is beneficial to, and sufficient for the requirements of, the crop on such land,

"it shall be lawful for the Government to levy at pleasure on the land so irrigated a separate cess for such water, and the Government may prescribe the rules under which, and the rates at which, such water-cess, as aforesaid shall be levied and alter or amend the same from time to time:

"Provided that where a Zemindar or Inamdar or any other description of landholder not holding under ryotwari settlement is by virtue of engagements with the Government entitled to irrigation free of separate charge, no cess under this Act shall be imposed for water supplied to the extent of this right and no more..."

The respondent's position is that of a Zemindar not holding under "ryotwari settlement;" he is, therefore, a person directly pointed to by the proviso just cited, and in view of the history of the lands as already sketched, the question is at once raised as to whether this Zemindar is "by virtue of engagements with the Government" entitled to irrigation free of separate charge. If he is, then no cess is leviable in respect thereof; nor would any cess have been leviable under the Act of 1865 as unamended: for by section 4 of the Act of 1865 there is a similar proviso of exemption. The reason of such a proviso is not far to seek. The Government was contemplating irrigation works, and along with these the financing of those operations; and the preamble indicates not obscurely that the financing was to be met by way of a fit return to Government on account of the increased profits which would be derivable from lands irrigated by such Government works. If, however, in consequence of other arrangements, or, as section 1 puts it, "engagements," the irrigation had been accomplished and financed apart from expenditure under the Statute, then those lands should stand free from the statutory cess.

The question accordingly in the present case is whether there are such "engagements with the Government." On this question there was a sharp division of opinion in the Courts below, and it is necessary to state how it is that the Government's claim to be owner of the channel arises. In the year 1832 the Palkonda Zemindar rebelled against the Government. His lands were in consequence forfeited to the Crown. As already stated, the artificial channel was at that time constructed and the irrigation as a system applicable to the lands of Bobbili was in full operation. No attempt was made by the Government of the day to change the footing upon which the irrigation rights were enjoyed or to assert any right in the Crown as owner of the servient tenement of Palkonda, which would lessen or interfere with the continued enjoyment of the easement by the respondent's predecessors as of right and without exaction or charge.

What was the nature of this right of easement? It was to receive and utilise for irrigation purposes from an artificial channel a supply of water. It is, of course, in accord with legal theory that such a right of easement is created by grant, but it is also sound law that a grant of such a right is presumed from long possession, although the actual transaction of making such a grant cannot be discovered or proved. The present case is accordingly in no way singular in this respect, that the acts of parties over a long course of years point to the enjoyment of an easement founded upon a grant by the owner of the servient to the owner of the dominant tenement.

Upon the facts of the present case it appears to be clearly established that for about fifty years, namely, from 1814 till 1865, when the Act was passed, the owners of Palkonda and the Zamindar of Bobbili stood in the position of having, the one a servient, and the other a dominant tenement, with the unchallenged enjoyment of the easement of water supply as stated. Had the question now in suit accordingly arisen in the year 1864 there seems little reason to doubt that the right of the respondent would have been settled upon that footing.

But the matter does not end there. The Act of 1865 was passed, and for forty two years the same state of matters was continued. Had this suit been raised in the year 1866 instead of 1907, a serious question would still even then have arisen, namely, whether the words in the section "engagements with the Government" did not require a construction inclusive of engagements with the Government or its predecessors-in-title, as only by such a construction could justice be done to the manifest intention to reserve as against water-cess those who had already been furnished with their own water supply.

The position is strengthened by the further lapse of time and, in their Lordships' view, the Government must stand committed to the transactions which they have accepted as binding parties for a period of between eighty and ninety years, during which (including forty years since the Act was passed) the Zamindari of Bobbili has been enjoyed without any question that the Zamindar held under a tenure which gave him the benefit of the proviso in the Statute.

This view is in no way in conflict with the view of Lord Parker in the case referred to. On the contrary, it appears to be supported by certain passages in that judgment. His Lordship refers to the Permanent Settlement in the Madras Presidency under which the Government granted to the Zamindars "a permanent property in their land for all time to come, and would fix for ever a moderate assessment of public revenue on such lands the amount of which should never be liable to be increased under any circumstances;" and he adds: "Under these circumstances the Government could not impose a cess for the use of water the right to use which was appurtenant to the land in respect of which the jama was payable without in fact, if not in name, increasing the amount of such jama, and thus committing a breach of the obligation undertaken at the time of the Permanent Settlement." With regard to the actual question in the present case, judgment was expressly reserved. Referring to the difficulties which arise in the construction of the Act and the fact that the levy is made on the basis of the area irrigated, irrespective of profits, Lord Parker said: "If in order to avoid this result reliance were placed on the first proviso, the question would arise whether it were possible to imply some engagement with the Government arising out of the natural or prescriptive right of the riparian owner."

That question so reserved is the point now in issue. In their Lordships' opinion such an engagement should be implied in the circumstances already set out. The predecessors of the respondent were using the water as of right when the servient Zamindari was forfeited to the Crown in 1833; with the owners of that Zamindari they had, to use the general term employed in the Statute, a good "engagement:" in taking the servient estate, this engagement accompanied the transaction, and the engagement was thereafter with the Crown. In short, the forfeiture could not operate against a dominant and unforfeited Zemindari. With acquisition by forfeiture the Crown became bound to take the forfeited estate tantum et tale as it stood in the subject who had rebelled, that is to say, to respect the rights and in particular the easements enjoyed by others. Otherwise the scope of the forfeiture would be extended; pro tanto it would fall upon innocent and loyal subjects.

This is sufficient for disposal of the appeal. The case was unfortunately much delayed owing to various causes not sufficiently explained. Time also was occupied by a remit for enquiries in regard to the ownership of the river itself from which the water was drawn by the channel. While their Lordships do not differ from the conclusion upon that topic arrived at by the High Court, they are of opinion that the case should be determined on the simpler ground above stated. In their Lordships' opinion the Crown has failed to establish the liability of the respondent.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

In the case of property loaned to be returned when asked for, no action would lie until a return has been demanded and refused and the mere fact that the borrower has, unknown to the lender, wrongfully converted the subject of the loan would not affect the question of limitation. [p. 160, col. 1.]

The period of limitation in such cases would run from the date of demand and refusal, and not from the date when the property was converted wrongfully. [p. 160, col. 2.]

Messrs. Dillon and B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiffs sued to recover a female elephant valued at Rs. 3,000, which they had allegedly loaned to the defendant Bhaosingh in May 1891. The defendant Bhaosingh pleaded that his brother Dalpat Singh, the grandfather of the plaintiffs, had given him the elephant in 1882 and that he had pawned it to the defendant Khubchand (who is related to the litigants) in the beginning of 1890. It was also pleaded that the claim was barred by limitation and that the proper value of the elephant was Rs. 1,300 only. The defendant Khubchand admitted that he held the elephant in pawn and raised no fresh pleas. The first Court found that the elephant was the property of the plaintiffs and had been loaned by them to the defendant Bhaosingh not in 1891, but on some date more than six years prior to the institution of the suit. It considered that the claim was governed either by Article 49 or by Article 120 of the Limitation Schedule and dismissed the suit as time-barred. On an appeal by the plaintiffs the Judicial Assistant affirmed the finding as to ownership, but held that the possession of the defendant Bhaosingh was not adverse and that limitation did not commence to run until the return of the elephant was refused. For some reason which is not very intelligible the defendant Khubchand was discharged from the suit and a decree was passed against the defendant Bhaosingh, to the effect that he should put the plaintiffs in possession of the elephant or pay the value of the animal, viz., Rs. 3,000.

Against this decree both parties have made a second appeal to this Court. In regard to the plea that the Courts below have come to no distinct finding as to the value of the elephant, it is agreed on both sides that for the purposes of calculating costs and awarding damages the value of the elephant shall be taken to be Rs. 2,000.

The only plea then raised by the defendant Bhaosingh is in regard to limitation, and this plea clearly carries no weight. The Statute of Limitation does not necessarily begin to run from the time of the making of a contract or promise, but it runs from the time when the plaintiff might have brought his action. Now in the case of property loaned to be returned when asked for, no action would lie until a return had been demanded and refused and the mere fact that the borrower had, unknown to the lender, wrongfully converted the subject of the loan would not, I think, affect the question of limitation. The present case is in principle on all fours with the English case of Wilkinson v. Verity (1), and the defence raised was precisely the same. In 1859 the defendant had taken possession of certain church plate for the use of the parish and to be forthcoming when required. In the course of the same year he sold it as old silver to a silversmith and eleven years afterwards the plaintiffs brought an action of detinue, proving a demand made shortly before the action and a refusal to comply. On behalf of the defendant it was pleaded that as a conversion of the property had been made more than six years previously the action was time barred. In giving judgment Mr. Justice Willes noted that the point was a new one and concluded thus:—"If the action for detinue is resorted to for the purpose of asserting against a person entrusted for safe custody a breach of his duty as bailee by detention after demand, independent of any other act of conversion, such as would make him liable in an action of trover, it would seem that the owner is entitled to sue at election either for a wrongful parting with the property (if he discovers and can prove it) or to wait until there is a breach of the bailee's duty in the ordinary course by refusal to deliver up on request; and that in the latter case it is no answer for the bailee to say that he has by his own misconduct incapacitated himself from complying with the lawful demand of the bailor. A man entrusted with property for safe custody cannot better his position by wrongfully parting with possession of it but must be answerable as if he retained the possession. And this is agreeable to the maxim qui dolo desit possidere proposti deute damnavit."

This view appears to be in complete accord with the law of this country. Article 49 of the Limitation Schedule (which I think governs the present case) enacts that a suit for specific movable property not covered by the preceding Article shall be brought within three years from the time when the detainer's possession becomes unlawful, that is in the present case from the time when a return of the movable was demanded and refused. I am not aware that the point under discussion has ever come before the Courts in this country, but the ratio decidendi in Issur Ohunder Doss v. Juggut Ohunder Shaha (2) is to some extent applicable. The appeal by the defendant Bhaosingh fails and is dismissed with costs in this Court on the appellant up to Rs. 2,000.

Turning now to the plaintiffs' appeal, it may be said at once that the dismissal of the claim as against the defendant Khubchand, who is in wrongful possession of the elephant, cannot be sustained. Although the question was never raised in the first Court, I may note that the principle laid down in the first exception to section 108 of the Contract Act would not apply so as to render the plaintiffs liable for any charge upon the property [cf. Shankar Murlidhar v. Mohanlal Jaduram (3) and the cases therein cited]. It is further clear that the form of the decree is wrong, inasmuch as it allows the defendants the option either of returning the elephant or paying its value.

The appeal by the plaintiffs succeeds and on such appeal it is directed that the decree of the lower Appellate Court be set aside and that in lieu thereof a decree be passed for the plaintiffs against both defendants for return of the elephant claimed; if delivery could not be had then the defendants shall pay as an alternative the sum of Rs. 2,000.

As regards costs the defendants must pay their own costs throughout, and the defendant Bhaosingh must also pay the plaintiffs' costs in all Courts up to Rs. 2,000.

Appeal dismissed.

The power of appeal under section 417 of the Criminal Procedure Code should be exercised sparingly by the Government. The discretion to exercise that power, however, is not subject to the control of the High Court, and, where, in such an appeal, the Court is of opinion that the lower court has acted on an erroneous view of the evidence, and that it should have convicted the accused, it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict. Criminal appeal by the Government of Bombay, from an order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge at Nasik.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

Mr. D. R. Patwardhan, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The accused Sakharan Manaji Vanjari was tried for the murder of Vithi, wife of Bhika Gangaram, and was acquitted by the Sessions Judge of Nasik. This is an appeal by the Government of Bombay under section 417 against the acquittal.

Vithi was a young woman aged 12, who lived with her husband Bhika Gangaram at the village of Wadgaon, a few miles from Deolali. Her husband worked as a cartman at Deolali. On the 8th of September, the husband says, Vithi came in the morning to Deolali and left him his food and fodder for his bullocks and a message that she would return in the evening with his dinner. After his work he returned to Deolali Station at 3 p. m. expecting her to arrive. She did not come. He went home and found that she had not returned home after her visit to Deolali that morning. He searched for her that night and next morning without success, and at 4 p. m. on the 9th learnt that her corpse had been found in the bed of a Nalla between Wadgaon and Nanegaon on the way from Deolali. He went there with the Wadgaon Patil, who sent for the Nanegaon Patil as the place was within the boundary of the village of Nanegaon. He then went back to Wadgaon in the evening and learnt from the womenfolk that Yama had a clue to the murder. He found Yama at his house at 4 p. m. and after much persuasion Yama told him that Bhika Raoji had said that accused and Pandu had committed the murder. He looked for Bhika Raoji, but could not find him and returned to the scene of the murder at 11 p. m. By that time the Nanegaon Patil had arrived and later about 2 a. m. the Sub-Inspector came there. The Sub-Inspector made an inquest in the morning of the 10th. He did not take the statement of the husband till the afternoon after he had gone on to Wadgaon. He did not find Yama, Bhika, Pandu and the accused till the 11th. On that evening he arrested the accused.

Now there is no doubt that Vithi was murdered in the Nalla bed. Her throat was cut. There was much blood on the ground near the corpse and there were other marks of violence. Broken pieces of bangles and of a necklace were lying 9 or 11 paces from the corpse and the body had been dragged from there to the place where it was found. The motive for the murder was not robbery, for the woman's ornaments had not been touched. The kasota, however, had been loosened and there can be no doubt that the unfortunate woman had been ravished and murdered.

Bhika Raoji is the most important witness in the case. His field is 500 paces from the Nalla bed where the corpse was lying. He says that on the morning of the 8th while ploughing his field he saw four men from Wadgaon, the accused, Pandu, Narayan and Ramji, carrying head loads of grass pass by the path alongside his field, cross the Nalla and sit down to rest on a hillock which is 100 paces from the further bank of the Nalla. He saw a woman coming from towards Nanegaon. He says that she passed the four men, halted, looked back and proceeded on her way towards the stream. He says that Narayan and Ramji got up and went on their way towards Nanegaon. The accused, he says, ran towards the Nalla and like the woman went out of sight in the Nalla bed. Pandu then followed and stood on the far bank of the Nalla. He says that Pandu then returned, picked up his load and went on towards Nanegaon; and after him the accused came out of the Nalla bed and did the same. But as the woman did not appear, he felt suspicious, went to the Nalla bed and saw that she had been murdered there. He was terrified and went and told Yama and Ramchandra, who were in their field beyond his, that a murder had been committed in the Nalla bed by Pandu and the accused Sakharam. All these three went away without going to the scene of the crime or giving the alarm. That is not surprising, for the average villager has little sense of civic duty and is much afraid of being mixed up in a Police case.

There can be no doubt, however, that the main facts of Bhika Raoji's story are true. Narayan was called as a witness and he says that he, Ramji, Pandu and the accused rested with their head loads on a hillock, that Vithi passed them, that he spoke to her and that as she went on to cross the river bed, he and Ramji left. The Sessions Judge has believed this witness. His evidence establishes that the accused and Pandu were left near Vithi at the place where she was murdered and at the time of her murder.

Now Pandu admits that he was at the hillock with Narayan, Ramji and the accused, that Vithi passed them, that Narayan and Ramji went on and, he says:—"Then Sakharam the accused followed her and obstructed her near the bank of the dry stream. She shouted and I went towards her. When I reached the bank of the river, I saw that Vithi was lying on her side in the dry bed of the stream. Sakharam was standing and was holding her. He put one hand on her neck and the other on her thigh. Accused was stopping at the time. I remonstrated saying she had done him no harm. Thereupon he took out a knife from his pocket. I saw the blade. He told me if I shouted or made noise he would kill me. When this was going on, I saw Vithi's face. She was struggling to get up. I then went away after Narayan and Ramji as the accused's threat frightened me."

But though he says he went away because he was frightened, Pandu admits that he went on with the accused and joined Narayan and Ramji at the Darna river on their way, where they bathed. He also went on with the accused to Deolali Station and he was seen with the accused in a hut near Deolali Station at 3 p. m. that day by Vithi's husband, who was there waiting for his wife. There can be no doubt that Pandu was an accomplice in the murder. He is a distant relation of Bhika Raoji and the Sessions Judge thinks that Bhika Raoji is trying to shield Pandu when he says that Pandu did nothing but look on from the bank. We agree. We also agree with the Sessions Judge that if the Sub-Inspector had taken the trouble to question the husband as soon as he arrived at the scene of offence, and to secure the evidence of Bhika Raoji earlier, he would probably have told the whole truth. But if Bhika Raoji is trying to screen Pandu, does it follow that his evidence against the accused was false? We think not. Bhika Raoji first said to Yama and Ramchandra that Pandu and Sakharam committed the murder. That was before he had time to think of screening his relation and that was probably the truth. The Sessions Judge has acquitted the accused, because he thinks that Pandu may have committed the murder without the assistance of Sakharam, and that Bhika Raoji may have interchanged the parts played by Pandu and Sakharam. But Pandu is only a boy of 18 and we think it incredible that he committed the murder single handed. Again, the theory that there was one man on the bank who was an innocent onlooker is one that we cannot accept. It was only invented by Bhika Raoji in order to screen Pandu. Both Pandu and the accused were left with Vithi. Both were together for the rest of the day, at any rate up to 3 p. m. We feel no doubt that the outrage was committed by both of them. In spite of the delay in securing their evidence we feel sure that Yama and Bhika Raoji are not tutored witnesses. Yama says he told no one until questioned by the husband. But the husband says he had been told that Yama had a clue. This discrepancy would not be present if the evidence was tutored. Yama probably did say something to his women-folk and that is how news generally spreads in villages. Yama admits that he first told the husband he knew nothing, so anxious was he to keep out of the case. Yama and Ramchandra, if they were false witnesses, would certainly have said that they had seen accused, Pandu, Narayan and Raoji pass by their field. They did not see them, because their field is further away than Bhika Raoji's and because they were at that time sitting down and having their breakfast. There were no bloodstains on the accused; but he bathed in the Darna river soon after the murder and if there were probably two murderers, the woman would have been so overpowered that it would have been possible for the murderers to avoid bloodstains. The accused has called two witnesses, who say that he was in Deolali on that morning. This sort of evidence is easily fabricated and we do not believe it.

There is clear evidence that the accused was present at the time of the murder coupled with the evidence of Pandu and Bhika Raoji. We have no doubt that the accused and Pandu were the murderers.

Mr Patwardhan has suggested that we should not interfere even if we disagree with the Sessions Judge, for his conclusions are not unreasonable and perverse. But the cases of Queen-Empress v. Bibhuti Bhusan Bit (1) and Queen-Empress v. Karigowda (2) are a sufficient answer to this argument. The Code makes no distinction between an appeal against conviction and an appeal against acquittal. In an appeal against acquittal if this Court thinks the lower Court has taken an erroneous view of the evidence and should have convicted, it has no jurisdiction to refuse to convict. The power of appeal under section 417 is one that should be exercised sparingly by Government, but the discretion to exercise that power appertains to Government and is not subject to control by this Court.

We are satisfied with the guilt of the accused. We reverse the order of acquittal and convict the accused Sakharam Manaji of the offence of murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. But as he had been acquitted by the lower Court, we refrain from inflicting the capital sentence. We sentence the accused Sakharam Manaji to transportation for life.

Appeal accepted.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

REFERRED CASE No. 8 of 1919.

October 7, 1919.

Present:—Sir Abdur Rahim, Kt., Offg. Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Sadasiva Aiyar and Mr. Justice Burn.

In the matter of K. VENKATA ROW,
1ST GRADE PLEADER, BELLARY.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13 (f)
—Guardian and ward—Agreement to pay surety portion of income of minor's estate—Pleader advising guardian to enter into agreement—Bona fide belief of Pleader—Misconduct.

A Pleader who advises his client, who has been appointed guardian for a minor, to enter into an agreement with the persons standing sureties for him to pay them a portion of the income from the minor's property in consideration of their executing the surety bond, bona fide believing that it is for the minor's benefit, is not guilty of misconduct within the meaning of section 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act [p. 166, col. 1.]

Case stated under section 14, Act XVIII of 1879, by the District Judge, Bellary.

FACTS.—A Pleader acted for the natural father of a minor in a Court, which ordered that the father be appointed guardian on condition of his furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 32,000. The guardian, being indigent, was recommended to the present sureties by the Pleader and entered into an agreement with them to give them half the proceeds arising from certain investments of the minor's property and to hand over the bonds, etc., to these sureties, etc., etc. The Pleader was cognisant of all these, but he neither advised the guardian that he was committing any breach of trust nor was the agreement brought to the notice of the Court. Hence the charge under clause (b) of section 13 of Act XVIII of 1879.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.—There is nothing illegal in a guardian paying remuneration for getting solvent sureties where reliable security cannot otherwise be had. It was so held in Lucas, In re, Parr v. Blair (1) where, however, the administrator was entitled to the letters as of right. There is no such right in a guardian, since the paramount consideration is the benefit of the minor; but a guardian cannot be asked to provide sureties at his own cost. The sanction of the Court is not material, as the property dealt with is not immovable. But yet the agreement is a breach of trust, inasmuch as it is the surety's interest alone that is secured by it and the minor's interest is prejudiced. Cf. Foteh Singh v. Sanwal Singh (2).

Hence the Pleader must have advised the guardian for whom he acted that he was committing a breach of trust.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—The agreement being after the conditional order, was it not the duty of the Pleader to mention it to the Court in the interests of the minor?]

The Pleader acts only for the guardian and so is not bound. But it is not covered by the exceptions to section 126 of the Indian Evidence Act. There is no crime or fraud. But the agreement provides for part administration of the estate by the sureties, which is a breach of trust. In this respect clause (b) of section 13 is to be read with clause (f), as was done in In the matter of two Second Grade Pleaders (3). It may be that mere carelessness will not come under the Act.

[SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—Even continued negligent conduct?]

Possibly. The handing over of the bonds may not be illegal, inasmuch as the guardian's liability is only to account. See sections 27, 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act. But the Court may restrict his powers. Section 32.

The test laid down in England is whether the legal practitioner is party to a fraudulent breach of trust. Goodwin v. Gosnell (4), Chandler, In re (5), Barnes v. Addy (6) Lubeck, In re (7), is the only Indian case in point and it lays down the same rule.

Mr. E. L. Thornton and Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao, for the Pleader.—The charge is only under clause (b). Clause (f) cannot be allowed to be brought in.

Court is not restricted in that respect.]

But the test is, is there any fraud on the client? I submit that there is none. See Incorporated Law Society & Four Solicitors, In the matter of (8).

In the matter of two Second Grade Pleaders (3) is not conclusive with respect to clauses (b) and (f). Further in the present case, the minor came to the Court and expressed her wish that her father ought to be appointed guardian, and he was so appointed. But the father was poor and he could get sureties only on such agreement as was entered into. The Pleader acted bona fide and he was acting only for the guardian and he has not acted in fraud of the client's interest.

ORDER.—Mr. Venkata Row, 1st Grade Pleader in the District Court of Bellary, has been called upon to show cause why he should not be dealt with under section 13 (b) and (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act for having advised one Hulkigal Hanumappa, who had applied to be appointed guardian of his minor daughter called Nilavoa alias Thimmavva, to enter into an agreement with two persons, namely, Hannumantha Reddi and Sunkamma, to the effect that in return for their services in standing as sureties they should receive a certain portion of minor's income, namely, one-half of the interest accruing on all Government bonds and Rangoon Debenture loans for Rs. 16,000, the property of the minor during her minority, knowing that such arrangement was highly detrimental to the interest of the said minor, and that he further presented the security bond drawn up in accordance with the above mentioned agreement to the District Court of Bellary and obtained therefor the said Court's sanction.

The facts shortly are these: The minor, a Hindu widow, inherited considerable property consisting of movables and immovables, the movable property mainly consisting of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Government securities and Rangoon Debentures of the nominal value of Rs. 16,000. Hannumappa, the father and natural guardian, applied to be appointed guardian by the Court. He apparently was a poor man and was unable to find the required sureties to the extent of Rs. 32, 00 as demanded by the District Judge. He consulted Mr. Venkata Row who was well-known to him, and he advised him to apply to the two persons, namely, Hanumantha Reddy and Sunkamma, through a common friend of both. They agreed to become sureties on the guardian entering into the agreement mentioned in the charge. The result of the arrangement was that half the income derived from the property of the minor would go to the sureties for four years, amounting to about Rs. 1,200.

The question is, in the first place, whether such an agreement is illegal or detrimental to the interests of the minor and in the second place, whether Mr. Venkata Row acted properly in the matter in not advising Hulkigal Hanumappa not to enter into such an agreement, or whether he believed, as he himself asserts, that the arrangement was to the advantage of the minor. He says that the father of the minor would not have been able to find proper sureties unless he agreed to the terms in question, and the only alternative open to the Court would then have been to appoint a guardian on a salary; that, he says, would have caused greater loss to the minor's estate than the arrangement in question. On the question whether a guardian is justified in entering into an arrangement by which the sureties are paid a certain portion of the income from the minor's property in consideration of their executing a bond, we have been referred to a ruling of the Irish Court on the subject Lucas, In re, Parr v. Blair (1) to the following effect: "Where a person who is entitled as of right to a grant of administration, but is otherwise unable to give justifying security, procures a surety bond from an insurance company and pays a premium thereon, it is within the discretion of the Court to allow the amount of such premium out of the general estate, where the circumstances of the case show that a reliable security could not otherwise be obtained and that the course adopted was reasonable and proper and for the interest of all parties entitled to the assets." The learned Vice Chancellor says in the course of the judgment: "Private individuals hate suretyships as a rule; but insurance companies of undoubted solvency can generally be found to guarantee against such losses for a sum not by any means exorbitant. In cases, where reliable security cannot otherwise be procured, I consider it to be for the interest of all parties entitled to the assets, whether as creditors or beneficiaries, that the security of an insurance company, or some equally solvent surety should be procured at the expense of the estate." He says: "Of course, when the Administrator comes to be allowed this credit he must satisfy the Court that it was a proper and reasonable thing for him to have done and if it should appear to have been done unnecessarily or improperly, it should be disallowed."

There is no Indian ruling on this point excepting a case, Fateh Singh v. Sanwal Singh (2). But there the man who stood surety for a person charged with a crime did so on receiving from the accused the amount for which he became surety, and the Court held that that was illegal inasmuch as an arrangement like this would defeat the purposes for which the law requires bonds in such cases. But that is very different from the case here and the principle laid down in the Irish case seems to have a closer bearing on the facts of the present case. Besides we are informed that it is not by any means unusual for a person required to give security to obtain the services of sureties under an agreement to give them some compensation for the risk. It may be that in certain circumstances, such as in the case of Fateh Singh v. Sanwal Singh (2), an agreement of this character would be invalid and illegal. But it does not follow that it would not be valid in any case. Whether the particular agreement in this case was injurious to the interests of the minor or not is not very clear upon the facts, as we have them on the record. At any rate these facts would not justify us in saying that the agreement under which the guardian consented to part with a portion of the income of the minor's property in consideration of those two sureties consenting to act in the matter must have been detrimental to the interests of the minor. Further, we are not in a position to hold that it is made out that Mr. K. Venkata Row might not have honestly believed that the agreement which the guardian entered into was not a proper one. We have the fact that, although the agreement was not brought to the notice of the Court, it was attested by a number of persons of respectable position in life; and there is nothing to show that any attempt was made to keep it a secret arrangement. We think it would have been better if Mr. Venkata Row had advised his client to bring the matter to the notice of the Court but, in the absence of any evidence to show that he must have thought that the agreement was detrimental to the interests of the minor, we are unable to say that, in not advising the guardian to bring the matter to the notice of the Court, he was guilty of professional misconduct or was guilty of conduct which would bring him within the purview of clause (f) of section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

The learned Advocate-General who placed the whole matter very fairly before us drew our attention to that portion of the agreement, Karar, Exhibit B, by which the sureties are given the power to sell and dispose of the securities and to invest the sale proceeds in other securities and to appropriate any additional income they might have derived from such an investment, and suggested that that might amount to a technical breach of trust on the part of the guardian and, therefore, it was also the duty of Mr. K. Venkata Row to have advised him accordingly. But this matter is not specified in the charge and we do not, therefore, propose to deal with it.

In the above view of the facts it is unnecessary for us to consider the scope of clause (f) of section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, or the ruling in cases cited before us on the subject.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION No. 78 OF 1919.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 35—Chaukidar's Register, entry in, admissibility of—Expert evidence as to age, value of.

The question whether any particular entry in a Chaukidar's Register of Births and Deaths is admissible in evidence depends primarily on section 35 of the Evidence Act. Under that section it is not enough to prove that the Chaukidar's Register is an official book, but it is also necessary to prove that any entry relied on in it was either made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or made by some other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country. [p. 167, col. 2.]

A Civil Surgeon's evidence as to the age of a girl is on a higher level than that of an ordinary person, as he is able to examine the girl with a particularity and with a knowledge which an ordinary person does not possess. Such evidence, however, is not conclusive and has to be carefully considered. [p. 167, col. 1.]

Criminal application against the order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 14th June 1919, confirming that of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Barabanki, dated the 6th June 1919.

Messrs. H. C. Dutt and N. C. Dutt, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader and Messrs. R. F. Bahadurji and Hyder Husain, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants have been convicted of kidnapping a girl, named Muasm-mat Shahzadi, from the lawful guardianship of her father. The Magistrate who tried the case found that, although the accused had had sexual intercourse with the girl before and took her away from her father's house without resort to force, still he took her away without the father's consent. This finding of fact was concurred in by the Sessions Judge in appeal, who also held that whether or no the girl resisted being taken away from the house of her father, force was used to prevent the girl being re-captured while she was being taken away by the accused. There was certainly evidence on which these findings could be sustained and in revision I am not prepared to upset them. The case was originally started under section 452, and it is urged that this meant that the prosecution witnesses knew there had been no kidnapping. It does not follow. The witnesses may well have taken the wrong view of law, that, because the girl was willing to go initially, there could be no kidnapping. The ruling in 39 Indian Cases, page 401 [Mahomed Yedol Triffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (1)] is not relevant. In that case the girl was found by a Chankidar on a road after having fully thrown off her father's tutelage.

The chief point on which I am asked to interfere is that it is not proved that the girl was under sixteen years of age. The Court of first hearing relied on the evidence of the Civil Surgeon. But it is urged that such evidence is inconclusive and that a Civil Surgeon has no better means of judging than an ordinary person. This latter proposition I am not prepared to admit. A Civil Surgeon's evidence as to age is on a higher level than that of an ordinary person, as he is able to examine the girl with a particularity and with a knowledge which an ordinary person does not possess. It may be admitted, however, that his evidence is not conclusive and has to be carefully considered. In this case the doctor was of no doubt that the girl was under sixteen. He was not over positive as to the exact age. He found it to be fourteen or fifteen. The Court of first hearing rejected the evidence afforded by the Chankidari Register of Births on the ground that the writer of the register had not been summoned. The Government Pleader in supporting the conviction appeals to this register.

The admissibility of such a register has been the subject of decision by this Court. It was held in Sampat v. Gauri Shankar (2) that, assuming that a Chankidar's register of births and deaths is a public or other official book within the meaning of section 35 of the Evidence Act, the entry produced as evidence in such a register must be shown to have been made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and that failing this, it cannot be accepted as evidence. In Habib Ullah v. Emperor (3) it was held to be necessary, as a condition precedent to using as evidence an entry in a Chankidar's birth register, to prove that the making of the entry was an act required of a Chankidar in discharge of his official duty. In Bisheshwar Dayal v. Hira Lal (4) it was held that such entries are only proof at the best of the approximate date of birth. In a case in the U.

P. Law Reporter, Vol. 1, page 1, [Zaibunnessa v. Hasaratunnissa (5)] (which will probably be reported in the Oudh Cases* and which is Second Civil Appeal No. 146 of 1918, decided on 24th March 1919 by Mr. Daniels) it was held, following Tamiz-ud-din Sarkar v. Taj (6), that the Chankidari register of births and deaths was an official register made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and as such was admissible as evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act. As regards the rulings of other High Courts, Tamiz-ud-din Sarkar v. Taj (6) has already been mentioned. In this ruling reliance is placed on Devarapalli Ramalinga Reddi v. Srigiriraju Kotayya (7), where the question of the admissibility of such a register is discussed very thoroughly. In the case of Baldevi v. Abhey Ram (8) Justice Piggott expressed doubt as to the correctness of the case referred to above as Sampat v. Gauri Shankar (2).

In all these rulings it is admitted that the question whether any particular entry in a Chankidar's register of births and deaths is admissible in evidence depends primarily on section 35 of the Evidence Act. Under that section it is not enough to prove that the Chankidar's register is an official book but it is also necessary to prove that any entry relied on in it was either made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or made by some other person in performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country. It has not been contended that the Chankidar's register is a private register, and such contention appears impossible in the face of the fact that paragraphs 367 and 368 of the Police Manual published by Government in 1900, which was in force at the time of the entry in question in this register, make it the duty of the head constable writer at the Thana to make the entries in the Chankidar's register to the dictation of the Chankidar. What we have to decide is whether this particular entry answers the other conditions of section 35. The cases referred to in Sampat v. Gauri (5) 52 Ind. Cas. 162; 1 U. P. L. R. (J. C.) 1; 22 O. MUHAMMAD JAFAR v. EMPEROR.

Shankar (2) and Habib Ullah v. Emperor (3) indeed only call attention to the necessity of this and do not dispute that if these conditions are fulfilled, an entry in a Chaukidar's register would be relevant. The case reported as Baldeo v. Abhey Ram (8) does not correctly state the attitude taken by Mr. Champier in Sampat v. Gauri Shankar (2). As pointed out in Devarapalli Ramalinga Reddi v. Srigiriraju Kotayya (7), if it can be proved that the entry was made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty, it will not be necessary to show that there was any enactment specially enjoining the performance of the duty. This necessity only exists where the person who makes the entry is not acting officially. What we have, therefore, to ascertain in this case is whether the station writer made this entry and whether, if he did so, he did it in the discharge of an official duty. To take the last question first, I find that under section 50 of U. P. Act XX of 1856, called the Bengal Chaukidari Act, which was in force at the time of this entry, a Chaukidar was liable to perform all the duties of Police Officers prescribed in the Acts of the Government of India for the time being in force. Under section 12 of Act V of 1851 (the Police Act) the Inspector General of Police is given power to frame rules as to particular services to be performed by the Police force. It was in exercise of this power that the orders contained in paragraphs 367 and 368 of the Police Manual must have been issued. It, therefore, follows that Chaukidars were lawfully assigned the duty of verbally reporting births and deaths and the station writers were lawfully required to make the entry to the Chaukidar's dictation. If then the entry can be proved to have been made by the station writer, the entry is relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act. Now the entry does not appear to have any signature after it, much less to have a signature after it with the official designation attached to it of the person signing it. The entry does not, therefore, purport to be duly certified by any duly authorised officer, and section 79 cannot be invoked for the purpose of presuming its genuineness. Under section 81, however, of the Evidence Act every document purporting to be a document directed by any law to be kept by any person may be presumed genuine if such document is kept substantially in the form required by law and is produced from proper custody. It is not disputed that this register is produced from proper custody, namely, from the Thana. We have to ascertain, however, whether the Chaukidar's register of births and deaths can be called a document directed by any law to be kept by any person. It will not be sufficient to show that the Inspector-General of Police had power to require a Chaukidar to carry about this register and to require the Police writer at every Thana to make entries in it. We must have a specific enactment directing the keeping up of this register and in a particular form. I have not been able to discover any such enactment in these provinces. The Births, Deaths and Marriages Registration Act, 1883, only applies to persons to whom the Indian Succession Act applies, see section 11 (1) of that Act, no extension order having been passed under section 11 (2). This case, therefore, may be distinguished from the case reported as Devarapalli Ramalinga Reddi v. Srigiriraju Kotayya (7), because in Madras there is an Act III of 1899 making provision for the registration of births and deaths in rural tracts. The statement in that ruling that even if this Act had not existed an entry by a village official in the register would have been admissible, was only correct on the assumption that the entry in question purported to be made by such an official. In this case the entry does not purport to be made by the station writer. In Tamiz ud din Sarkar v. Taju (6) it is stated that the presumption that the entry was properly made may be made under section 114 of the Evidence Act. With all respect I cannot concur in this suggestion. The meaning of Illustration (e) of section 114 of the Evidence Act is that, where there is a proof of an official act having been done, it may be presumed to have been regularly done. Here the entry is not shown to be by the proper official. My conclusion then is that the entry in the Chaukidari register is not admissible in evidence under section 35 of the Evidence Act, because there is no evidence that it was made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty.

or by any other person in performance of a duty enjoined by the law of the country. This conclusion appears to me not only to be necessitated by law but also to be consistent with common sense and public policy. Very important issues hang on the genuineness of such entries and there must be something to show that the entry is by the person authorised to make it. The register is kept by the Chaukidar who is an illiterate man under merely departmental orders, and it appears to me that it will be very dangerous to presume every entry in his register genuine merely because it is in his register and that register is produced from proper custody. The law requires more than this, and most advisedly so.

At the same time even though we declare this register to be inadmissible in evidence there is evidence, apart from the evidence of the Civil Surgeon, that the girl was not more than fourteen years old. The mother deposes to this effect. I am not disposed in revision to go behind a finding of fact to support which there was evidence. The Magistrate rejected the birth register as evidence. His reason, namely, that the person who produced it was not the person who wrote it, was not a good one but as he rejected the register he cannot have been influenced by it. The Sessions Judge held that the medical evidence proved conclusively that the girl was not sixteen years old. There is concurrent finding, therefore, of fact that the girl was not sixteen years of age and there was evidence to support that finding.

For the above reasons I dismiss this application in revision.

Application dismissed.

Geo. V, c. 81), s. 107—Letters Patent (Cal), cl. 36—Proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C.—Failure to join party, whether error of jurisdiction Irregularity Revision—High Court, power of interference of—Difference of opinion between Judges—Procedure—Opinion of senior Judge, whether to prevail.

When on an application to the High Court under section 97 of the Government of India Act, there is a difference of opinion between the Judges the decision of the senior Judge prevails. [p. 172, col. 1.]

Sections 435 and 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code must be read together, and if a case is outside section 435, section 439 cannot apply to it. [p. 172, col. 1.]

The Criminal Procedure Code has not overruled the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent. [p. 172, col. 1.]

Even if the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent do not apply to a case not coming before the High Court in its original or appellate jurisdiction, in the absence of any provisions to the contrary, in the case of a difference of opinion between the Judges, the decision of the senior Judge should prevail in accordance with the principle laid down in section 36 of the Letters Patent. [p. 172, col. 1.]

Per Newbould, J.—The omission to join a party in proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not an error of jurisdiction [p. 171, col. 1.]

Per Shamsul Huda, J.—There is no authority for the proposition that the High Court's power of superintendence over inferior Courts is confined to questions of jurisdiction alone. This power can be exercised, not only where inferior Courts act without jurisdiction or refuse jurisdiction, but also when these Courts commit an illegality or a material irregularity. JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—(August 13th, 1919)—In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, there were three persons in the 1st party and twenty in the second. Of the twenty persons forming the second party, all except No. 10 stated in their written statements that they had no concern with the land which belonged to Moiram Bewa. Second party No. 10 alleged that he had been cultivating about a bigha of land as bargidar under Moiram Bewa. Apparently they took no further interest in the case, adduced no evidence and even did not cross-examine the witnesses of the first party. On the day the written statements were filed, Moiram Bewa appeared and asked to be made a party, alleging that the land in respect of which there was the dispute had not been correctly described and that the boundaries given in the proceeding included land on which stood her dwelling house and part of which she cultivated. She said that the other side had been trying fraudulently to deprive her of her homestead, of which she with her sons was in possession. The petition was filed before any evidence was recorded. The Magistrate rejected the application of Moiram Bewa on the ground that it was filed too late. Ultimately the Magistrate passed an order in favour of the first party in terms of section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

It appears that the first date of hearing was fixed on the 14th of April 1919 and on that day the second party applied for time, alleging that the notice had been served only the day before. A similar petition was filed by the first party. The next date fixed was the 25th of April, and on that day the first party again asked for an adjournment and adjournment was given. Moiram Bewa states in her petition to this Court, which is supported by an affidavit, that she came to Court on that day with a petition praying to be made a party but found that the learned Sub Divisional Magistrate had left Kustia for Khoksa by the morning train. The petition which was actually filed on the 7th of May, however, shows that it was not ready before that date, as the Court-fee stamp was purchased on that day and the petition is itself dated the 7th of May, but it is possible that finding the Magistrate absent on the 25th of April the Court-fee stamp was not purchased on that day. There is intrinsic evidence that the application was ready before it was dated. The Magistrate in his explanation does not deny that he had left Kustia by the morning train that day. If the facts stated are correct—they are not denied by the Magistrate nor is there a counter-affidavit from the other side, it is difficult to understand how it can be said that the petition was filed too late. In the Moffusil, so far as I am aware, petitions in connection with a case are only filed on the dates fixed for hearing. If the facts stated in her petition to this Court by Moiram Bewa are correct, a grave injustice has been done to her. The land had been previously attached and a postponement of the proceedings could not have led to any serious inconvenience and ought under the circumstances to have been granted. Moiram Bewa alleges, and the fact is not denied that the order has led to her eviction from her dwelling house, which has been demolished.

The only material for the Magistrate's finding that the application is not bona fide is that the same Mukhtear who filed the written statements of the second party also presented her petition for being added as a party. I need hardly say that this is a very slender material upon which to base such a conclusion. I think Moiram Bewa should have been given an opportunity to show that she was actually in possession. It is only then that the Court could form an opinion regarding the bona fides of her claim.

It is argued that the question of adding parties does not involve a question of jurisdiction, and reliance has been placed on the Full Bench decision in Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jabbar (1). In that case it was laid down by Mr. Justice Hill and the majority of the Judges concurred with him, that ordinarily these questions do not go to jurisdiction. Assuming that they do not, there is no authority for the proposition that our power of superintendence is confined to questions of jurisdiction alone. In the subsequent Full Bench case of Sukh Lal Sheikh v. Tara Ohand (2) it was argued that this Court has the power of interference in all cases of injustice. It was conceded by the Advocate General that the power could be exercised, not only where inferior Courts had acted without jurisdiction or refused jurisdiction, but also when these Courts have committed illegality or material irregularity. But in every case it must be shown that justice has been denied and Maclean, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court observed as follows:—"In our opinion the power, which is discretionary, ought in relation to cases under section 145 to be exercised with every caution. Assuming that in any particular case the Court has proceeded with irregularity, we do not think that this Court should interfere, unless it can be shown that some one has been materially prejudiced by such irregularity. If, however, the subordinate Court has acted without jurisdiction, this Court will interfere."

In this case I think there are reasonable grounds for the apprehension that the action taken by the Magistrate has resulted in a serious failure of justice and I would make the Rule absolute.

I regret to have to differ from my learned brother and although his opinion prevails, I have thought it necessary to express my opinion at some length regarding the merits of the case.

NEWBOULD, J.—(August 13th, 1919)—I would discharge this Rule. The decision of the Full Bench in the case of Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jubbar (1) is that the omission to join a party in proceedings under section 145 is not an error of jurisdiction. Nor can I agree with my learned brother that there has been an irregularity resulting in such material prejudice as would justify our interference. There was considerable delay on the part of the petitioner. Though she says the Magistrate left Kushtia by the morning train on the 25th April 1919, it is not stated in the affidavit that she was unable to file her petition on that account. I also think that the Magistrate had good reason for holding that the application was not made in good faith. If the petitioner really wished to prove her claim to possession, she could have done so through her alleged bargadar Torap Ali Sheikh.

As this application is made under section 107 of the Government of India Act, the decision of the Senior Judge will prevail and the Rule will be discharged.

JUDGMENT.—August 20th, 1919.—In this case after we delivered our respective judgments the learned Vakil for the petitioner contended that the case should be referred to a third Judge. He argues that section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code is comprehensive enough to include all cases of revision, whether the power is exercised under the Code or under any other enactment, and that so far as criminal cases are concerned, section 36 of the Letters Patent has been superseded by the Criminal Procedure Code. In support of his contention the learned Vakil relied on the decision of the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Dada Ana (3). He also relies on two decisions of this Court in Laldhari Singh v. Sukhdeo Narain Singh (4) and in Sajuddi Mandal v. F. L. Cork (5), in which a difference of opinion regarding the propriety of an order passed under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code was referred to a third Judge instead of being dealt with in accordance with the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent. No great value, however, attaches to the last two cases, because the point was not argued and it was apparently assumed that section 429 applied by the operation of section 439. There are, however, other cases of this Court in which a different procedure was adopted. In the case of Mathura Sahu v. Damri Ram (6) a difference of opinion regarding the propriety of a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code was dealt with under section 36 of the Letters Patent and the judgment of the senior Judge prevailed. This was apparently on the ground that the power exercised by the High Court under section 195 (6) of the Criminal Procedure Code was not in the exercise of an appellate or revisional jurisdiction and that the jurisdiction was original, to which neither section 429 nor section 439 applied. A similar view was taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Bapu v. Bapu (7). In an unreported case a difference of opinion between two learned Judges of this Court regarding the propriety of granting bail to an undertrial prisoner was dealt with under section 36 of the Letters Patent. These cases are against the view of the Bombay High Court that the Criminal Procedure Code has overruled the provisions of section 36 of the Letters Patent.

In support of the contrary view the learned Vakil for the opposite party has relied on the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Har Prasad Das v. Emperor (8). In that case the point argued was that an order passed by a Civil Court under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code being outside the scope of section 435, the matter could not be dealt with under section 439. This contention prevailed and after stating that section 435 did not apply to the case, the learned Judges observed: "Nor does section 439 touch the matter. It is clear that sections 435, 439 must be read together, as pointed out by Wilson, J., in Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (9). Section 439 must, therefore, be read along with and subject to the provisions of section 435." This decision concludes the present question and is a clear authority for the proposition that if a case is outside section 435 as the present case is, section 439 cannot apply to it. That being so either section 36 of the Letters Patent applies or there is no law regulating the procedure. If it be held that section 36 does not apply because it only refers to original or appellate jurisdiction, we think in the absence of any provision to the contrary we should act in accordance with the principle underlying that section. We accordingly hold that in this case the opinion of the senior Judge prevails.

Rule discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 356
—Failure to record evidence in vernacular, effect of —Irregularity—Trial, whether vitiated.

Where a Magistrate omits to prepare a vernacular record of the evidence as required by section 56 of the Criminal Procedure Code, he commits an irregularity which vitiates the trial.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Allahabad, dated the 21st of August 1919.

Mr. G. Banerji for the Applicants.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji. (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Two persons, Udit Narain and Mahadeo, were convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class under section 380 and sentenced to 8 months' rigorous imprisonment. They appealed; their appeal was dismissed. Among the grounds taken in the lower Court it was urged that the trial was irregular because no vernacular record of the evidence was prepared as is required by section 356. The learned Sessions Judge says: "the objection does not seem to have any force. Section 355 of the Code of Criminal Procedure empowered the Magistrate to make a memorandum of the substance of the evidence of each witness, as the offence was one of those mentioned in clause (d), sub section (1) of section 260. The procedure adopted by him was in full conformity with the provisions of law." In my opinion the learned Sessions Judge was mistaken. Section 355 applies to summons cases. This was not a summons case, as shown by the fact that the sentence of 8 months' rigorous imprisonment was passed. Secondly, clause (d) of section 260 does not apply, because the property said to be stolen was a sack of rice which probably was worth more than Rs. 50; in any case, as required by section 263 (f), the value of the sack of rice has not been given. It seems to me that I have no alternative but to set aside the conviction and order a fresh trial according to law. I order accordingly.

Conviction set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 215, 478. Letters Patent (Mad), cl. 15—Trial of civil suit on Original Side of High Court—Commitment under s. 478, Cr. P. C., to Sessions—Appeal against order of commitment, maintainability of.

No appeal lies against an order of commitment made under section 478, Criminal Procedure Code, by a Judge presiding on the Original Side of the High Court in the course of the trial of a suit, except under the provisions of section 215 of the Code. [p. 73, col. 1]

Clause 15 of the Letters Patent is controlled by the specific provisions of section 15, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 173, col. 1]

RAMOO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Appeal from the order and judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, dated the 1st May 1919, passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court in Civil Suit No. 583 of 1912.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter sitting on the original side of this Court in the course of the trial of a civil case proceeded under section 478, Criminal Procedure Code, and committed a certain witness who gave evidence in that case to the High Court Sessions for trial on charges of perjury. This appeal is filed on the civil side of this Court, against the order of commitment as made by Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter.

A preliminary objection is raised that no appeal lies in such a matter except under the provisions of section 215, Criminal Procedure Code. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar, who appears for the appellant, admitted before us that he could not impeach the order on the grounds mentioned in section 215. But he says that apart from the provisions of that section an appeal lies on general grounds to this Court under the provisions of section 15 of the Letters Patent. We have no hesitation in holding that section 215 applies to this case and an appeal is precluded by the express and clear language of that section, except under its provisions. That section says: "A commitment once made under section 477 or by a Civil or Revenue Court under section 478 can be quashed by the High Court only and only on a point of law." This is a specific injunction that a commitment made under section 478 by the Civil Court can be quashed by the High Court only on a point of law. Section 478 says that the proceedings of a Civil Court acting under section 478 shall be deemed to have been held by a Magistrate. The argument is that under section 15 of the Letters Patent there is an appeal from the order of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter sitting on the original side of this Court and that section 215 should not be interpreted so as to take away that right. We do not desire to deal with the question whether, under section 15 of the Letters Patent, an appeal would lie from the order of commitment made by the learned Judge trying a civil suit on the original side of this Court. But supposing for the sake merely of argument that such an appeal could be preferred under the general words of section 15 of the Letters Patent, section 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in our opinion, explicitly and clearly says that an order of commitment made by any Civil Court can be quashed only on a point of law. That is a specific provision regarding orders of commitment by the Civil Court under the provisions of section 478 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and to that extent it clearly modifies the general provisions of section 15 of the Letters Patent, supposing that an appeal would lie under it in a case of this nature.

There are no rulings on the point. But we think that the enactment is not open to any doubt. Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer has referred us to a number of decisions on the interpretation of some of the sections in the Criminal Procedure Code. But we do not think it necessary to refer to them as, in our opinion, they are quite beside the point. We dismiss the appeal with costs of the Government Solicitor.

Appeal dismissed.

CRIMINAL REVISION No 321 of 1919.

RAMOO SINGH—PETITIONER

*versusEMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 537—Proceedings under s. 476, when should be started—Preliminary enquiry, whether necessary—Enquiry, nature of Order under s. 476, whether can be questioned in subsequent trial—Successor-in-office of Magistrate making order under s. 476, whether nearest Magistrate—Case sent for trial to successor-in-office—Illegality.

Proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code should not be taken until the very close of the case in which false evidence has been given, inasmuch as if taken earlier, such action is likely to intimidate subsequent witnesses and defeat the object of the trial [p. 175, col. 1.]

As a rule a Magistrate should not make up his mind to start proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code against a witness before he has heard all the evidence in the case. [p. 175, col. 1.]

The holding of a preliminary enquiry under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is discretionary, but it should be held, wherever it appears to be necessary to hold it in the interests of justice, and wherever it is held, it must be a real enquiry and not merely a formal one, ample opportunity being given to the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. [p. 175, col. 1.]

The only way in which the validity of an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be challenged is by invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, but inasmuch as the exercise of that jurisdiction is purely discretionary, such order cannot be challenged as a matter of right. Therefore, a person against whom an order under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code is made is not precluded from challenging the validity of the order in the subsequent trial or in an appeal from the conviction obtained in the subsequent trial. [p. 175, col. 2.]

The successor-in-office of a Magistrate who has started proceedings under section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be said to be the nearest Magistrate indicated by the section to whom the case might be sent for enquiry or trial. [p. 176, col. 1.]

A direct disobedience of an express provision of the Criminal Procedure Code as to a mode of trial cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity and in a case of this nature the question of prejudice does not arise. [p. 176, col. 1.]

Criminal revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 2nd September 1919, refusing to make a reference to the High Court against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer, Barh, dated the 1st September 1919, convicting the petitioner under section 193, Indian Penal Code and sentencing him to be rigorously imprisoned for one month.

Messrs. S. P. Sen and B. N. Mitter, for the Petitioner.

The Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted under section 193, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. It appears that he gave evidence on his own behalf in certain proceedings under section 133, Criminal Procedure Code, which were drawn up at the instance of the Crown against him and certain other persons in respect of a certain pathway which he and the other persons claimed as their private property. In the course of his evidence he made two statements, namely that no pathway had existed at all, and secondly, that no man had ever come to the criminal Court through the footpath over the fields from the sub-jail. In respect of these statements, proceedings were drawn up against him under section 476 of the Code. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer has come to the conclusion that the latter statement is a deliberate lie and has accordingly convicted him.

It will be convenient, first, to deal with the procedure which was adopted by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer. On the 17th July last proceedings under section 133 of the Code were drawn up against the petitioner and certain other persons. From 1st August up to 14th August witnesses on behalf of the Crown were examined. On 15th August the second party was called upon to produce its evidence. The petitioner was the first witness on behalf of the second party. He happened also to be the last, inasmuch as directly his evidence was over the learned Magistrate passed an order requiring the petitioner to execute a bond for his appearance in Court the next day.

On the 16th August the learned Magistrate drew up proceedings under section 476 against the petitioner and called upon him to show cause that very day at 3.30 P. M. why he should not be prosecuted under section 193, Indian Penal Code. He then proceeded to deliver judgment in the case under section 133 of the Code. By his judgment he made the conditional order absolute against the second party.

At 3.30 P. M. the petitioner shewed cause. He pointed out that the order under section 476 was illegal, inasmuch as the case under section 133 had not come to an end when proceedings were drawn up against him under section 476. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer conceded the strength of this argument, for he promptly dropped the proceedings which he had already drawn up against the petitioner, and drew up fresh proceedings against him. He thereupon sent the case to Mr. Mansfield, his successor-in-office, for enquiry or trial.

This narration of events is, in my judgment, a sufficient condemnation of the procedure that was adopted by the learned Magistrate. In the first place, there was no justification for the order requiring the petitioner to execute a bond for his appearance in Court the next day. It will be remembered that when this extraordinary order was passed, the case under section 133 had not come to an end. The evidence given by the petitioner may have been false, but it was not manifestly false as it would be if he had made two contradictory statements. Its falsity could only be established after the termination of the whole case, and then only after a critical examination of the evidence that was adduced in the case. If the learned Magistrate desired to prevent the second party from adducing any other evidence in the case, he certainly could not have chosen a better mode of expressing his wish. It is my deliberate conviction that the procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate might well have intimidated the witnesses on behalf of the second party and resulted in a complete failure of justice. It will be remembered that no other witnesses came forward to give evidence on behalf of the second party.

In the second place, it is a matter of regret that the learned Magistrate was unaware of the salutary principle that proceedings under section 476 should not be taken until the very close of the case in which false evidence has been given. The reason for this rule is that such action is eminently calculated to intimidate subsequent witnesses and defeat the object of the trial. It is true that the learned Magistrate subsequently corrected his error, but in my view, the subsequent correction was only formal and did not do away with the objection that the learned Magistrate made up his mind to start proceedings under section 476 against the petitioner before he had heard all the evidence in the case.

In the third place, the preliminary enquiry held by the Magistrate could not but be an absurd formality. The petitioner was called upon to shew cause at 3-30 P. M. on the same day why he should not be prosecuted for having given false evidence. The holding of a preliminary enquiry is no doubt discretionary, and the learned Magistrate might well have sent the case to the nearest Magistrate without holding any preliminary enquiry at all, but that course was not adopted by the learned Magistrate. He clearly thought that it was necessary in the interests of justice to hold a preliminary enquiry. If that was his view, he should have given ample opportunity to the petitioner to shew cause why he should not be prosecuted under section 193, Indian Penal Code. In my view the preliminary enquiry, whenever it takes place, is intended to be a real one. In this case from the attitude which was adopted by the learned Magistrate it could not but be a formal one.

The learned Government Pleader, who argued the case on behalf of the Crown with conspicuous ability and fairness, did not attempt to defend the procedure that was adopted by the learned Magistrate. His point, however, was that the propriety of the order under section 476 cannot be challenged after the trial and after the conviction of the petitioner, and he relied upon the case of Baij Nath Singh v. Emperor (1). In that case Mr. Justice Atkinson was of opinion that if an irregularity takes place and is allowed to pass unheeded and unnoticed, and a fresh prosecution follows, founded upon the irregularity, and conviction follows, then after conviction the accused party cannot raise the intermediate irregularity in an antecedent proceeding as a ground for challenging the validity of the subsequent conviction. This decision is binding on me, but with great respect I cannot assent to it. The whole question is—had the petitioner a right to challenge the validity of the order under section 476? If he had no such right, then it is difficult to see how he can be prejudiced by not pursuing a remedy which was not available to him as a matter of right. Now the only way in which he could challenge the validity of an order under section 476 was by invoking the revisional jurisdiction of this Court. It is well settled that exercise of revisional jurisdiction is purely discretionary and no one is entitled to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court as a matter of right. It seems to me, therefore, that the petitioner could not as a matter of right challenge the validity of the order passed under section 476 of the Code. If that be so, I cannot see how he can be prejudiced by not pursuing a remedy which was not open to him. I am, however, bound by the decision of Mr. Justice Atkinson and in conformity with that decision I must hold that it is not open to the petitioner to raise the irregularities in the proceeding under section 476 as a ground for challenging the validity of the conviction. It is worthy, however, of note that if the petitioner had come to this Court in proper time, this Court in accordance with a series of decisions would have been bound to set aside the order under section 476 of the Code.

RAMOO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

Coming now to the case itself, the first point that has been argued before me is that Mr. Mansfield was incompetent to try the case. Mr. Mansfield is the Sub-Divisional Officer and is the successor-in-office of the Sub-Divisional Officer who passed the order under section 476 of the Code. It is argued that the learned Sub-Divisional Officer was bound to send the case for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate and that Mr. Mansfield could not be said to be the nearest Magistrate, inasmuch as he was the successor-in-office of the Sub-Divisional Officer in question. I am of opinion that this argument is well founded. It was argued, however, by the Government Pleader that the whole object of the Legislature was to provide that the enquiry or trial should take place before a Magistrate other than the Magistrate passing the order under section 476 of the Code, and he relied upon the deliberate use of the word "Magistrate" by the Legislature in opposition to the word "Court" appearing in the first portion of the section. I appreciate the strength of this argument, but can it be said that at the time when the Sub-Divisional Officer passed the order under section 476 Mr. Mansfield was the nearest Magistrate of the first class in relation to the Sub-Divisional Officer passing the order under section 476? Clearly he was not, for Mr. Mansfield succeeded to the same office held by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer. It seems to me, therefore, that Mr. Mansfield was incompetent to try the case and to convict the petitioner under section 193, Indian Penal Code. In my view, it is not an irregularity which may be cured under the provisions of the Code. Here is a direct disobedience to an express provision of the Statute as to a mode of trial, and it has been held by the Judicial Committee that such disobedience cannot be regarded as a mere irregularity. The question of prejudice does not arise in a case of this nature.

It is, therefore, necessary to see whether there should be a re-trial of the petitioner. In my view there ought not to be a re-trial of the case. I am satisfied that there cannot be a conviction under section 193 in this case at all. As I have said before, this is not a case where the petitioner has made two statements, one of which must necessarily be false. Its falsity has been established to the satisfaction of the learned Magistrate only because he has believed the evidence adduced on behalf of the Crown. In my view, before there can be a conviction under section 193, Indian Penal Code, it must be shown that the statement said to have been false could not but be false. Now, what is the statement in this case? The statement is "no man ever came to Criminal Court through any footpath running from the sub-jails across the fields and terminating near the Sub-Divisional Officer's bungalow". The learned Magistrate correctly points out that when the petitioner used the word "footpath" he meant a public footpath. No doubt witnesses had come and said that they had used the footpath for going to the criminal Court every day, but in my view that does not establish that the footpath in question must necessarily be a public footpath. It may be that they were allowed to use the footpath without any objection on the part of the persons who are the proprietors of the footpath. But the point is, did they use this footpath as of right as a public footpath? There is in the records of the case evidence which suggests that the footpath in question was not a public footpath. The Survey Map and the Record of Rights are entirely in favour of the petitioner. It was found by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer in the section 133 case that the petitioner and others had used this footpath for agricultural purposes without protest from anybody. Therefore, on the materials before the Court it was impossible to say that the statement made by the petitioner could not but be false. In that view, I am of opinion that there ought not to be a re-trial in the case. I would accordingly allow this application and set aside the conviction and the sentence passed on the petitioner.

Application allowed.

Wajib-ul-arz, whether creates right—Garpagari, right of, to recover dues from tenants.

A wajib-ul-arz is a mere record of custom; it does not create a right.

A wajib-ul-arz mentioned a garpagari, whose duty it was to ward off hailstorm by means of mantras, as one of the village servants, who got a sheaf of corn from the tenants at the time of the crops.

Held, that the entry did not make it obligatory upon the tenants to seek the garpagari's services and to pay for them.

Appeal against the decree in Civil Appeal No. 28 of 1918, passed by the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 26th February 1918, arising out of the decision in Civil Suit No. 145 of 1917, passed by the Second Munsif, Bhandara, dated the 14th December 1917.

Messrs. M. R. Dixit and V. V. Ohitale, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. L. Daftari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is hereditary garpagari of Manzas Chichala, Pathri and Chichbodi, Tehsil Bhandara, and the defendant is a tenant in these villages. According to the plaintiff's Pleader's statement the duty of a garpagari is to ward off hailstorm by means of mantras. The wajib-ul-arz, clause 7, mentions the plaintiff as one of the 'village servants,' who gets from the tenants a sheaf of crops at the time of dhan and summer crops and who holds muafi land from the Malguzar. The plaintiff claims a decree for Rs. 10 (ten) as the value of his customary dues not paid by the defendant. The Courts below have found, as pleaded by the defendant, that the plaintiff did not go out in the storm to recite mantras and that there was a hailstorm in one of the years for which the claim is made, and have dismissed the suit.

The wajib ul-arz does not create a right but records the custom. If the tenants do not require the plaintiff's services, these cannot be thrust upon them, for a tenant may be a Mahomedan or a Christian who has no faith in the plaintiff's power to ward off the hailstorm. If the defendant had employed another person in the place of the hereditary garpagari, there might have been a cause of action. I cannot read the wajib ul-arz as making it obligatory on the defendant to seek the plaintiff's services and pay for them. If the plaintiff's services are availed of, then in the absence of a special contract, the customary rate is to be paid. The suit has been correctly decided and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Dedication of temple to public, tests for determining—Foreign decisions, expediency of resorting to, for conclusions on questions of fact.

The following circumstances may be taken as establishing that a shrine founded and built by a person has been dedicated for public worship and that the temple has become a public religious endowment:—(1) Worship by the public in the temple for a long time, (2) contributions by members of the public for extension of temple buildings and utsavams and founding kattalais, (3) building of choultries by the public, (4) installation of a copper, instead of a stone, idol by the founder, (5) conducting of processions regularly in public streets, (6) entries in books maintained by public servants treating the temple as public [p. 189, cols. 1 & 2.]

The following facts do not necessarily militate against a public dedication:—(1) The temple being founded by a private individual, (2) management being in the family of the founder or their spending the income of the temple uncontrolled by the public, (3) the tomb of the founder being in or in the vicinity of the shrine, (4) performance of pujas to the images of the founder or his descendants, (5) the family of the founder being the pujaris of the temple, (6) restrictions being placed against promiscuous entrance into the shrine (7) the mem.

bers of the founder's family submitting themselves to be taxed on any particular occasion for the income of the temple. [p. 189, col. 2.]

(Authorities reviewed.)

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—Where the shrine in which the idols are installed takes the form of a temple larger than the size of an ordinary middle class house and especially if the temple has prakarams and mantapams, it is incredible that, except in a few instances in Malabar, such a temple should be a private temple. Even in Malabar, the presumption would be that such a temple is a public temple till the contrary is proved. [p. 181, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is dangerous and inexpedient for Indian Courts to rely on English and foreign decisions to arrive at conclusions on questions of fact. [p. 183, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—There are two classes of dedications which must be differentiated. The consecration of a temple for public worship is a dedication in the strict sense of the term. In some cases the word dedication is employed to denote an endowment of property to the temple. In the latter case it has to be shown that the property ceased to belong to the individual and was given up for the use of the temple. In the first class of cases it will generally be sufficient to show that there has been free access to the temple and that there have been public worship and public celebrations. [p. 190 col. 2; 191, col. 1.]

Appeal under clause 15 of the Letters Patent against the judgment of Mr. Justice Oldfield, dated the 10th December 1918, in Appeal No. 164 of 1917 preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Salem, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1916.

FACTS.—The question in this case was whether the suit temple was a private or public endowment. The present appeal was against the differing judgments of Abdur Rahim, J., (who held it to be public) and Oldfield, J. (who held it to be private).

This appeal came on for hearing on the 5th, 8th, 9th and 11th September 1912 respectively.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and M. Subbarayya Aiyar, for the Appellants—The endowment is public. It is admitted that members of the public subscribed large sums which were collected by the founder. His intention was to construct a temple which should in every respect be like the famous temple at Palani. The public have been regularly worshipping from the time the temple was founded. Endowments for various items of worship have been made by many members of the public. There is the practice of receiving donations from members of the public for Archanas performed on their behalf. Festivals are being conducted on a very grand scale to which thousands of people come from various districts, etc., etc.

The nature of the endowment has to be understood from the facts above set forth. A trust for a Hindu idol and temple is to be regarded in India as "one created for public charitable purposes." Manohar Ganesh Tambekar v. Lakhmiram Govindram (1). The test is whether the purpose of the temple is a public purpose. See also Kalidas Jivram v. Gor Parjaram Hirji (2), Thackersey Dewraj v. Hurbhum Nursey (3), Ohintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (4), Chotalal Lakhmiram v. Monohar Ganesh Tambekar (5). The fact that a certain number of the public always used the temple, etc., was relied on for an inference that the donor intended a public endowment, Jugalkishore v. Lakshmandas Raghunathdas (6). See also Jafarkhan v. Daulshah (7), Girdharlal v. Naranlal (8). The character of offerings as helping the determination of the nature of the endowment is discussed in Natesa v. Ganapati (9), Peesapati Sitaramanujachari v. Kanduri Vellama (10), Subramania Aiyar v. Venkatachala Vadhyar (11), Kalyana Venkataramana Aiyangar v. Kasturi Ranga Aiyangar (12). v. Protap Chandra Dutt Jha (16), Lakshmi Kunwar v. Murari Kunwar (17), Jitendra Kumar Chatterji v. Nriya Gopal Mukerjee (18), Sharfuddin v. Maqbulunnissa (19).

Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Respondents.—Private religious trusts have been recognised by the Legislature in section 2 of the Indian Trusts Act. But whether the owners can jointly put an end to them and whether those are to be preserved for the spiritual benefit of future generations as well are questions which are still unsettled. What is indisputably private to begin with can be assumed to be public only on the strongest proof of dedication, Appu Patlar v. Kurumba Bhagwati (20). Grants to Gurus and persons of spiritual eminence are common throughout India where there can be no question of dedication to the public at all. See Sathappayyar v. Periasami (21) and Sethuramaswamiar v. Meruswamiar (22).

Every religious Hindu would naturally consider the sanctity of a family deity enhanced by performances of grand Poojas and in no Hindu home is admission refused to an intending worshipper. So nothing turns upon the facts mentioned by the appellants. The acceptance of offerings and minor endowments is optional with the Poojaris and owners. The size of an endowment is not a matter of weight, as that varies with the intention and possibilities of the parties.

In the present case, there is no evidence that subscriptions were collected for constructing this temple. The founder's family are the Poojaris in spite of the fact that they belong to the Goundan caste and they have been dealing with the temple and its effects absolutely till the present suit. The non-prohibition of the public from worship is not the same as an invasion of rights, Folkestone Corporation v. Brockman (23).

There can be private ownership of Debutter property. The use of the word "Dharma-karta" or 'trustee' or 'Shebait' in some survey or other record is of no value by itself in determining the nature of an endowment, Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (24). Private temples have been recognised in this Presidency in the District of Malabar and elsewhere from the earliest times. See Satrasala Venkatachellamiah v. Pouchangum Narrainappa (25) and Ohemmanthatti Ohapuni Naiyar Meyene Itachi (26).

The elements required to prove a dedication are set forth by the Privy Council in Venkateswara Iyan v. Shekhari Varma (27). And I submit that they ought to be clearly proved in the present case. See Pattannur Valangeri v. Narayanan Nambiar (28).

They may not be liable, as the trust is intended to be preserved. But nonetheless the owners can restrict outsiders from having anything to do with it.

I submit that the facts that the founder's family act as Poojaris in spite of their caste; that they have been appropriating the income without any intervention by the public; that the image of the donor is given a prominent place in the temple and other facts prove a course of conduct evidencing an absence of dedication which has not been rebutted.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, in reply, referred to the practice of erecting images of donors in South Indian temples as of no value in this respect. Vide Gopinath Rao's Elements of Hindu Iconography, Volume II, Part II, page 481.

JUDGMENT.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The material facts are set out in the judgment of my learned brothers. I agree entirely with their conclusions. Some of the observations in the judgment of Seshagiri Aiyar, J., such as "in the north, we find innumerable instances where endowments are made in the name of a reputed saint who worships the idol." "The personal sanctity of the founder seems to have had more influence in the north than in the south." "Most of the temples in the south do not owe their existence to Aryan influence but were built and endowed by the non-Aryans, while the endowments in the north are mostly by Aryans", are observations based upon my learned brother's knowledge of and personal research into subjects to the study of which I have not been able to bestow as much time and industry as he. So far as I have been able to study some of the subjects referred to, my provisional conclusion is that Brahmana Hindus are not so predominantly Aryans in blood and non-Brahmana Hindus are not so predominantly non-Aryans in blood as usually assumed, and I am not satisfied that "Dravidian" is opposed to "Aryan" and does not really represent the mingling of an earlier Aryan wave of immigration with sub-races of the fourth or third root-race. A non-Brahmana or Dravidian does not at all, therefore, mean to my mind a pure non-Aryan and so far as southern India at least is concerned, a Dravidian does not connote a non-Aryan. These are, however, large controversial questions and I feel diffident to express decided opinions on them. Further, this is an important case and I think it desirable that notwithstanding my entire agreement in substance with the judgments of my learned brothers, I should say something in my own words though very little and nothing is added thereby to the reasons found in their judgment.

I attach much importance to the fact that a fixed stone idol was installed by Lakshmana Goundan. A fixed stone idol (especially if it is of a comparatively large size) is never within my experience set up for mere family worship. Stones used in family worship are usually small moveable Bana Lingams or moveable Saligramams. So also where even moveable metal idols are in question, if they are of comparatively large size and are taken out in processions at regular and well known festivals, that fact is almost conclusive in my opinion (so far, at least, as southern India is concerned) that they are intended for public worship. Where the shrine in which the idols are installed takes the form of a temple larger than the size of an ordinary middle-class house and especially if the temple has Prakarams and Mantapams, it is almost incredible to me that (except in some few instances in Malabar) such a temple should be a private temple. Even in Malabar, I would hold that the presumption is that such a temple is a public temple till the contrary is proved. Idol worship itself was established in the beginning for communal purposes according to the Shastras. Bhuddistic influences had much to do with the development of idol worship in India—Bhuddistic temples arose in connection with Stupas over the relics of the Lord Buddha intended to be publicly worshipped. According to the Bhagavata Purana, worship of God in the Krita Yuga consisted in each one seeing the Lord in all living beings and worship consisted in mental reverence towards and friendly help to all the creations of the Lord. Seeing that in the Thretha Yuga, men began to get conceited and selfish and were not willing to see God in their neighbour whom they considered lower than themselves in mental equipment, idol worship was introduced as a very inferior mode of worship to that which prevailed in the Krita Yuga. (See the 14th Chapter of the 7th Skanda of the Bhagavatam, especially Slokas 40 and 41). That worship of idols is intended for the masses is also clear from Slokas 22 to 27 of the 29th Chapter, 3rd Skanda, where idol worship is spoken of in depreciatory language by Kapila Muni, an Avatara of God, if it is accompanied by contempt towards any of God's creatures, though its usefulness for communal worship by ordinary people who cannot rise to higher forms of worship is acknowledged. (See the 11th Skanda, 2nd Chapter, Slokas 45 to 55, especially Sloka 47 as regards the comparative excellence of different modes of worship of the Lord, idolatry being the lowest form, though even those who have risen to higher forms may follow it in order not to perturb the ignorant and those unfit for higher modes). As regards immoveable idols, there is no daily invocation (Avabhanam) at the beginning of the Pooja or taking up of the deity into oneself (Visarjanam or Athmasaropanam) at the end of the worship and the intention, therefore, in establishing an idol so firmly rooted in the ground is that it should be open for public worship at all convenient times. (See 11th Skandam, 27th Chapter, 12th and 13th Slokas.) Whenever a public mandiram or temple is created, a trustee for regulating public worship therein is always essential and if periodical festivals, Chatrams for pilgrims, processions in car streets, etc., accompany the worship, it is impossible in my opinion to treat such a temple as a private temple. (See Slokas 48 to 53 of 27th Chapter, 11th Skanda). That the sites for car streets for the particular temple in dispute were purchased and secured between 1844 and 1848 during the lifetime of Lakshmana Goundan himself appears from Exhibits 19 series. (In the chronological index, these documents are described as executed in favour of the 1st defendant instead of, of the 1st defendant's grandfather owing to their names being the same).

Much was made on the respondents' side of the fact that the images of the founder and his wife are found in the outer Court of the temple. That they are found in a worshipping posture (and not in the posture of giving or blessing) is conclusive, in my opinion, to show that it was not intended that they were to be considered as deities to be worshipped in the temple, but only devotee-founders whose images are merely honoured, and such images of founders are found in numerous public temples. A private temple is founded only by a rich worldly man who wishes his family to be blessed by the special family idol or idols established therein, so that the family may continue to be rich and powerful and always be continued in male lineal succession. Of course, I do not say that even worldly people could not establish or have not established public temples; but if a man establishes a private temple (apart from mere worship in family Poojah rooms), it is a clear indication that the founder is a person whose special affection for his family has not expanded into universal brotherhood. The character of Lakshmana Goundan, the founder of this temple, was, however, so holy that contrary to the custom of his caste his body was buried as if he was a saintly Sanyasi. (Among almost all castes of Hindus, it is only when the astral or passional body has been so purified during the lifetime that it has lost all impurities that burial is allowed instead of cremation; in other words, it is saintly Sanyasis who have or are assumed to have so purified themselves that are buried.) A saintly Sanyasi does not do any act with a selfish motive or with a view to promote the special welfare of his blood relations. Having regard to these well-known Hindu ideas, I find it very difficult to hold that Lakshmana Goundan intended that the Palani god, whom he brought down to his village and successfully invoked in the immovable stone-image which he established, should be a source of special pecuniary or even spiritual benefit to the members of his family alone or predominantly, and I have no reasonable doubt that he intended it for public worship.

The collection of offerings from devotees in Hundi pots placed either at the entrance to the temple or at the entrances to special inner shrines is not only not indicative of the temple being a private temple but, in my opinion, is a strong proof that it is rather a public temple than a private temple. That Brahmin and Vaisya families (like that of plaintiffs' 1st witness) should treat an idol established by a non-Brahmin as their Kula Daivam, unless the founder was supposed to have by his unselfish holiness and unworldliness established the idol for the benefit of the world at large, is not easily conceivable by me.

I am quite sure that no orthodox Brahmin or Vaisya will treat the image of God in a temple as a Daivam to be worshipped by him (much less as his Kula Daivam) unless that image had been established according to tradition by either a Brahmana or by a person, whether Brahmana, non Brahmana, Aryan, non Aryan or even a Rakshasa, who had gone beyond and above caste and had become casteless in the higher sense (in which sense there was no caste among mankind in the Krita Yuga according to Shastras). Such castelessness results from supreme devotion, supreme Gnana or supreme selflessness. Many such public temples in southern India (including Palani itself) have been, by tradition, established by such non-Brahmana devotees who had transcended caste and individual family and other attachments by their devotion or selflessness—I have no doubt that Lakshmana Goundan, the founder of the plaint temple, had obtained such saintly reputation before he established this temple that he was held to have risen above caste and self into castelessness and selflessness, and I have, therefore, no reasonable doubt that in founding this temple, he must have intended it as a public temple for the benefit of his fellow-Hindus without distinction of family connection or caste or sect.

Having regard to the corrupt customs and ideas which have been prevailing in the Hindu religion and society for several centuries past, the fact that Mattadhipathies, temple trustees and others have not been called to account for their misdeeds and misappropriations by the general Hindu public who have possessed, for a long time, very little public spirit, cannot be given much weight in the consideration of the question whether a man who has been mismanaging an institution as a trustee to the knowledge of the public for a long time is liable to be called to account by the public. As a very learned writer has recently said: "The error of decadent India has been to lay too much stress on the Law of Heredity in connection with national organisation, to assert loudly with false claims of degenerate pseudo-religion and pseudo-science that that law is the sole arbiter of psycho-physical type, and to forget, to ignore and refuse recognition now altogether in theory to the equally important and equally operative Law of Spontaneous Variation". (Instead of the expression "Spontaneous Variation", I would use the expression "the effects of Individual Tapas", which includes Educational culture and the effects of Environment, which includes the Forces of nature or Devas and the influence of the thoughts and actions of other human beings. The word "spontaneous" conveys the notion of chance and absence of cause, whereas the Shastras inculcate the prevalence of Law throughout the universe. According to the Shastras, Tapas and Environment are of very great importance in Kali Yuga, while heredity should be given very much less weight now than in preceding Yugas). Thus the fondness for introducing the hereditary principle even in such matters as succession to the trusteeship, succession to priestly functions in a temple and even to the function of a cook or garland weaver in a temple has been due to this perverted and grossly exaggerated worship of the hereditary principle which is the bane of the modern caste system. No wonder, therefore, that the spiritual aroma of Lakshman Goundan, the founder, first trustee and first Poojari, is considered by many of the devotees of the idol in this temple to still hover round the 1st defendant (his grandson) and that the idea of calling him to account as the trustee of a public temple does not appeal to some of the witnesses on the side of the defence. But the facts which they speak to, as pointed out by the learned Officiating Chief Justice, by Mr. Justice Seshagiri Aiyar and by Mr. Justice Burn (whose clear summings up on this point I adopt, as I cannot hope to better them) fully establish, in my opinion, that the temple is a public one. Of course, if what I may be permitted to call a mechanical view of the evidence is taken, some weight might be given to the vague opinion-evidence of some of the defendants' witnesses that the temple is a private temple, but as Justice Sir Abdur Rahim points out, such evidence is of very little value when we are entitled ourselves to draw the proper inference from the proved facts. The fact, again, that the Poojari is allowed to be a non Brahmana by hereditary caste is of no significance as even in Palani itself, the Poojari was a non Brahmana till about a century ago and the Lord Kandaswami's devotees are mostly non-Brahmins and are not usually inclined to make distinctions between Brahmana and non-Brahmana worshippers. (One of the Devis of Lord Skanda was, by tradition, a maiden belonging to a very rude Hill-tribe)

I am aware that the learned Subordinate Judge (himself a Hindu) has taken a view favourable to the 1st defendant's contention. But it is clear that he was persuaded by one of the learned High Court Vakils, who appeared for the 1st defendant before him, to look to the English case of Bosquet v. Heath (29) for guidance in the decision of the question in dispute (See paragraph 48 of the lower Court's judgment). That case related to a chapel dedicated to the purposes of divine worship according to the rites of the Church of England and its decision depended on the particular facts proved therein. The danger and inexpediency of quoting and relying on English and other foreign decisions by Indian Courts, especially where a decision has to be arrived at on a question of fact, are pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in two cases reported as Bhola Nath Nundi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. (30) and Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (31). The relevant passages have been extracted by me in my judgment in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswamy Pillai (32) and I need not repeat them here.

In the result I would allow the appeal and remand the case for the framing of a proper scheme, the prayer in the plaint for the removal of the 1st defendant from the trusteeship and Poojari office being disallowed. In framing such a scheme, the lower Court should give weight to the fact that a large number of worshippers respect the 1st defendant (though it may be that their mental attitude cannot be defended on entirely rational or Shastraic grounds) as the descendant of the holy founder.

As regards costs, I would direct the costs of both sides to be met out of the temple funds.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The three plaintiffs obtained the sanction of the Collector of Salem under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure for instituting this suit. The two defendants are father and son. They raised the objection in limine that as the temple was not a trust created for public religious purposes, the suit was not maintainable. The Subordinate Judge upheld this plea and dismissed the suit. In this Court, on appeal from his decree the present Officiating Chief Justice was of opinion that the temple in suit was a public religious endowment. Mr.

Justice Oldfield took a different view. Hence this appeal.

Both the plaintiffs and the defendants are agreed that the temple came into existence about the year 1819 or 1820. Its traditional origin is thus stated: The grandfather of the 1st defendant was a pious and religious man. He was in the habit of going to Palani every year to worship the deity Subramania, known also as Kandaswami. He carried on his shoulders a kavadi (usually, two baskets one hanging from each end of a pole which is carried on the shoulders of the devotee) with offerings to that famous shrine in the Madura District. After some years, he had a dream in which he was told that it was unnecessary for him to travel to Palani every year, and that the deity would manifest itself to him in his own place, if he would establish an idol there. Acting upon this revelation, the grandfather whose name was Lakshmana Goundan built a temple on land belonging to him and installed the deity in it. There is some dispute whether the place where the particular part of the temple stands was originally a portion of the dwelling house. The evidence to which our attention has been drawn shows that it was a vacant site adjoining the house, and that originally a small Mantapam was built for installing the idol. It was subsequently re built with granite stones. As an adjunct to the principal deity, the idol of Idumban, who according to Puranic story was the commander-in-chief of god Kandaswami, was installed in a room of the house in which Lakshmana Goundan and his people lived. Immediately after this installation, the family vacated the house and removed to a newly built house near by. The belief that the Palani god had come down to this place, the fame of the founder, his sanctity and a further belief in his power of foretelling events through the god's favour attracted a large number of people to the shrine. In course of time, the temple was extended. A number of Mantapams were erected in close proximity to the place where the deity was enshrined. Copper idols known as utsava-igrahams were introduced. These idols were taken in procession on specified occasions. Two cars and other vehicles for the processions were built. A car street was laid down, the owners of the houses existing on the street site having agreed to sell away their houses. Outsiders built Chatrams in the car street for feeding devotees who attend the festivals. Rich families and communities provided funds for celebrating utsavams. These are the admitted facts. I shall immediately refer to some other facts which have been disputed here and in the Court below. The point for decision in these circumstances is, "was there a dedication of the shrine for public worship and has the temple thereby become a public religious endowment?"

Some of the circumstances relied on by the plaintiffs have, to a certain extent, been stated by me already. I shall now refer to the disputed facts. The plaintiffs' case was that there was a temple in the place where the present idol is installed, that the founder Lakshmana Goundan was given funds for building the present temple, and that consequently from the outset the institution was a public one. Both the learned Judges have rejected this contention. There is no reliable evidence of there having been a public temple in the place where the present temple stands. It is true that a goddess is referred to as existing in a portion of the temple. But the evidence is not satisfactory to prove that this goddess was the object of public worship at any time. However that may be, there can be no question that the funds for building the temple came from devotees. The 1st defendant contended that moneys were offered to his grandfather on account of his piety and sanctity, that the offerings were his private property and that consequently the temple built by him with those offerings was a private one. The evidence is not very definite on this question. But notwithstanding the high character of Lakshmana Goundan, it is abundantly clear that it was the deity which attracted the worshippers and that it was the deity for whom the offerings were made. The temple was on the model of the Palani temple. The festivals are still celebrated as in Palani. The accepted story on both sides is that it is the deity at Palani that had promised to establish itself in this shrine; therefore, it is impossible to believe that offerings were made to Lakshmana Goundan personally, and not to the idol. Lakshmana Goundan's inspiration and his power of foretelling were all derived from the Deity which he had installed and which he was worshipping. It is not usual with worshippers in this part of India to make large offerings to the priest apart from the idol. The Subordinate Judge in paragraph 44 does not say that the offerings were made to Lakshmana Goundan personally. Those who are acquainted with the sentiments which Hindus entertain towards the deity at Palani can realise at once what a powerful influence, it exercises over the minds of the people and how devoted worshippers are to it. It is, therefore, impossible to believe that the offerings were made to the Poojari and not to the deity.

One other fact on which there has been some dispute is this. Many families in the district have been treating this deity as their Kula Thaivum. It is a pity that witnesses were not asked to explain the true significance of this expression. Kula Thaivam, according to Hindu notions, is the deity who presides over the destinies of a particular family. Once a year and sometimes oftener pilgrimages are undertaken by the family to the place where the deity is. Before marriage and other auspicious ceremonies are performed in the family, special Pooja is made to the deity. When a member of the family becomes sick, vows are made to the deity. The evidence on this question has been accepted by the learned Judges and by the Subordinate Judge. The latter says in paragraph 44: "Many people consider the deity worshipped in the temple as their kula-deivam and make and fulfil vows in this temple." Now it is impossible to hold that a deity which is regarded in this manner can be the private property of an individual. If it is private property, the owner can prevent access to the temple, can prevent the performance of the vows and can interdict the performance of the Poojas. I might say that it will almost shock the sentiment of a Hindu to be told that a deity which is regarded as the kula deivam by a number of people is the private property of any one individual. Mr. Justice Oldfield apparently realises the importance of this fact, but gets over it by saying that this belief in the minds of the people was not brought about by any act or omission on the part of Lakshmana Goundan and his heirs. The learned Judge apparently thinks that there is no estoppel against Lakshmana Goundan. With all deference I am unable to agree. It is almost impossible for a Hindu to believe that Lakshmana Goundan and his heirs were not aware that vows were being taken, and special Poojas were being arranged on the ground that the idol was the kula deivam. They were on the spot to perform the Pooja. They must have known at the time of the special Poojas why they were being done. I must, therefore, respectfully dissent from the explanation which the learned Judge has offered on this question. The fact, therefore, stands that the deity was regarded by many people, as the Subordinate Judge says, as their family deity.

I have already referred to the fact that outsiders have provided funds for the performance of festivals in the temple. The evidence upon that question consists of Exhibits B, B (1), D, G, H, H (1), J, J (1), L and M. Certain accounts, namely K (1), K (2) and K (3), were exhibited in the lower Court. As it was objected in this Court that these three exhibits have not been properly proved, I shall not consider them in connection with this subject. There is also oral evidence on this question. The defendant himself admits that provision has been made by the public for conducting festivals. Exhibit G is the family partition deed in which a sum of Rs. 600 was set apart for the performance of charities. Exhibit H is a compromise decree among the members of a family making a similar provision. Exhibit H (1) relates to a Chatram. Exhibit J (1) is a Will by a devotee. Exhibit M is an agreement among the members of a family. Exhibit L is a sale-deed, in which it is recited that the land was purchased for performing a festival. Letters were also produced in which the 1st defendant and his son had asked some of the persons who performed festivals to remit money. Mr. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar who appeared for the defendants contended that the sums contributed were not enough for the conduct of the festivals and that the 1st defendant and his ancestors supplemented the contribution from their own income. This may be true. But it does militate against the fact that notwithstanding such contribution, the public regarded that they had a right to conduct festivals for the deity. The learned Vakil for the respondents referred us to decisions in which it was held that a public trustee was bound to accept a contribution from a worshipper and contended that as on the evidence given in this case, it was clear there was no obligation on the part of the defendants to accept the offerings, the defendants were not trustees of the temple. There is some vague evidence given, mostly by the defendants' witnesses and also by some of the plaintiffs' witnesses, to the effect that permission of the defendants had to be obtained before performing a festival. This is all opinion evidence. Not a single instance was deposed to, in which the defendants refused permission. Moreover the performance of festivals is largely in the discretion of a trustee. Even in a public temple, the trustees are not bound to conduct a festival because a worshipper wants them to do so. No doubt, the discretion should not be arbitrary. But unless trustees are clothed with some powers to regulate the mode of worship, the affairs of an institution cannot be properly carried on; Courts in this Presidency have always recognised in the trustee a right to exercise judicious discretion regarding the performance of festivals. Therefore, even accepting everything that way deposed to on this point, it does not follow that the worshippers sought permission of the defendant and his ancestors merely because they considered that the temple was the private property of the 1st defendant.

The above remarks to a certain extent apply to the erection of choultries near the temple. There are four choultries altogether. Three of them belong to the worshippers. One was built by the defendants' ancestors. This is another very important circumstance, indicating that the temple is a public one. If the conduct of a festival and the taking out of the deity depended upon the whim and pleasure of the defendants' family, is it conceivable that large sums of money would have been spent upon constructing rest-houses and Chatrams in the place? To say the least, this fact argues a consciousness on the part of the worshippers that the temple was public property and that they had a right of access to it. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar addressed the same argument regarding the existence of choultries as he advanced regarding Kattalais. Another fact to which I made a casual reference at the outset should again be noticed. The existence of the fixed stone idol which is not carried in procession may be consistent with the idol being the private property of the owner. But it is hardly conceivable, in this part of India at any rate, that a copper idol would be introduced for being taken in procession if the temple itself was private property. The very object of a procession is that the image representing the idol inside should be taken out for public worship. Therefore, this circumstance strongly negatives the suggestion that the temple was a private one.

Then there is another circumstance which very strongly supports the view taken by the learned Officiating Chief Justice. Some of the items in the plaint schedule stand in the name of the deity. As regards item No. 2, Exhibit C, the revenue register of the village contains a significant entry in column 15. The column is headed: "Name and relationship of original grantee and of subsequent and present holders—Length of possession." As against this item the entry is: "Deity Kandaswami Pajari and Dharmakarta by Pudupalani Goundan, on purchase." Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar referred us to Exhibits 15 and 15 (a) by which these lands were acquired by Lakshmana Goundan. Exhibit 15 was on the 13th of January 1837 and Exhibit 15 (a) was on the 29th of November 1847. The purchases were made as if by a private owner. It was contended that no significance should be attached to the entry in the village register, having regard to the origin of the title. To my mind, the very origin of the title and the subsequent entry afford the clearest indication that after the purchase, the lands were dedicated for public purposes. The next item which I shall refer to is item No. 1. Exhibit D, the settlement and survey register of Mamundi village of the year 1871, contains two entries: In column 11 under the heading "Pattadar's name" the entry is "Kallipatti Kandaswami," that is, the deity. In column 12 under the heading "Remarks" the entry is "Pajari Palani Goundan". The learned Vakil suggested that the term Poojari is a name which was prefixed to the members of the family as they were doing Pooja; and he also suggested that the term Dharmakarta in Exhibit C was a similar prefix. But that suggestion will not explain column 11. When we remember that these entries in settlement registers are made after enquiry by the Revenue officers, and on statements made by persons in possession, it seems to be clear that this property was dedicated to the temple and the members of the defendants' family regarded themselves as trustees of the temple. Another item is contained in Exhibit F. That is the re-survey and settlement register of the village of Mullasamudram. There are two items in this document: Survey No. 19 (3) and Survey No. 19 (4). 19 (3) is entered as private property of Lakshmana Goundan. 19 (4) is entered as temple Poramboke. The contrast between the two descriptions is very significant. This is item No. 5 in the plaint schedule. Exhibit V of the year 1871 also refers to it. Exhibit E relates to another item in the plaint. It is the register of Ballakulli village and was apparently made out in the year 1863. Under column 16 the entry is: "Kallipatti Kandaswami Deity, Pajari and Dharmakarta Pudupalani Goundan." As regards this item our attention was drawn to Exhibits 18 (a) and 18 of the years 1903 and 1912 respectively, in which it was recited that the defendants were owners of the property. Apparently the 1st defendant had conceived for some time the idea of appropriating the income from the endowed properties for his own private use. This casual statement by lessees in this document cannot take away the value of Exhibit E. The learned Vakil realised the force of these entries in these documents and suggested that they may be explained on the ground that these were endowments made by the defendants to their family deity. It was argued that the expression "Dharmakarta and Pajari" are not inconsistent with the private character of the institution. Reference was made to the words "Debutter and Shebai" occurring in cases decided in Calcutta and Allahabad. Whatever may be the notion entertained in the northern part of India as regards the significance of such words, there can be no doubt that in this part of India the word Dharmakarta is not applied to the owner of a private institution. The fact is significant that before public Revenue officials some statements must have been made which led to the entry, proving beyond doubt that the defendants' family regarded themselves as trustees of a public institution and not as owners of a private temple. One other fact which was not disputed is that a large section of the public have been worshipping this deity.

As against these circumstances Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar referred us to some facts, which, he contended, were not consistent with the public character attributed to the institution. He referred to the fact that a Hundi was being kept for throwing in the offerings. The existence of the Hundi is not denied. One fact, which apparently escaped the notice of the Subordinate Judge and which to my mind is very significant, is that Lakshmana Goundan himself maintained an account of the collections in the Hundi and also an account of the jewels. Exhibit 39 is of the year 1849. The entries in the cadjan account, whose genuineness was not disputed before us, relate to the collections from the Hundi box on the Thy Pushyam festival in the year 1849. The various items which make up the total of nearly Rs. 400 are given. If Lakshmana Goundan believed that he was accountable to no one, why did he keep an account of the offering? No doubt, no other account has been produced. But if there are accounts, they must be in the possession of the 1st defendant. He has not chosen to produce them. This does not show that no accounts existed. Exhibit 40 was also kept by Lakshmana Goundan. It contains an account of the jewels belonging to the deity. I have not heard any explanation about these two documents. The learned Vakil said that no regular accounts were kept of the Hundi collections. As I said before, the outside public is not in a position to know whether accounts were kept or not. Stress was laid on the fact that the public never asked for an account of the Hundi collections. Persons who are conversant with the habits of the people in India can attach no importance to this fact. A Hindu, after having made an offering to the deity, never troubles himself about its application. He considers that his duty is ended and that, if persons who are entrusted with the control of those offerings, do not behave as they ought to, the deity would look to their punishment and that he has no further concern with it. This is the general attitude of the people. With the spread of education, no doubt a new ideal has come into existence. The educated public now wants that the offerings should be devoted to the proper purposes of the institution. That shows the awakened consciousness of the people and accounts for the institution of a large number of suits for framing schemes. I do not think the fact that for a long time, the priest in charge was allowed uncontrolled possession of the income, is any indication, at any rate in India, that the priest was the owner of the offerings. The next circumstance relied on by the learned Vakil is that permission was obtained from the Poojaris for the performance of utsavams. I have already referred to this matter. One other argument was that for getting beyond what is known as pithalai vasal padi (the brass door way) some present had to be made in the Hundi and that, therefore, the people were conscious that the idol was the private property of the Poojari. This again is a misapprehension. In Tirupathi, the most famous shrine in all India, a fee is demanded for entrance into the Pagoda except on one occasion during the day. In Srirangam, another famous shrine, the trustees have levied a particular fee for entrance into a particular part of the temple on special occasions, such as the Ekadesi festival. In the Rock fort temple at Trichinopoly, every one who wants to go to the topmost part is asked to pay a contribution of not less than three pies. These levies are made not because the temple or the idol is private property, but because the trustees have to regulate the affairs of the temple. They have to collect money somehow for purposes of worship and they have to take special precautions about entrance into particular places. In order that the temple may have more income these devices are resorted to. I say nothing as to whether they are legal. But these practices do not argue that the idol is private property. The next circumstance relied on for the respondents is that the family of the defendants are the Archakas. It is true they do not belong to a class from which the Poojaris of a temple are drafted. But there is no rule that unless a person belongs to a particular class he should not perform worship in a temple. Having regard to the fact that the reputed founder of the institution himself performed the Pooja, it is only natural that his descendants should continue the worship. In the well-known temple at Chidambaram there are a large number of Archakas who claim to have come down to earth along with the deity for which they are performing Pooja. They do not belong to the caste from which ordinarily temple Archakas are drawn. It is only in the nature of things that the descendants of the person who performed the first Pooja should continue the worship. I do not think, therefore, that this fact militates against the public character of the temple. It was also argued that the defendants' family have, to the exclusion of the members of the public, been the sole managers and that this is an indication that the public have no right to interfere with the management. The answer to that is that it is not unnatural that the founder should be the first trustee and that his descendants should be the hereditary trustees. It is the commonest thing in India that so long as the founder's family lasts, even in the settlement of schemes, Courts turn to that family for providing a trustee, whatever restrictions they may place on his management. In the present case, nobody would have questioned the management of the grandfather of the 1st defendant, who seems to have led a holy life and who seems to have been conserving property for the benefit of the temple. He lived till the year 1857. His son had a shorter career. We know very little about him. He apparently purchased some property for the temple, and from the evidence it appears that he conducted the charity efficiently and honestly. He died in 1863 leaving the 1st defendant, who was then a minor. During his minority, his mother seems to have conducted the affairs properly. 1st defendant's career in life has not been good. I refer to it not for the purpose of raking up his antecedents with a view to discredit his evidence, but for the purpose of showing that the public naturally had no faith in his character or capacity to manage. He was convicted of murder and the sentence was commuted to one of transportation for some years. He came out in the year 1903. It is not a violent presumption to make that the man against whom this charge of murder was made would not scruple to create evidence in his favour for the ownership of this temple. Therefore, I attach no importance to some of the documents which came into existence since 1903, to which I shall presently advert as they were strongly relied on by the defendants. After the 1st defendant returned, matters seem to have gone on from bad to worse. Enquiries were instituted in the year 1908 regarding his management. Exhibit 45 (a) was in the year 1909. Then we have Exhibit 45 (b), which was an enquiry in connection with the sanction in the year 1913. All these show that the public were not satisfied with the conduct of affairs by the 1st defendant. It may, therefore, be said that the public at the earliest possible opportunity began to question the 1st defendant's stewardship. I have already said that it was not shown that either Lakshmana Goundan or his son had behaved improperly in the management of the trust. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar relied strongly upon the fact that even after his release from jail, 1st defendant was allowed to conduct the worship. There is evidence that this man went through the ceremony of purification, which, according to Hindu notions, qualifies a person guilty of offences to perform worship. I do not think that circumstance tells against the public character of the temple. Another circumstance relied on was the fact that the tomb of the grandfather adjoins the temple. Mr. Justice Oldfield is admittedly wrong in saying that the tomb is inside the temple. Even that will not affect the question. In some of the important temples in south India, the tomb of a great saint is within the temple. For example in Palani, on the model of which this temple was built, there is the tomb of the first saintly worshipper within the temple. Poojas are offered to it every day. In Srirangam, the tomb of the great founder of Vaishnavism, Sri Ramanuja Chariar, is within the four walls of the temple. One more circumstance on which stress was laid was the fact that Pooja was being done to the image of the founder and his wife. I do not think that that circumstance is of any value. In Srirangam, Pooja is done to Sri Ramanuja almost as grandly as is done to the deity itself. There are processions also for him. It all depends upon the veneration in which the founder is held whether any festivals are performed in his honour. There are not circumstances which establish that the temple is a private one.

I shall now refer to a few documents on which Mr. Srinivasa Aiyanger laid some emphasis. He referred to Exhibit 26, an income-tax notice issued in the year 1908. There is only one of these notices exhibited. 1st defendant came out of jail in 1903, and it is no wonder that he allowed himself to be taxed on the income derived from the temple offerings. As to whether the tax was remitted and how long it continued we have no evidence. As I said before, any document which came into existence after 1903 can have no value in the case. Exhibit 25 is an application by the present defendant, in which he asked the Revenue Authorities to allow a peon attached to the temple to wear a silver badge. He refers to the temple as his own Devasthanam. This is consistent with his being the trustee of the temple. Even if it were otherwise, I attach no importance to this man's self-serving statements. Some enquiries were made in the years 1909 and 1913 by the Revenue officials [vide 45 (a) and 45 (b)]. The Tahsildar and the Deputy Collector were apparently of opinion that this temple was a private one. The opinion of these Revenue officials cannot weigh much in the case. What enquiries they made and how far they were influenced by the statement of the 1st defendant, we do not know. I do not think that their conclusion is of any value in dealing with this case. I have now referred to all the circumstances relied on by the plaintiffs and by the defendants.

To sum up, on the side of the plaintiffs we have these facts (a) the public have been worshipping in the temple for a century and they consist of persons not only residing in or about the place but of persons from the districts of Trichinopoly and Coimbatore and even from the neighbouring State of Mysore; (b) the money for the building of the temple has come from their contributions; (c) some members of the public have established Kattalais for utsavams in the temple; (d) some of them have purchased lands for the conduct of charities in the temple (Exhibits S, D and L); (e) some of them have built Chatrams wherein food is distributed and in which travellers rest themselves on occasions of festivals; (f) there is an utsava vigraham which is taken in procession on specified occasions; (g) cars were built and a street was laid out in which processions are regularly conducted; (h) many persons regard the deity as their kula-deivam; (i) vows are taken for the performance of tonsure ceremony in the temple; (j) the grandfather himself built a choultry for the accommodation of travellers; (k) the grandfather kept accounts of the Hundi collections and also a list of the jewels belonging to the idol; (l) there are entries in the Village Registers in which the deity is entered as the Pattadar of some lands, and the defendants' ancestors as Dharmakartas or Poojaris of the temple; (m) there must have been statements made to Revenue officials by the member of the defendants' family from which alone the entries in Exhibits E and F could have been made showing that certain properties belonged to the temple and that the defendants' family were only trustees. As against these facts we have others: (1) that the temple was founded by the ancestor of the defendants; (2) that the management continued in the defendants' family uncontrolled hitherto; (3) that there is a tomb of the founder adjoining the shrine; (4) that some Poojas are performed to the images of the founder and his wife; (5) that the Hundi collections and other offerings have been at the disposal of the defendants' family without being called to account; (6) that the family of the defendants are the Poojaris of the temple; (7) that some sort of restriction is placed against promiscuous entrance into the shrine; (8) that the temple itself has been built upon land belonging to the defendants; (9) that in one year the 1st defendant submitted himself to be taxed in respect of the income from the temple. I have dealt with each of these circumstances separately. The cumulative effect of the circumstances relied upon by the plaintiffs is so strong that I have no hesitation in holding that the temple is a public one. The circumstances relied upon by the defendants are all of them explainable with reference to the fact that the original founder was a holy man and that the people trusted his successors to carry out the objects of the trust. A further explanation is furnished by the general attitude of the people in India towards persons whose ancestors had a high reputation for sanctity.

It was rightly conceded by Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar that the question whether an institution is dedicated to public worship is ordinarily a question of fact. Nonetheless he quoted a number of decisions for the purpose of showing on what principles a conclusion of this kind should be based. Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, on the other hand, cited other decisions to draw our attention to circumstances which should guide Courts in deciding whether there is dedication or not. Before dealing with these cases I should like to make one remark of a general character. In southern India, excepting Malabar, on which I shall say a few words later on, there is no private temple in which the outside public has established Kattalais and in respect of which they have built Chatrams for the accommodation of travellers. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar with his large experience of litigation told us that he is unable to mention another instance of a similar kind. He referred to temples in Malabar and to private institutions in Bengal. It is necessary to deal with these two instances. In Malabar people are divided into Tarwads, which are practically separate domains; each clan or Tarwad has its own place of worship, its own burial ground, its own bathing tank, etc. Each of these Tarwads has been regarding itself as a separate entity different from the rest. There are, therefore, numerous private temples in Malabar and the questions which have come before the Courts have mostly related to the right of trusteeship in such temples inhering in the members of the Tarwad. Malabar in this respect stands by itself. This clannish feeling is not what we find outside the west coast. In the south, common worship in the temple, and communal rights in burial grounds and in bathing places are everywhere to be found. Therefore, in dealing with a case coming from the east coast, no decision in respect of temples situate in Malabar can be of any practical assistance. As regards Bengal again, it will not be gain-said that there public temples do not exist to the same extent to which they do in the south. Whereas the rule in the south is that endowment of property is made to the idol in a temple, in the north we find innumerable instances where endowments are made in the name of a reputed saint who worships the idol. The personal sanctity of the founder seems to have had more influence in the north than in the south. When we remember that most of the temples in the south do not owe their existence to Aryan influence but were built and endowed by the non-Aryans and when we also remember that the endowments in the north are mostly by Aryans, the distinction between the two classes of temples would be apparent. Moreover, no cases from Calcutta were quoted before us to show that the outside public established Kattalais or performed festivals in temples owned by a private individual. Therefore, the cases relating to Malabar and to Bengal would not help us in the determination of the present case.

With these preliminary remarks, I proceed to discuss shortly the cases which were quoted before us. The learned Vakil for the respondents relied upon Satrasala Venkatachellamiah v. Pouchangum Narrainappah (25). In that case it does not appear that there was any question of dedication. In this connection I must take the opportunity of differentiating between two classes of dedications. The dedication with which we are concerned, properly speaking, is the consecration of a temple for public worship; that is throwing open the portals of a temple for public worship. It is a dedication in the strict sense of the term. In some cases the word dedication is employed to denote an endowment of property to the temple. The question has been discussed whether the mere use of the income for purposes of worship amounted to a dedication of the property to a temple. In the case of a dedication of the second kind, it has to be shown that the property ceased to belong to the individual and was given up for the use of the temple. In the first class of cases it will generally be sufficient to show that there has been free access to the temple, and that there have been public worship and public celebrations. I think it is necessary that we should bear in mind these distinctions in dealing with some of the cases. In the case in Satrasala Venkatachellamiah v. Pouchangum Narrainappah (25) the question was whether the person who built the temple or the person who installed the idol was entitled to management and possession. The question of dedication was not in issue in that suit. The decision in Satrasala Venkatachellamiah v. Pouchangum Narrainappah (33) makes this position clear. The next case quoted was Ohemmanthatti Ohapunni Naiyar v. Meyene Itachi (26). That is a Malabar case. In that case, the question was whether the property was inalienable because it was attached to a temple. Here again no question of dedication was considered. Pattanur Valangeri v. Narayanan Nambiar (28) is another Malabar case. Reference was made in that judgment to a decision, Appu Pattar v. Kurumba Bhagwati (20). In that decision, the learned Judges distinctly say that there was no issue whether the temple was public or private. Therefore, the case was decided on assumptions. These were all the Madras cases referred to. The next case was one Doe d Howard v. Pestonji (34). As pointed out by Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, this case seems to have depended largely upon the view taken by the Chief Justice that the document exhibited in the case was not sufficient to operate as a conveyance of property. In more than one place the learned Chief Justice says that there are no words of conveyance and there are no trustees to whom the property is conveyed. Apparently at the time this case was decided it was considered essential that to have an effective dedication there must be a deed which an English lawyer would regard as a proper conveyance. Moreover in that case there was a special reservation by the executants of documents in these words: "The property shall always be subject to our authority and to that of our heirs." See page 536. The decision in Konwar Doorganath Roy v. Ram Chunder Sen (24) admittedly related to a private temple. The question in that case was whether the utilisation of the income by the family was evidence of dedication of the property to the idol. The Judicial Committee came to the conclusion that there was not sufficient evidence of endowment. This case pertains to the second class of dedication to which I referred already. This case does not affect the present case. Pestonji Jivanji v. Shapurji Edulji Ohinoy (35) has no bearing on the present case. There apparently the founders' heirs were held to have the right of the management and to have the right to prohibit the Parsee community from putting up a new tower. When the founders' descendant sued for an injunction to restrain the erection of the new tower, it was held that it was not established that the public had this right to so put up the new tower. No question as regards dedication is discussed by the Judicial Committee. There was an issue about it and the Judicial Committee accepted a finding of fact and proceeded to give their decision on the basis of that finding. These are all the cases relied on on behalf of the respondents.

Mr. Krishnaswamy Aiyar for the appellants quoted a large number of decisions before us. The most important of them is the judgment of Mr. Justice Scott in Thackersey Dewraj v. Hurbhum Nursey (3). The circumstances relied on as indicating dedication are to a large extent the same as those to be found in the present case. Great stress was laid in that case on the fact that the temple was open to public worship. The next decision in Monahar Ganesh Tambikar v. Lakhmiram Govindram (1) is a very instructive case. The learned Judges, of whom Mr. Justice West was one, say:—"It is indeed a strange, if not wilful, confusion of thought by which the defendants set up the Shri Ranchhod Raiji as a deity for the purpose of inviting gifts and vouchsafing blessings, but as a mere block of stone, their property for the purpose of their appropriating every gift laid at its feet. But if there is a juridical person, the ideal embodiment of a pious or benevolent idea as the centre of the foundation, this artificial subject of rights is as capable of taking offerings of cash and jewels as of land. Those who take physical possession of the one as of the other kind of property incur thereby a responsibility for its due application to the purposes of the foundation—compare Griffin v. Griffin (36), Mulhallen v. Marum (37), Aberdeen Town Council v. Aberdeen University (38). They are answerable as trustees even though they have not consciously accepted a trust, and a remedy may be sought against them for maladministration by a suit open to any one interested, as under the Roman system in a like case by means of a popularis actio." This quotation, if I may say so with respect, very succinctly sums up the duties of persons who found temples. In the beginning, the offerings are made without any idea of calling the founder to account because of the sanctity of the shrine and because also of the piety of the founder. It would be almost repugnant to all notions of Hindu theology that this founder and his heirs should be permitted to regard the deity as their private property, for exhibiting which they are entitled to make income for themselves. It would undoubtedly be regarded as a fraud practised upon the public that the income derived with reference to the sanctity and holiness of a shrine should be regarded as the perquisites of the persons in charge, and that they should be allowed to mismanage and misappropriate the income. The offerings are handed personally to them because they are the custodians of the deity; they should utilise these offerings for the benefit of the deity and for providing conveniences for the worshippers who come there for worship. It would strike at the very root of religion in India to hold that the person who is permitted by the worshippers to receive the offerings is the owner of the income and not simply the trustee thereof. The passage from 12 Bombay is a compendious expression of Hindu ideas on this question. In Ohintaman Bajaji Dev v. Dhondo Ganesh Dev (4); a temple was regarded as public, notwithstanding the fact that the founders and their heirs mixed the income arising from the offerings with their own private income and notwithstanding the fact that the temple itself was built over the grave of the first founder. Jugalkishore v.

Lakshmandas Ragunathdas (6) and Girdharlal v. Naranlal (8) are further instances of the same kind. In Madras, the most notable instance of a temple, originally founded by private persons, being regarded as a public temple is the Chidambaram temple. The Archakas there claim to have come down to earth along with the idol they have set up. Undoubtedly every pie that is offered is distributed among the Archakas. They keep no accounts which is open for public inspection. They render no accounts to the public of the income. But there is no doubt that the public have a right of access to the temple. The public have largely endowed Kattalais for the worship, have established choultries, have constructed feeding houses and are conducting festivals. Naturally these circumstances have been taken into account in pronouncing that the temple is a public one and not a private one. [See Natesa v. Ganapati (9).] During recent years there have been some cases in Madras which require consideration. Peesapati Sitaramanujachari v. Panduri Vellamma (10) and Muthiah Chetti v. Periannan Chetti (39) and Subramania Aiyar v. Venkatachala Vadhyar (11) are cases where the question arose whether the temple was a public one or a private one. In all of them the conclusion was that the temple was a public one, Peesapati Sitaramanujachari v. Kunduri Vellamma (10) was decided by the Chief Justice and Srinivasa Aiyangar, J. The question there arose directly. Mr. Justice Srinivasa Aiyangar refers to the fact that there was an installation of a stone idol and the introduction of a copper idol. He says: "In fact, the Puja and other services in the temple in no way differ from those in a public temple. It is admitted that the general public, ever since the construction of the temple and the consecration of the idols, have been worshipping in the temple. It is said that they do so with the permission of the Dharmakarta for the time being." * * * "It is also clear from the evidence, that the general public have been making offerings and fulfilling vows in the temple." * *

* "Exhibit C shows that a person who was a stranger to the defendant's family gave some lands to the temple."

SUBRAMANIA AIYAR v. LAKSHMANA GOUNDAN.

The learned Judge then refers to other circumstances, namely the defendant's calling himself a Dharmakarta, the enfranchisement of the Inam lands, and concludes: "The evidence above set out clearly establishes that the suit temple was dedicated for public worship." The non-keeping of accounts, as in the present case, was relied on in that case and the further fact that the bulk of the property was given by the defendant's husband was also mentioned. These circumstances were held not to weigh against the public character of the temple. The learned Judge's wide experience of temple litigation gives to this ruling peculiar importance. The learned Chief Justice in a very short judgment says: "Having regard to the ideas prevailing among Hindus in this part of India, I think there is sufficient evidence of an intention to dedicate these properties for public charitable purposes, that is to say, for the purposes of a temple for the use of Hindu worshippers." I attach very great importance to this dictum. The learned Chief Justice has been the chief law officer of the Crown in the Presidency as Advocate-General. It was his duty as such officer to grant sanction for instituting suits under the Civil Procedure Code. In the above passage he refers to the "ideas prevailing among Hindus in this part of India," as a very important factor in coming to the conclusion that the temple was a public one. I may claim some acquaintance with temples in southern India and in my opinion the dictum of the Chief Justice succinctly expresses the ideas of the Hindu public on this question. The idea prevailing in south India is that when once a great man installs a deity and the public have a right of worship in it, it is a public temple. That is the consciousness of the community and the fact that this consciousness is relied on by the learned Chief Justice with his large experience on the Bench and with his knowledge gained while he was Advocate-General makes the decision in Peesapati Sitaramanujachari v. Kanduri Vellamma (10) particularly valuable. In Muthiah Ohetti v. Periannan Ohetti (39) on facts very similar to the present, the Chief Justice and Phillips, J., came to the conclusion that the temple was a public one. Ayling and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ., in Subramania Aiyar v. Venkatachala Vadhyar (11) gave a similar decision.

It is unnecessary to multiply citations further. For all these reasons I am of opinion that the temple is a public one. Mr. Srinivasa Aiyangar argued that as no date can be predicated as being the date of dedication, it must be proved that the founder dedicated it at the moment he installed the idol and otherwise no dedication should be inferred. I do not think that this contention is well founded. I should not be supposed as suggesting that the moment the idol was installed, the founder did not consecrate it for public worship. Even if that conclusion is not possible, when he purchased the property under Exhibits 15 and 15 (a) and subsequently allowed that property to be utilised for temple purposes, he must have dedicated the temple for public worship. In the absence of any writing and in the absence of any evidence of persons who were alive in 1819, it is not possible to say when the dedication was made. It is the usage in the temple and it is the practice that has been observed that should guide us in determining this point. From this point of view, I have no hesitation in holding that the temple was dedicated at least during the lifetime of Lakshmana Goundan. That disposes of the main question argued before us.

One or two subsidiary questions were casually alluded to by the learned Vakil for the respondents, on which it is necessary to say a few words. The learned Vakil argued that the present plaintiffs have not shown that they have such an interest as is necessary to enable them to institute a suit under section 92, Civil Procedure Code. No issue was taken upon this point, and we find nothing in the judgment of the two learned Judges on this question. If the point had been raised definitely, plaintiffs could have let in evidence to show that they had a substantial interest in the worship of the idol. Therefore this argument comes too late. It was next contended that the sanction obtained from the Collector is not a proper one. There were two petitions by two sets of people to the Collector. The Collector heard both of them together and passed one order on both of them, to the effect that two or more among the five signatories of the two petitions combined should file the suit. He ought to have no doubt specified the individuals. The three persons who actually instituted the suit were, however, three of the five persons who applied for the sanction. This irregularity in the sanction cannot vitiate the suit. Moreover, this point does not seem to have been relied on before the two learned Judges. The two petitions must be regarded as one and the order must be taken to have been passed on both, and the fact that the suit was instituted by one man who signed one of the petitions and by two others who signed the other petition is not an objection which vitiates the sanction. On the whole in my opinion the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the temple is not a public religious endowment. His decision must be reversed. As regards the comments of my learned brother on some of the statements made by me, I wish it to be understood that my language was not intended to decide any question of ethnology regarding race.

BORN, J.—The only question for decision is whether the Kandasami temple in Kalipatti village of the Salem District is a public religious institution or not, I agree with the conclusion at which my learned brothers have arrived and shall confine myself to stating briefly the reasons which make me take this view of the facts. There is now little dispute about the main facts, and the controversy is really confined to the question of what inference is to be drawn from them. The following account of the history of the institution appears to be established. The temple owes its origin to Lakshmana Goundan, grandfather of the 1st defendant. In the year Vishu he installed on his house site in Kalipatti an idol of the deity from which the temple takes its name. Other objects of worship were placed in the house itself and thereafter Lakshmana Goundan removed his residence to another building. The temple was erected on the site including the portion which had been previously occupied by the dwelling house. Lakshmana Goundan was a man of small means and the funds for the erection of the temple and the conduct of the worship were derived from offerings obtained by him and from out of his earnings as a seer. As might be expected in the circumstances, the progress of the building was gradual. The main features had, however, been completed by the time of Lakshmana Goundan's death in 1857. He was succeeded by his son who survived him for a few years only, and during the long minority of the 1st defendant, the affairs of the temple appear to have been managed by a deputy, who was also a member of the family. Additions were made to the temple building and its paraphernalia by this deputy and after him by the 1st defendant. The whole structure was put up by the members of the family. The temple gradually grew in importance and the main festivals are now attended by a large number of persons of different castes and coming from several districts. The 1st defendant has done much to attract visitors to the festivals, e.g., by starting a cattle fair. From the beginning the defendants' family has had the sole conduct of the worship and unquestioned control over all the offerings. Vishu (1821) is recited as the year of the foundation in Exhibit LI, and I see no reason to doubt that this is in accordance with tradition and probably correct. Exhibit XXXII is referred to as indicating that a considerable part of the fabric had been constructed before that date. But this is in conflict with other evidence, e.g., plaintiffs' 22nd witness who remembers the temple when it consisted of nothing more than a brick mantapam. The name of the year Pramadi entered in Exhibit XXXII is probably a mistake. Plaintiffs at one time alleged the existence of an older shrine on the same site; but this is a baseless suggestion made for the purpose of strengthening their case in applying for sanction. I agree with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the allegations of collections by strangers for the construction of the temple and of the building of portions of the temple by others than the members of the defendants' family cannot be believed.

The material question to my mind is whether there was any dedication during the life of Lakshmana Goundan. If the temple was a private institution in his time, there is, in my opinion, no evidence which would justify a conclusion in favour of subsequent dedication to public use. There was either such dedication by Lakshmana Goundan or none at all. There is no doubt that in recent years at any rate the 1st defendant had treated the temple and the offerings as his exclusive property and that he has publicly asserted private ownership. Lakshmana Goundan was an ardent devotee of the well-known temple at Palani and made regular pilgrimages to that place. The tradition is that in 1821 he had a dream in which he was told that, in recognition of his piety and devotion, the deity that he worshipped at Palani would make Kalipatti also his special abode. This favour was obtained through Lakshmana Goundan, but it is not stated that it was for his exclusive benefit. He certainly did not regard it in this light. The use of the public temple at Palani was followed and, far from attempting to confine the worship to his own family or a restricted circle, he took steps which indicate the desire to attract as many others as possible. The usual features of a public temple were reproduced. A processional way was formed after acquiring portions of the village site necessary for this purpose. A car was constructed, an image to be carried in procession was completed and a Chatram was built for the accommodation of visitors. The public festivals of Palani were celebrated in Kalipatti also. Contributions for special service were received from strangers (vide defendant's 1st witness). Lakshmana Goundan no doubt used part of the offerings for the maintenance of his family, as he was quite entitled to do. There seems to be no reliable evidence that he appropriated any considerable part of the temple income to acquiring property for himself. This was a later development. The income appears to have been comparatively small. In 1849 (Exhibit XXXIX) the collections during the chief festivals did not exceed Rs. 400. The emoluments of the deputy appointed during the 1st defendant's minority were fixed at Rs. 4 a month - Exhibit XXIII.

The contention for the defendants is that they are the owners of the temple and are entitled to dispose of it in any way they think fit, as far at least as strangers to the family are concerned. This involves a right to abandon the worship if they so please and to utilise the buildings and site for secular purposes if, e. g., these are likely to prove more profitable. As far as I am able to form an opinion, this is an idea repugnant to the general sentiments of Hindus and I may add that in analagous circumstances, it would be repugnant to the sentiments of the followers of other religions as well. It is in this light that the intentions of Lakshmana Goundan must be viewed. The feeling would be all the stronger in his case, as he is admitted by all to have been a man of strong religious convictions. He installed an image of the deity worshipped at Palani whose devotee he was. He took steps to secure that the worship should be public, and I am inclined to think that the correct inference from this conduct is that he intended that this worship should be for all time and as of right.

The defendants rely upon certain facts as indicating that this was not his intention. I agree with the learned Judge from whose decision this appeal is preferred that the defendants' witnesses as a body are entitled to considerably greater credit than those produced by the plaintiffs. The question is, what weight is to be attached to their statements in so far as they seem to support the case of private ownership. There is a considerable body of evidence to the effect that on certain occasions, at any rate, entry into the temple is restricted to those who place offerings in the Hundial box. The witnesses state that those who do not pay must perform their worship from without the gateway. No case of exclusion is established. It is within my own experience that Hundial boxes are kept at the entrance of some temples which are undoubtedly public, and the contributions so received form no inconsiderable part of the income of those institutions. An ordinary worshipper considers it part of his duty to make a contribution, however small. I have no doubt that the witnesses are speaking the truth when they say that those who go in make payments, but I am not satisfied that there are any sufficient grounds for holding that this is conduct which establishes rights of ownership in the defendants' family. Some witnesses who contribute to Maravanai state that they do so only with the permission of the defendants. In my opinion, this is not of much importance when it is remembered that the defendants are undoubtedly the sole managers and Poojaris. Permission would naturally be asked from them and they must have a wide discretion in deciding whether certain services are to be conducted or not. Most of the statements of the witnesses as to the authority of the defendants over the temple and the offerings are not inconsistent with their powers being limited to those just referred to. The effect of opinions expressed as to private ownership is also discounted by proof of acts and conduct on the part of strangers, which are inconsistent with such a view being held.

§ Certain facts in connection with the temple and the worship performed there are relied upon as showing that it is private institution. These are (1) that no entry is permitted into the Idumbar shrine which appears to stand on the site of the Pooja room of the original house, (2) that the founder is buried within the walls, though not inside the temple and (3) that Pooja is offered at his tomb and to effigies of himself and his wife. The history of the foundation and the repute which Lakshmana Goundan had, account sufficiently for these facts and they do not seem to me to be inconsistent with the temple being a public institution. The acts of reverence so done are subsidiary to the worship of the deity to whom the temple is consecrated and by whose name it is known.

Next, reliance was placed on the fact that the temple has been treated as private by public officers. This view has been maintained in several reports made by Tahsildars and Divisional Officers, e. g., Exhibits XLV (b) and XLVIII. These relate to the period of the 1st defendant's control when he was undoubtedly asserting rights of private property. It is not clear on what enquiry these opinions were based, and it must be assumed that the chief executive officer of the district who granted sanction for the institution of this suit considered the conclusions previously arrived at as open to doubt. The receipts by the 1st defendant have been assessed to income-tax from 1908—Exhibit XXVI. This naturally followed from the 1st defendant's assertions. It was no part of the business of an assessing officer to dispute his liability to pay. The Taluk Board refrained from interfering with the levy of fees for shops on temple Poramboke site during festivals. This decision seems, however, to have been come to on the general grounds that interference with such income of any temple is inexpedient—Exhibit XLV (a).

Great stress is laid on the fact that the defendants' family has always had the control of the worship and offerings. Until this suit, no attempt was made to question the extent of the Poojari's powers of disposing of the income in any manner he pleased. It is suggested that even these proceedings have not been instituted out of regard for public interest but from less worthy motives. Assuming this to be so, it is frequently the case that indirect motives are the force which overcome the apathy generally displayed in defending public interests. If the income had remained at the modest figure which seems to have been reached at the death of Lakshmana Goundan, it is, in my opinion, very questionable if this suit would ever have been heard of. It is the growing importance of the temple and its festivals and the consequent increase in the income that has attracted interference. Allegations are made in the plaint that the services have not been conducted and that worshippers have been put to great inconvenience. These allegations, like some others made by the plaintiffs, are wholly without foundation. On the contrary, the evidence shows efficient management of the worship and festivals on the part of the defendants and complete satisfaction on the part of the great body of worshippers. In these circumstances, most persons interested were not likely to make any complaint, even though well aware that a considerable part of their offerings were being appropriated by the defendants to their own use. It has also to be remembered that to question the claims of 1st defendant involved undertaking litigation against an opponent possessed of ample means provided by the worshippers themselves. The one thing certain about such a contest is that it will be both costly and protracted. As already stated, there are distinct indications that strangers regarded the temple as a public institution. Three Chatrams have been created for the accommodation of pilgrims attending festivals. Contributions are made by strangers and sometimes solicited from them, for meeting part of the festival expenses. Several instances are proved in which arrangements have been made in the families of worshippers for securing funds required for subscriptions for the upkeep of Chatrams. Vows are performed at the temple. Many persons go there with kavadis just as they do to Palani, and there is also evidence that a few have adopted the deity as their kuladaivam. It is very unlikely that these acts would have been done if the temple had not been regarded as public. It is true that there is no evidence of any direct endowment in the shape of lands. The fact that the temple stands on grama nattam is unimportant. The site belonged to Lakshmana Goundan and the erection of the temple there does not indicate that it was either public or private. Some lands which were originally personal Inams were acquired by Lakshmana Goundan in his own name without any indication in the title deeds that they were intended for the benefit of the temple; but they are now entered in the public records as held on behalf of the temple by the Poojaris. The history of the entries is not very clear. But they are certainly some indication that the successor of Lakshmana Goundan, in whose time they were made, regarded the acquisitions as having been intended for the benefit of the temple. A portion of an Ayan Patta land, Survey No. 19/4, belonging to the defendants' family was transferred during the minority of the 1st defendant to temple Poramboke. This is, in my opinion, a significant circumstance. It is most unlikely that such a transfer would have been applied for or would have been sanctioned, unless the Pattadar had wholly abandoned any claim to use the land as a source of private gain—yet rental obtained from this land is now claimed by 1st defendant as his private property—[vide Exhibit 24 (d)].

In the result, I think that the inference I have drawn as to Lakshmana Goundan's intention from his conduct is not rebutted by evidence produced on the side of the defendants, and that it does receive support from the attitude of strangers towards the temple and from the manner in which some lands have been dealt with by members of the defendants' family. I agree with the order proposed by my learned brothers. Speaking for myself, I trust that in the framing of a scheme, due regard will be paid to the position which the defendants' family has always held in connection with this institution and that interference will be limited to such measures as are necessary to secure that the income of the temple is properly utilised and accounted for by the defendants and their successors-in-office.]

OF 1918.

DEFENDANT No. 2—APPELLANT

PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 90
—Letters of Administration granted to Hindu widow
—Mortgage by widow with sanction of Court, validity of—Legal necessity, proof of, whether necessary—Mortgagee, duty of—Civil Court, whether can set aside grant of Letters of Administration—Pleadings—Fraud, suit based on—Particulars required.

It is not necessary for a person taking a mortgage from a Hindu widow, who has obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of her deceased husband and has also obtained the sanction of the Probate Court to effect the mortgage, to enquire about the necessity for the loan. If he bona fide relies upon the order of the Probate Court and makes the advance, there is no onus upon him to go and enquire about the truth of the allegations upon which the sanction to mortgage was granted to the widow. A reversioner challenging the transaction must show that the mortgagee knew that the facts on the basis of which the sanction was obtained were false, or that he was instrumental in getting the order from the Court on false representations. [p. 199, cols. 1 & 2.]

The proper Court to set aside a grant of Letters of Administration is the Probate Court and a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to declare an order granting Letters of Administration as null and void [p. 200, col. 1.]

When a transaction is assailed on the ground of fraud, allegations of fraud must be particularised in the plaint. [p. 200, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Howrah, dated the 14th of January 1918, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Howrah, dated the 23rd of September 1916.

ANNODA CHARAN MONDAL v. ATUL CHANDRA MALIK.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakraverty (with him Babu Asiranjan Chatterjee), for the Appellant.—The mortgage was made by the widow not as a Hindu widow but as administratrix to the estate of her deceased husband, and, therefore, under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act the mortgage is binding on the plaintiffs who are the reversioners. The suit ought to fail for this reason only that the plaintiff has suppressed the fact that the mortgage was made by the widow as administratrix to the estate of the deceased Gopal Chandra and has stated in the plaint that the properties were dealt with by the widow as a mere Hindu widow's estate. Irrespective of legal necessity, so long as the sanction granted by the District Judge to mortgage the properties in suit stands good, the mortgage cannot be challenged unless fraud or collusion in obtaining the sanction is proved. But in this case no such proof has been given. As the plaintiffs did not even allege mala fides, fraud or collusion in obtaining the sanction, the suit is not maintainable. Refers to Kamikhya Nath Mukerjee v. Hari Churn Sen (1). The mortgage having been made with the sanction of the District Judge, the mortgagee is protected. Further, the defendant No. 2, the appellant, is not bound to account to the plaintiffs as to whether the mortgage was satisfied or as to whether the mortgage was for consideration.

This is not a case of alienation by a Hindu widow, and, therefore, the suit by the plaintiffs is not maintainable. Refers to section 4 and section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act.

Babu Ram Chandra Majumdar (with him Babu Bijon Kumar Mukherjee), for the Respondents.—The appeal is concluded by findings of fact, and your Lordships cannot, in second appeal, interfere, however gross and inexcusable the error in the findings of fact may be. Refers to Durga Chowdhurani v. Jewahir Singh Chowdhari (2). There is no force in the argument that as there is sanction under section 90 of the Probate and Administration Act the transaction cannot be impeached unless the sanction is revoked. The object of granting Letters of Administration is not to give validity to debts incurred by Hindu widows or owners of limited interests to serve their own private purposes. In this case the husband of Mokhada did not leave any debts behind him. The debts were all incurred by the widow or by her father who was managing the estate on her behalf. By taking the Letters of Administration the position of the widow is not changed. As to the force of Letters of Administration and sanction under section 90, see Nursingh Chunder Bysack, In the goods of (3), Lalit Chandra Chowdhury v. Baikuntha Nath Chowdhury (4). The Letters of Administration can be treated as a nullity if they were granted without jurisdiction. In view of the findings of fact that the mortgage was not for legal necessity and the mortgage did not make the enquiries which he was bound to make, the second appeal must fail.

Babu D. N. Chakraverty, in reply.—The validity of the Letters of Administration cannot be challenged in this Court.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs instituted the suit for a declaration that they were the reversioners of the estate of one Gopal Chandra Shaw, their maternal uncle, that a mortgage which had been executed by his widow Mokhadamoyee Dassi was not operative against them and that the properties covered thereby could not be sold in execution of the decree obtained by the mortgagee against her. They also applied for a temporary injunction restraining the sale and for a declaration that they were not affected by the mortgage deed or the decree or by the sale of the mortgaged properties as directed by the said decree. It appears that the plaint was subsequently amended and an allegation was added that the mortgage-debt had been satisfied. It was also alleged by them that the lady had no legal necessity and, therefore, could not bind the estate in any manner. It is noticeable that there is nothing said in the plaint about this lady having obtained Letters of Administration to the estate of her husband.

ANNODA CHARAN MONDAL v. ATUL CHANDRA MALIK.

It is clear upon the evidence that citations were issued so far as the reversionary heirs were concerned and that some of them were present when the Letters were granted. There is no question that the plaintiffs are the present reversionary heirs of Gopal Chandra Shaw.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that there was legal necessity for the loan contracted by the widow Mokhadamoyee, that she applied for leave to mortgage the property after having obtained Letters of Administration and such leave was granted by the Court, that the reversioners, at least some of them, had knowledge of the application but did nothing. He held upon these facts that the plaintiffs "had knowledge of the legal necessity." As regards the allegation that the mortgage-debt due to the decree-holders had been satisfied, he found that the documents relied upon by the plaintiffs were not genuine, that the mortgage bond "had not been paid in part and not been satisfied from the income of the land in the mortgage suit," and, therefore, it stood good and valid. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge has reversed that decision upon the following findings: (1) that the mortgage in question was not for legal necessity; and (2) that the defendant No. 2, the mortgagee, did not by bona fide enquiry satisfy himself that there was such necessity. It appears to us that he has entirely overlooked the question about this lady having obtained sanction of the Probate Court to mortgage the property. After such sanction the defendant No. 2 advanced money, presumably relying upon the fiat of the Court. There is nothing to show, nor has it been found, that the transaction was collusive or fraudulent or that there was anything which tainted the transaction with fraud. It was not a case of advancing money having regard to the legal necessity of a Hindu widow, but merely upon leave granted by the Court which permitted her to mortgage the property. It is incorrect to suppose that having regard to the sanction given by a Probate Court a person had still to enquire as regards the necessity for such advance. If he bona fide relied upon the order and made the advance, there is no onus upon him to go and make enquiries about the truth of the allegation upon which the sanction was given. To challenge such a transaction it has to be shown that the person who got the mortgage knew that the facts were false or that he was instrumental in getting the order from the Court upon false representation. The learned Judge has, however, elaborately gone into the question of legal necessity and he has gone to the extent that even the earlier mortgage transaction in which this estate was concerned was not a good mortgage, and he has not considered the case from the point of view we have above mentioned. We call his attention to Kamikhaya Nath Mukerjee v. Hari Ohurn Sen (1).

Then as regards the question of payment of the mortgage-debt, he says this:—The accounts show that Mokhada paid off the money due to Annoda, the mortgagee. He says the learned Subordinate Judge had not sufficient grounds for finding that the documents relied upon by the other side were fabrications. He doubted if there were sufficient grounds. Dealing with the accounts Exhibit 11 and an abstract of that account Exhibit 5 which purports to have been signed by the mortgagee, he says, there is no express denial of the signature by Annoda the mortgagee but that Annoda merely denied that he made the endorsement. He says that it is alleged that Annoda was looking after the property of the widow and adds: "Taking it that he was looking after the property I must say I think there is quite sufficient evidence for holding this—and it was his business to see that proper accounts were submitted and the occurrence of such an endorsement is most natural." Then he refers to the security bond which was given by Annoda and three of his relatives in respect of the Letters of Administration, and refers to the fact that they were to see that the estate was properly administered and accounts submitted and that the accounts would in the natural course be placed before Annoda. He does not definitely find that the account Exhibit 5 was signed by Annoda. He stops short of coming to such a finding; although the tendency of his mind was in that direction, he does not say so. He evidently did not feel justified in saying so. It is the same sort of equivocal finding about the letter and the postcard. He says that he doubts if there is sufficient ground for the Subordinate Judge's finding that they were fabrications. Having regard to the serious nature of the allegations and also having regard to the considered judgment of the Subordinate Judge, it was only right and proper that he should also definitely and clearly state his views. This is a very important point in the case, but he has not dealt with it from the proper point of view.

So far as the mortgage-deed is concerned, the suit was instituted by the mortgagee, a decree was obtained thereupon and now there is an appeal pending against that decree. The question as to whether the mortgage-deed has been paid off or not is the subject-matter for determination in that suit and if the plaintiffs knew of that suit, it was right and proper for them to ask to be added as parties so far as that suit was concerned. In the suit as framed it was not suggested that Mokhadamoyee had fraudulently suppressed the fact or that she had colluded with the mortgagee in obtaining that mortgage decree. Allegations of fraud have got to be particularized in the plaint. We do not find any such allegation here. What the precise nature of the fraud is has not been stated, nor what part was taken by either Mokhadamoyee or the mortgagee in respect of that transaction. If they want to make a case of fraud which they have not made, it may be open to them to pursue their remedies hereafter. But so far as the present suit is concerned, we do not think that any fraud has been alleged and we cannot, therefore, deal with the matter in the manner it has been done by the Appellate Court.

It has been strenuously argued before us that the Letters of Administration were obtained by Mokhadamoyee without making any allegation that anything remained to be administered in the estate, that the order was improperly made and upon insufficient materials and the sanction to borrow was also not properly granted. The Letters of Administration, however, have not been withdrawn and the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to declare the order as null and void. The proper Court to set aside the Letters of Administration is the Probate Court. We think also that it was exceedingly improper on the part of the plaintiffs not to mention anything about the Letters of Administration in their plaint. They should not have suppressed that fact. We think it was deliberately done, inasmuch as they felt it was a serious difficulty in their way.

In the result we are of opinion that the findings upon which the learned Judge reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge are not satisfactory and we think that he has not arrived at a wrong decision in the matter, which we now reverse. The appeal is allowed and the plaintiffs' suit is dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

UMRAOBI v. HIMMATBI.

Messrs. S. K. Barlingay and K. L. Daftari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for decision in this second appeal by the plaintiff Musammatt Umraobi is whether the learned District Judge was correct in declining to follow the decision of Batten, A. J. C., in Gopala v. Ania (1) on the ground that the facts of that case were distinguishable from those of the present one. It is admitted that the present plaintiff-appellant brought the previous suit (cf. 2. D 2) in 1915, in which she claimed the property in suit as the residuary of Subhanali, whereas in the present suit she now claims as the heir of Vilayatoli. The former man died in 1905 and the latter in 1907. It is perfectly clear that in the pleadings in the previous suit the contention of the then defendant was brought to the notice of the plaintiff, viz., the possibility of her being able to claim as Vilayatoli's heir, but she declined to base her title in that suit on this ground. The learned Counsel for the appellant has shown no good cause to-day as to why she could not have claimed in the alternative either as heir of Subhanali or as heir of Vilayatoli. All he has been able to urge is that the dates of the causes of action and the evidence which would have been necessary in either case would have been different. I am, however, unable to accept this position. It seems to me perfectly clear that the title under which the plaintiff was litigating was one and the same. She claimed to be entitled to the property by inheritance and it was perfectly open to her to have urged that if she could not have inherited from Subhanali, she might have inherited from Vilayatoli. Both positions were open to her at the time. As a matter of fact Vilayatoli derived his title also from Subhanali, so that the two questions could have been most conveniently and properly tried together.

The question, therefore, is whether the lower Court was bound in the circumstances of this case to follow the ruling of Batten, A. J. C., already quoted. It seems to me quite unnecessary in the present case to express any opinion as to whether I should or should not with all deference be able to accept that decision of the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, for it seems to me that that case and the present case are clearly distinguishable. The Pleader for the appellant has urged that should I see cause to differ, the matter at issue might be referred to a Bench: but in the circumstances of the present case I do not think this course is necessary. In the said case Batten, A. J. C., made a distinction between it and the cases reported as Girdhar Manordas v. Dayabhai Kalabhai (2) and Guddappa v. Tirkappa (3), on the ground that the plaintiff was suing, first, as a lessor, and secondly, as an owner against a trespasser, while in the first of the cases quoted the plaintiff in both cases sued the defendant as his tenant, and in the second case the plaintiff brought two suits in both of which he sued for title. This latter position is precisely what we have in the present case, and it seems to me that the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner would not have found it necessary to follow his decision in Gopala v. Ania (1) on the admitted facts of the present case. Even in the decision in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vythinatha Ayyar (4) the learned Justices remarked as follows:—

"This is only an authority for the position that if one is dispossessed of land and he brings a suit to recover possession on the strength of his title, he must establish his title in that very suit by urging and proving all that would go to establish his title and cannot reserve one or more of such grounds for a future suit; and this is what is laid down in Explanation 2 of section 13."

At a later part of that judgment it was also remarked:—

"If a plaintiff sues for certain property on a false claim or cause of action, when in reality he has, in fact and law, a true claim and cause of action for the same property, of which he was aware, he must be taken in law to have abandoned or relinquished his true claim and cause of action."

Now every word of the last quoted passage would seem to apply proprio vigore to the facts we have to deal with in the present case. In the previous suit the plaintiff deliberately chose, in spite of the challenge of the then defendant, to base her action on title as derived from Subhanali, while it was equally open to her at the moment to have either in the alternative or as a supplementary ground to have based her claim on inheritance from Vilayat-ali. She deliberately refused to take this course, although she was challenged to do so by the defendant. I would also refer in this connection to the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan (5), which seem to me peculiarly apposite in the present case. Supposing the defendant in the previous suit in 1915 had not taken the defence he did with reference to Vilayat-ali, can it be for one moment supposed that it would subsequently be open to him in the event of the plaintiff's success to have filed a suit for a declaration in favour of the title which he alleged had passed to him? This supposition seems to me a quite impossible one. As was remarked in the case of Guddapa v. Tirkappa (3), it seems to me clear that the present plaintiff could also in the previous suit have urged his heirship from Vilayat-ali as a ground of title. It existed at the date of the former suit, and in the present case it has not been suggested that the plaintiff was ignorant of it, nor has any tenable ground of excuse for that plea not having been put forward been suggested in this Court. The decision of Scott, C. J., and Batchelor, J., in Hargovan Ramji v. Mulji Harjivan (6) goes considerably further than it is necessary to do for the purposes of the present case; while the decision of the majority of the Judges in Masilamania Pillai v. Thiruvengadam Pillai (7) is clearly in favour of the contentions urged on behalf of the present respondents. That decision, I may remark, came into existence several years after the decision of Batten, A. J. C., in Gopala v. Ania (1) and had it not been that I think the present case is distinguishable both for the reasons given above and for those specified by the learned District Judge from the decision in Gopala v. Ania (1), it might have seemed advisable to me to have referred the point for the opinion of a Bench. As it is, however, I am forced to the conclusion that the finding of the District Judge that the present appellant's suit was barred by section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code was correct. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed. The appellant must bear the respondents' costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Village temples—Control and management vested in villagers—Decision of majority, whether binds minority—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata, determination of, by reference to pleadings, issues and judgment—Question of law, when res judicata.

The relationship of the inhabitants of a village in respect of a temple and its properties owned and managed by them in common partakes more of the character of a corporation than that which exists among the members of a club or trustees, public or private, and the law regulating the latter does not apply to them. [p. 205, col. 1.]

In matters relating to the management of village temples the decision of the majority in meetings duly convened binds the minority. [p. 205, col. 2.]

To constitute a matter res judicata the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must be the matter which was directly and substantially in issue, either actually or constructively, in the former suit. Whether a matter has been dealt with and adjudicated on is to be determined by a reference to the plaint, the written statement, the issues and the judgment. An issue of law may be res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit. The operation of a decree as res judicata, so far at any rate as the subject-matter of a direct adjudication contained in the decree is concerned, can in no way be affected, in the absence of fraud or collusion, by the fact that the suit was the result of a mistake of law or that the decree proceeded on such mistake. As between the parties thereto it must be held to be binding and to operate as res judicata. [p. 206, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in Appeal Suit No. 500 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Alatur, in Original Suit No. 54 of 1916.

FACTS.—Suit for an injunction to restrain the defendants from establishing an idol in the common village of the plaintiffs and defendants. The defendants formed the majority of the villagers. A suit for injunction in respect of the same dispute by these plaintiffs against these defendants was disposed of in second appeal by the High Court in 1895, when it was held that the defendants having acted wrongly inasmuch as they did not consult these plaintiffs, the injunction was properly granted. But the right to establish the particular Lingam then in dispute (called a Bana Lingam) was not adjudicated on, as it was outside the powers of a Civil Court. According to the decree, the defendants gave notice to the plaintiffs convening a meeting. But the evidence on record did not show either that a meeting was held or that the plaintiffs were allowed an opportunity of expressing their views. The Lingam in the present suit was a different one from the previous suit. Both the lower Courts granted the injunction. The defendants appealed.

Messrs. O. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar and S. V. Parameswara Aiyar, for the Appellants.—A village community is like a corporation and the rule as to corporate bodies applies, vis., the will of the majority will prevail. Yegnarama Dikshitar v. Gopala Pattar (1), following Hasan Raza Sahib v. Hasan Ali Sahib (2).

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., asked whether there was anything in the decision of 1895 which could operate as res judicata.]

There is no res judicata. For that suit was restricted to the attempt to consecrate a particular Lingam. The present Lingam is different. The decision was not an adjudication in rem.

The Court could not have adjudicated on what was purely a religious or caste question. See Lali Shamji v. Walji Wardhaman (3), Kaveri Ammall v. Sastri Ramier (4), Krishnasami Chetti v. Varasami Chetti (5). These cases clearly lay down that a bona fide decision arrived at by the majority of the community in respect of purely religious or caste questions will bind the minority.

Mr. P. R. Ganapathy Aiyar for the Hon'ble Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Aiyar and Mr. O. S. Ananthanarayana Aiyar, for the Respondents.—The villagers form the trustees of a private trust. Hindu idols are property with which the Court can deal as with other property. In dealing with such property the majority of the trustees cannot act by themselves, in the absence of express provision therefor. It may be that in public trusts the majority may bind the minority. In Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co. (6) the act of two of the trustees alone in foreclosing a mortgage was held not to bind the other trustees and the trust. See also Astbury v. Astbury (7) (acknowledgment by some of the trustees alone held insufficient).

Corporations stand on a different footing, as they act through the members. Trustees are jointly and severally liable. See Ebsworth & Tidy's Contract, In re (8), Ramanathan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (9), Eyunni Raghavacharyulu v. Epuri Govindasari (10). See also Tempest v. Camoys (11), where it was held that a power cannot be exercised by a majority so as to bind a dissenting minority. The Courts have always been reluctant to say as a general proposition of law that the majority may override the minority. That is regarded as an exception to the general rule. See also Yegnarama Dikshitar v. Gopala Pattar (12).

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar, in reply.—Yegnarama Dikshitar v. Gopala Pattar (1) lays down that where private ownership is set up on behalf of a fluctuating body like the present, it has to be strictly proved. See also Suppan Asari v. Vannia Konar (13), which clearly lays down that a caste as a body may hold property in a corporate capacity, even though the right inter se among the members is not by contract but a matter of status.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs and the defendants are members of Kuzhalmannam, a Brahmin village in the Palghat Taluk. The suit was brought for a perpetual injunction restraining defendants Nos. 1 to 45 from consecrating a Lingam in the Siva temple in the village which belongs in common to plaintiffs and the defendants without the consent of the community as a whole. It appears that for many years past the village has been divided into two factions, known as the eastern and western factions. Plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 45 to 57 belong to the western faction. Defendants Nos. 1 to 44 belong to the eastern faction and are in a numerical majority. It seems that the Shiva Lingam was stolen in 1888 and the members of the 1st defendant's faction wanted to have it replaced by another. The proposal was opposed by the plaintiffs' faction and litigation ensued, and the plaintiffs' faction succeeded in obtaining an injunction restraining the defendants from consecrating the particular Lingam in dispute. Plaintiffs' case, as put forward in the plaint, shortly was that in January 1916 some members of 1st defendant's party sent a notice stating that a meeting of the members of the community should be convened to decide the question of consecrating a new Lingam, that a meeting was held but had to be postponed as the leading members of the 1st defendant's faction stayed away and no definite decision was arrived at, that the Lingam which was proposed to be consecrated was not fit to be consecrated, and that they were entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants' party from performing the Linga Prathista without consulting the plaintiffs' party. The answer of the contesting defendants was that the plaintiffs purposely abstained from attending the meeting on January 23th, 1916, at which it was resolved that the Kalasam should be performed. The principal issues in the suit were, whether there was a valid consultation in regard to the performance of the Linga Prathista among the villagers as alleged by defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 and whether the defendants were entitled to consecrate the Lingam without the express consent of the plaintiffs' faction in writing, according to the custom of the village, of the parties. The District Munsif found that the defendants had not proved that there was any consultation among the villagers, and that plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction asked for. On appeal the District Judge in a brief and unsatisfactory judgment, without going into the facts or recording findings on the questions at issue between the parties, viz., whether there had been any consultation among the villagers in regard to the consecration of the Lingam, and whether the defendants were entitled to fix the Lingam without the consent of the plaintiffs, disposed of the case on the broad ground "that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendants from doing anything in the temple to which they objected, unless the defendants could prove that they had constitutional authority for their action." The District Judge refused to accept the defendants' contention that the temple should be governed by the will of the majority of the house-holders, and observed that defendants' only remedy was to apply for a scheme of management. Before dealing with the questions argued before us in the appeal we may mention that the defendants did not object that the plaintiffs were not entitled to bring the suit, and we proceed on the assumption that the suit is maintainable. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar for the appellants contended that, as the plaint temple is admittedly a village temple belonging to the Brahmin village Kuzhalmannam, the lower Court ought to have held that the majority of the house-holders have the right to resolve upon any act of management relating to the temple and to enforce the same, that the consecration of a new Lingam in the temple is a proper and necessary act, and that the plaintiffs' contention that without the consent of the minority there can be no valid acts of management is unsustainable. Mr. Ananthakrishna Aiyar strongly relied upon the decision in Yegnarama Dikshitar v. Gopala Pattar (12), which was affirmed by the Full Bench in Yegnarama Dikshitar v. Gopala Pattar (12). In that case the facts were that the inhabitants of a certain village owned a temple in common and the temple owned moveable and immovable properties. Disputes as to the management of the temple properties were referred to arbitrators, who passed an award on which a decree was passed entrusting the management of the temple and its properties to the persons selected by the residents of particular streets. The plaintiffs in the suit, who were some of the villagers interested in the communal properties, sued to have it declared that a resolution passed by a majority of the villagers at a certain meeting in regard to the future management of the village Devasom was not valid and binding. It was held that the relationship of the inhabitants of a village in respect of a temple and its properties owned and managed by them in common partakes more of the character of a corporation than that which exists among the members of a club or of trustees, public or private, and the law regulating the latter does not apply to them. It was further held that when a corporation consists of an indefinite number, the major portion of the members present at a meeting is competent to bind the minority but where the body is definite, there must be a major part of the whole number, and that the rule applies to India which recognises fluctuating communities as legal persons owning property, as for instance, the caste and the village, and in matters relating to the management of caste property and the administration of its affairs the majority of the caste has authority to control the minority.

We think that the principle of this decision applies to the present case, although it is true that the act complained of, i.e., the proposed consecration of a Lingam in the temple, is of a religious nature and not strictly speaking a matter relating to the administration of the temple. The right to establish a Lingam in the temple is an incident of the management of the temple by its owners. The plaintiffs state that the temple belongs in common to both the factions of Kuzhalmanam village. We think that the proper view to take is that the relationship of the Brahmin house-holders, an indefinite number of persons, in respect of the temple and its property is analogous to the case of a corporation which owns properties and that a majority of the members are competent to bind the minority and that the principle which governs the case is that laid down in Cooper v. Gordon (14). In Cooper v. Gordon (14) it was laid down that so far as the administration of the affairs of a church was concerned, the appointment of a minister by the majority bound the minority. As observed by Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim in Yegnarama Dikshitar v. Gopala Pattar (1) with reference to village and caste owning property, "If such an indefinite and fluctuating body had not the inherent powers to provide for the management of their property by means of resolutions which had the approval of the majority and passed at a meeting properly and regularly convened, the business of such communities could not be conducted at all." In this connection we may refer to the pertinent observations of Mr. Justice Farran in Lalji Shamji v. Walji Wardhman (3): "It is clear upon the authorities that in matters relating to management of caste property and the administration of its affairs, the majority of the caste has authority to control the minority." The learned Judge further observes that, in the absence of a written or proved customary constitution, the affairs of a caste could not be administered if the decision of a majority duly arrived at and notified were not binding on the minority. We are altogether unable to agree with the view taken by the District Judge that "it would be unsafe to allow any self-constituted body (whatever that may mean) to do acts which other worshippers profess to find offensive to their scruples and the proper course would be for the defendants to apply for a scheme of management."

Mr. Ganapathi Aiyar for the respondents endeavoured to support the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that this is a case of a private trust, and contended that the act of the majority of trustees cannot bind a dissenting minority nor the trust estate, and that in order to bind the trust estate there must be the act of all the trustees. The learned Vakil cited the following cases: Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Co. (6) and Astbury v. Astbury (7). These decisions do not appear to have any bearing on the questions raised by the appeal. No such case was raised on the pleadings or issues. It was never suggested that this was a case of a private trust, and that the plaintiffs and the defendants are trustees. A question of this kind not raised on the pleadings cannot be gone into in second appeal.

Next it is contended on behalf of the respondents that the suit is barred as res judicata by reason of the judgment and decree in Second Appeal No. 1811 of 1897. A suit, Original Suit No. 148 of 1895, was brought in Temmalprom Munsif's Court by certain members of the Kuzhalmannam village community for a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants, who were members of the same community, from establishing a Bana Lingam in the plaint temple. It was alleged in the plaint that the Bana Lingam was Uggra (horrible) and that if established in the temple, it would "bring misery and wretchedness to the villagers." The relief asked for was a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from establishing the said Lingam. The issues framed were: (2) "Is the Bana Lingam the defendants have and referred to in the plaint a good one? Will the establishment of the said Lingam be detrimental to the interests and welfare of plaintiffs and other members of Kuzhalmannam Brahmin village?" (3) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the reliefs claimed? The District Munsif found on the second issue that the Bana Lingam which the defendants desired to establish had bad properties and should be rejected as unfit to be established in the temple, and that establishing it in the Siva temple would be against the interests of the villagers, and passed a decree restraining the defendants from establishing the Bana Lingam in the Kuzhalmannam temple. On appeal the Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction, on the ground that they had not shown that in acting as they did they had obtained the consent of plaintiffs' faction, and they were bound not to consecrate the disputed Lingam unless and until the same was sanctioned by the entire community. The decree of the District Munsif was, however, varied by adding the words "unless and until they obtain the sanction of the village community as a whole after giving every member a reasonable opportunity of expressing his own opinion and influencing the opinion of the rest in the matter." In Second Appeal No. 1811 of 1897 the learned Judges (Davies and Boddam, JJ.) observed that the District Munsif had exceeded his jurisdiction in raising and deciding the 2nd issue, and that if the introduction of an idol was objected to by members of the community to which the temple belonged, the Court would interfere to prevent that being done by granting an injunction. In the result the decree of the Subordinate Judge was modified by striking out that part of the decree which qualified the injunction granted, otherwise the decree was confirmed. To constitute a matter res judicata the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must be the matter which was directly and substantially in issue, either actually or constructively, in the former suit. Whether a matter has been dealt with and adjudicated on is to be determined by a reference to the plaint, the written statement, the issues and the judgment. An issue of law may be res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the former suit. The operation of a decree as res judicata, so far at any rate as the subject-matter of a direct adjudication contained in the decree is concerned, can in no way be affected, in the absence of a fraud or collusion, by the fact that the suit was the result of a mistake of law or that the decree proceeded on such mistake. As between the parties thereto it must be held to be binding and to operate as res judicata, Kaveri Ammall v. Sastri Ramier (4). On a reference to the pleadings and judgments in the suits it is clear, we think, that the subject-matter of the former suit was entirely different from the subject-matter of the present one, and that the same questions were not directly and substantially in issue in the two suits. The grievance of the plaintiffs in Original Suit No. 198 of 1895 was that the Bana Lingam which the defendants wanted to establish in the temple was "Uggra" and that if established would bring disaster on the villagers. The District Munsif addressed himself to this particular question, as his finding on the 2nd issue shows and his decree refers to "the Bana Lingam." The Sub-Judge also held that the defendants were not entitled to establish the disputed Lingam until it had been sanctioned by the entire community. The effect of the judgment of the High Court was to restore the decree of the District Munsif. The substantial question in issue in the present suit is the right of the defendants to perform Linga Prathista without consulting and obtaining the assent of the plaintiffs' faction. We must, therefore, hold that the judgment and decree in the former suit do not operate as res judicata.

In the result we reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and allow the appeal. We observe that paragraph 11 of the plaint states that the Lingam which was proposed to be consecrated was not fit to be consecrated and if established, would bring misfortune on the villagers. This is a question of fact which has not been decided by the lower Court but is covered by the 7th additional issue. The case is remanded to the lower Appellate Court for disposal in the light of the above observations on the evidence on record. Costs will abide the result.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 158 OF 1918.

May, 30, 1919.

Present :—Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Adami.

GANESH LAL—RECEIVER—APPELLANT
*versus*KUMAR SATYA NARAYAN SINGH—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XL, rr. 3, 4, O. XLI, r. 1 (s)—Order holding Receiver liable for sum of money—Appeal, whether lies—Receiver appointed by subordinate Court—High Court, power of, to examine account.

An order holding the Receiver of an estate liable to the estate for a certain sum of money is not appealable, unless it is accompanied by an order under rule 4 of Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 208, col. 1.]

A Receiver appointed by a Court subordinate to the High Court is not an officer of the High Court, and that Court has no jurisdiction to examine his accounts in order to ascertain his liabilities. [p. 209, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 29th May 1918.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hasan Imam (with him Messrs. S. P. Sen, Surendro Mohan Das and S. O. Roy), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—A preliminary objection is taken by the respondent Kumar Satya Narain Singh, who is now the owner of the estate, that no appeal lies.

In my opinion this objection is well founded. Under Order XLIII, rule 1, of the Civil Procedure Code a right of appeal is given against an order under rule 1 of Order XL. Now it is admitted that the Subordinate Judge has made no order under that rule in the present case.

It has been held that there is no right of appeal against the orders of the Court giving directions in passing a Receiver's account [Keshobati v. McGregor (1)]. In Mohini Mohan Patra v. Baroda Kanta Sarkar (2) their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court, following Edwards, In re (3), held that it is competent to a Court to re-open a Receiver's accounts even after he has been discharged; but that an order giving directions as to the examination of the accounts was not appealable. On the other hand in Anand Das v. Ram Perakash Das (4) an order conferring power on the Receiver to pay part of the surplus income to a party was held appealable as coming within rule 1 of Order XL.

Whether or not an order declaring the Receiver liable in respect of a sum of money would have come under the purview of section 503 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and would, therefore, have been appealable under section 588 of that Code, need not now be considered. It is sufficient to say that under the present Code of Civil Procedure a decision of this nature would not seem to be appealable unless it is accompanied by an order under rule 4 of Order XL. That rule gives a Court power to take certain steps against the Receiver for the realisation of the money and it seems that in the present case, until the Subordinate Judge acts under this rule, there is no right of appeal by the Receiver. The Receiver undoubtedly had a lien upon the properties in his charge in respect of salary, allowances and other dues. In the present case he has given up possession and Mr. Rajendra Prasad on his behalf thinks that the only remedy left open to him, if we hold that there is no right of appeal, is by way of separate suit against the estate. We are not called upon to express any opinion as to the mode in which the Receiver should recover such moneys as he thinks may be due to him from the estate. All that we can say is that the authority upon which the Division Bench of this Court seem to have relied in their order of the 9th May 1918, namely, the case of the Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. Ltd. v. Fakuruddin Mahomed Ohowdhury (5), does not apply to the facts of this case. In that case the Receiver having paid money to a party contrary to the directions given under rule 1 of Order XL, an appeal was held to lie.

It is next contended that the order of the Division Bench, even though erroneous, is binding upon the respondent before us. From the judgment of their Lordships, however, it does not appear that the respondent at any stage made an admission that the appellants had a remedy by appeal.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad next relies upon the rule in Gandy v. Gandy (6). In that case it was held that a party who had maintained that a deed was to be construed in a certain manner could not afterwards be allowed to resile from that position and to maintain that the deed should be construed in a diametrically opposite manner. Following out the same line of argument Mr. Rajendra Prasad relies upon that class of cases in execution where a party, having admitted that a certain claim could not be investigated in execution proceedings, could not afterwards be heard to maintain the opposite view in a regular suit brought for the purpose of enforcing the claim. The gist of Mr. Rajendra Prasad's argument under this head is that a party cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate at the same time. That principle, however, does not apply to the facts of the present case. Here there was nothing done by the respondent which would let in the operation of that principle. The Court was of opinion that the Receiver would be well advised to apply for a discharge, and it merely threw out a suggestion that he might possibly have a remedy by way of appeal against the decision of the Subordinate Judge in the matter of the accounts. In my opinion there is no bar to the respondent now taking the objection that as the Statute gives no right of appeal, we cannot proceed to hear the appellant.

Mr. Rajendra Prasad finally contends that the Receiver in this case was appointed not by the Subordinate Judge but by the High Court and that, therefore, any finding arrived at by the Subordinate Judge as to the liability of the Receiver to the estate is open to revision by this Court in exercise of its inherent powers.

In Debendra Bala Dasi v. Ohandra Sekhar Prasad Singh (7) this Court had occasion to consider whether or not the Receiver appointed by the Court on appeal, against an order passed by a Subordinate Judge refusing to appoint a Receiver at all, was to be deemed to be the servant of the Court for the purposes of Order XL of the Code of Civil Procedure. The point was raised but not decided; and if Babu Murli Lal had still been a Receiver, it might possibly have been argued that he was subject to the orders of this Court and that this Court was empowered to hear his objections in the matter of the accounts; but so far as Ganesh Lal is concerned, he clearly was appointed not by the High Court but by the Subordinate Judge. In the order of the Division Bench of this Court of the 9th May 1918 Babu Ganesh Lal was throughout treated as an officer serving not under this Court but under the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and we think that that is his true position in the matter. We cannot consider him to be an officer appointed by us and subject to our jurisdiction. Therefore we are unable to entertain the contention that the account taken by the Subordinate Judge with regard to his liabilities should be examined by us.

In these circumstances it is not necessary for us to express any opinion as to what is the effect of the Subordinate Judge's decision. The order that we shall make is that the appeal be dismissed. The Receiver, in view of the special circumstances of this case, will pay only half the costs.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Nos. 188 AND 260 OF 1918.

P. P. A. P. SUBBIA NADAN—RESPONDENT
IN A. A. O. No. 315 OF 1918.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (11), 47—'Representative' in s. 47, meaning of—Purchaser at sale in execution of money decree, purchaser from decree-holder, purchaser under money decree and stranger purchaser at sale in execution of mortgage, whether 'representatives' of either party to suit.

Per Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J.—A person who has bought the property of the defendant in a suit since the institution of that suit, whether at a Court auction held in execution of a money decree passed in another suit or by private purchase, is entitled and bound to have any question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree decided under section 47 by the Court executing the decree, when his interest is affected either by the decree itself or by the sale held in execution of that decree, and the same rule applies to a purchaser of the property under such sale, whether he is the decree-holder himself or a stranger. Whether the purchaser in the one case or the auction-purchaser in the other is to be regarded as the representative of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder depends upon the nature of the question raised and who the contesting party is [p. 217, col. 2; p. 218, col. 1.]

Section 47, Civil Procedure Code, should be interpreted in as liberal a spirit as the language would reasonably admit of. [p. 217, col. 1.]

The word 'representative' in the section is not confined to legal representatives. [p. 217, col. 1.]

Per Oldfield, J.—The inclusion of auction-purchasers as parties to proceedings relating to an auction-sale does not make section 47, Civil Procedure Code, inapplicable to them. [p. 218, col. 2.]

Ordinarily, the purchaser at a sale held in execution of a money decree is the representative of the judgment-debtor. Where he is also the decree-holder and his position comes in question in distinct proceedings, his character as decree-holder in one execution can have no effect on his position in another and there is nothing in authority or on principle to debar his being treated like any other stranger to the latter, no reason appearing for according him any other rights than a stranger purchaser from the judgment-debtor, whether by execution or private sale, would acquire. [p. 220, col. 1.]

The purchaser from a decree-holder purchaser under a money decree is a representative of the judgment-debtor for the purposes of enquiry into a question relating to the execution of a distinct decree affecting the same property. [p. 220, col. 1.]

The term 'representative' in section 47, Civil Procedure Code, is not to be identified with 'legal representative' in section 2 (11) of the Code and a purchaser at a Court auction represents some one, that is, either the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder. [p. 220, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri Aiyar, J.—Where the equity of redemption is purchased under a money decree, in matters relating to the execution of a mortgage decree, the auction-purchaser under the money decree will be the representative of the judgment-debtor in the mortgage decree. [p. 220, col. 2.]

Whether an auction-purchaser, be he the decree-holder himself or a stranger or purchaser from the decree-holder purchaser, is a party to the proceedings in respect of the sale depends on whether the issues arising for decision relate (a) to execution, (b) to deciding rival rights of the decree-holder and of the judgment-debtor in the subject-matter. If these conditions are satisfied, the fact that others are interested in the result of the decision should not affect the jurisdiction and competency of the executing Court to deal with the matter. [p. 221, ol. 2.]

Appeals against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, is Execution Appeal No. 374 of 1918, in Execution Appeal No. 322 of 1918, in Execution Petition No. 269 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 64 of 1916, (on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura), in Execution Appeal No. 36 of 1918, in Execution Petition No. 1 of 1918, in Original Suit No. 64 of 1916, (on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura) and in Miscellaneous Petition No. 165 of 1918, in Execution Appeal No. 157 of 1918, in Execution Petition No. 269 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 64 of 1916 on the file of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, respectively.

FACTS.—The appellant was the vendee from a money decree-holder purchaser. The respondents were the money decree holder purchaser and a stranger purchaser under a mortgage decree against the same judgment-debtor. The first was the prior sale. The question was whether the appellant was a party within the meaning of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, so as to give him the right to present this appeal from the execution proceedings under the mortgage-decree.

These appeals coming on for hearing on the 21st February 1919, upon perusing the petitions of appeals, the orders of the lower Court and the records in the cases, and upon hearing the arguments of Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastriar for Mr. V. Purushothama Aiyar, for the Appellant in all, and of Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Respondent in Appeals Against Orders Nos. 188 and 260 of 1918, and of Mr. A. Chidambaram, for the Respondent in Appeal Against Order No. 315 of 1918, and the appeals having stood over for consideration till the 11th of March 1919, the Court made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

OLDFIELD, J.—The same preliminary objection has been taken to the hearing of each of these three appeals, that they are not authorized by section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The appellant in each is the same individual. But the circumstances differ, except in so far as the same two litigations are in question in each as the origins of the respective titles of the parties. The appellant relies in Appeals Against Orders Nos. 188 and 315 on the sale of part of the suit property to him in execution of a money decree and in Appeal Against Order No. 260 on the sale of part of it to his vendor, the money decree holder, and contends that for all purposes, including these appeals, he became the representative of the judgment-debtor. These sales were, however, subject to a mortgage. On it without notice to the money decree-holder and (it is alleged) without his knowledge, between the attachment and sale under the money decree a suit was filed and a preliminary decree was obtained. After the delivery under the money decree, a final decree was passed on the mortgage and a sale took place. The purchasers of the portions of the property concerned in Appeals Against Orders Nos. 188 and 315 were respectively the mortgage decree-holder and a stranger. They have obtained orders for removal of appellant's obstruction to their possession. Appeal Against Order No. 260 relates to a sum of money in Court, which represents the crop on part of the property and has been awarded by the lower Court to the mortgage decree-holder purchaser. Shortly the array of the parties in their legal character is as follows:—

A. A. O. No.	Money Decree	Mortgage Decree.
188	Purchaser	v. Decree-holder purchaser.
315	Purchaser	v. Stranger purchaser.
260	Decree-holder	v. Decree-holder purchaser's vendee purchaser.

The first point requiring notice is that the parties' rights arose in two distinct litigations and the decision in Mandavilli Rama Row v. Sivanarayana (1) gives some support to the view that this fact alone is sufficient to negative appellant's representative character for the present purpose. But that decision is expressed very shortly and it is possible that the learned Judges concerned in fact relied on the broader considerations to be referred to later. In Muhammad Bava Sahib v. Ramachandra Thevar (A. S. No. 249 of 1916) it was observed that the purchaser must be a representative for all purposes or none. If there is no objection on other grounds to treating the present appellant as a representative of the judgment-debtor, the fact that he obtained the latter's interest through a Court sale in another execution and not through a private transfer does not appear to affect his rights or to deprive him of the character of a person, on whom an interest has devolved within the meaning of Order XXII, rule 10. It is only possible that one distinction may be necessary, and that only in Appeal Against Order No. 260. If the controversy had arisen in the execution of the money decree, it would have been necessary to regard appellant as the representative of the decree-holder, from whom he purchased, in accordance with the decision in Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2) and the judgment of Wallis, J., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3). But in those cases only one litigation was in question as an origin of title and the identification of the transferee with the decree-holder was clearly necessary, if the controversy between the latter and the judgment-debtor or his representative was to be settled speedily in execution and a separate suit was to be avoided. In the present case the contrary will be the result, since, as was decided in Gour Mohun Gouli v. Dinonath Karmokar (4) and as the judgment of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in the case last cited implies, section 47 does not cover disputes between a party and his representative or between the representatives of the same party. Where, as here, two litigations are in question, the purchase by a decree-holder in one of them and his temporary ownership of the property is material only in it and can have no significance with reference to the right of his transferee of the property to intervene in execution in the other. There would accordingly seem to be no substantial reason against holding that the purchaser in that one from a decree-holder purchaser is for the purpose of execution proceedings in the other the representative no longer of that decree-holder, but of the common judgment-debtor, to whom his interest is ultimately to be traced. It may, therefore, be possible and advisable to restrict the effect of Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2) in this direction.

The position of the parties in the present cases is, however, further complicated by the dicta of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) already referred to, that "where the decree is a mortgage decree, the purchaser in execution will be the representative of the judgment-debtor and that, where property is attached and sold under a money decree, a stranger purchasing the property..... is not the representative even of the judgment-debtor, still less can he be the representative of the decree-holder." These dicta were apparently accepted in Thangavelu Mudaliar v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (5) and were followed, although not specifically mentioned, in Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalinga Mudali (6). To apply them to the present cases the appellant in Appeals Against Orders Nos. 188 and 315 will not be the representative of either party to the money decree or of the judgment-debtor either under it or the mortgage decree; and the appellant in Appeal Against Order No. 260 will not be the representative of the judgment-debtor, whose property he has acquired, but with reference to Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2), only of the money decree, holder who has no connection with the mortgage proceedings. And accordingly section 47 will not be applicable to appellant's intervention in those proceedings in any of the cases. It has no doubt been argued before us that, if the purchaser under a money decree does not represent the judgment-debtor, he must represent the decree-holder. But the an-answer to this, so far as it is based on authority, is given in Krishna Satapathi v. Sarasvatula Sambasiva Row (7) and, as it assumes what Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., did not hold, that the purchaser must have some representative character, and as it corresponds with no actual incident of the purchase, it is useless to pursue it further as a reconciliation between the alternative theories. To turn to the other party to these disputes, the person claiming under the mortgage decree sale, he will, as a stranger, be a representative in Appeal Against Order No. 315, but of the debtor according to the authority under consideration, whilst in Appeal Against Order Nos. 188 and 260, as he is himself the decree holder, no question of representation need be considered.

I have referred to the application to the cases before us of the views of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in detail in order to illustrate their effect in instance, typical of a majority of the combinations which can occur. The first result that the purchaser at a money decree sale cannot be regarded as a representative, entails that disputes, to which he is a party, and they will be a large proportion of those requiring settlement, cannot be dealt with except by separate suit, whether they arise in connection with the execution of that decree or of some other. This is inconsistent with the expressed disposition of the Judicial Committee and other Courts to extend the scope of section 47. It, moreover, was not justified by the learned Judge by reference to any principle; and, where, as he admitted, the purchaser obtains the right of the judgment debtor in the property, it is with all respect impossible to understand how the legal incidents, including the remedies, with their appropriate procedure, attached to that right, do not pass with it. And there is no necessity to adhere to this view in order to be consistent with other decisions. For in Paramananda Das v. Mahabeer Doss (8), Kuppana Kavundan v. Kumara Kavundan (9) and the very recent case of Muhammad Bava Sahib v. Ramachandra Thevar, A. S. No. 245 of 1916, the conclusion was in favour of representation of the judgment debtor.

The case of a stranger purchaser under a mortgage decree is similarly dealt with without discussion by Krishnaswami Aiyar, J. His statement that he is the representative of the judgment-debtor is opposed to the opinion of Moore, J., in Kasinatha Ayyar v. Uthumansa Rowthan (10). But that decision was doubted in Sivarama Sastri v. Somasundara Mudali (11) and there appears to be nothing further in the authorised reports in this Presidency. Here again there is some uncertainty, although less than in the case of a purchaser under a money decree. It is, moreover, desirable that, if an authoritative decision is to be given on this part of the law, the position of purchasers at both descriptions of sales should be settled on identical considerations, so far as they are applicable. That an authoritative decision, such as my learned brother and I cannot give, is rendered necessary by the judgment of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) and the cases, in which it has been followed, admits of no doubt. I, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the questions as arising in the case before us:—

1. Whether a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a money decree is a representative of a party and, if so, of which party for the purpose of enquiry into a question relating to the execution of (a) that money decree, (b) any other decree affecting the purchased property and against the same judgment-debtor.

2. Whether a purchaser from a decree-holder purchaser under a money decree is a representative of a party for either of these purposes and, if so, of which.

3. Whether a stranger purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree is the representative of a party and, if so, of which.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—I do not wish to express any decided opinion on the cases quoted before us. It is clear that they cannot be reconciled with each other. The recent judgment of the learned Chief Justice and Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in Appeal No. 249 of 1916 renders it necessary that the whole matter should be fully considered and that a definite rule of law should be laid down for the guidance of the Courts below. One proposition seems to be hardly disputed, namely, that the purchaser who is a decree-holder, is a party to the suit within the meaning of that expression in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is considerable divergence of opinion as to whether an auction-purchaser who is not a decree-holder, is a representative of any party to the suit. In this Presidency it seems to have been assumed that he would be the representative of the decree-holder. In Allahabad this view is not accepted. The recent judgment, to which I referred, throws doubt upon the earlier Madras cases. It may lead to no violation of any general principle if he is regarded as representative of one party or the other. But it is absolutely necessary that it should be determined authoritatively whose representative he is, if he is a representative at all. I, therefore, agree that the questions proposed by my learned brother should be referred for the decision of the Full Bench.

These appeals came on for hearing on the 1st and 2nd September 1919, in pursuance of the Order of Reference to the Full Bench.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellant.—Section 47 applies. See Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) and the cases in which it is followed.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari, for the Respondents.—Section 47 does not apply. The appellant is not the representative of any party to the proceedings on the mortgage-decree.

[ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—If the sale to the appellant was not in Court auction, but privately by the judgment-debtor, you would be a representative of the judgment-debtor.]

Quite so. But section 47, Civil Procedure Code, does not contemplate proceedings under two decrees. The appellant, being a vendee from the decree-holder purchaser under the money decree, is his representative so far as that decree is concerned. He is not the representative of the judgment-debtor. See Krishna Satapasti v. Sarasvatula Sambasiva Row (7), Meda Ohinnasubamma v. Bapireddi Gari Ohinnayya (12). See also Manickka Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (13), Arthanari Ohettiar v. Nagoji Rao (14).

[SESHGIRI AIYAR, J.—The property is sold subject to the mortgage.]

The liability of the property does not make me a representative of the judgment-debtor. See Ganapathy Mudaliar v. Krishnamachariar (15), Narsinghbat v. Bandu Krishna (16). Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) does not provide for the case of two decrees against the same judgment-debtor. There is no sort of privity between the appellant and any of the parties to the mortgage-decree. See Krishnabhupati Devu v. Vikrama Devu (17). Reference was also made to Mandavilli Rama Row v. Sivanarayana (18), Thangavelu Mudaliar v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (5), Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalinga Mudali (6), Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerjee (19), Ishan Ohunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (20), Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (21).

Appeal No. 24 of 1916 (unreported) takes a contrary view to Nadam Narayanauni Iyengar v. Veerbhadra Pillai (3).

There is no question of lis pendens, as the mortgage suit was instituted only after the attachment under the money decree.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, in reply.—The fact that the appellant is no party to the mortgage decree does not prevent the application of section 47, inasmuch as he has purchased subject to the claims under the mortgage. See Prosunn Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22). See also Matharasappa Ohettiar v. Muthu Ohettiar (23), Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2).

OPINION.

ABDUR RAHIM, OFFG. C. J.—This is a reference to the Full Bench made in certain appeals against orders which arose under the circumstances mentioned in the order of reference. Briefly speaking, the claims of the decree-holder-purchaser of the disputed property in execution of a money decree and of his vendee having been disallowed as against the purchasers under a mortgage decree, one of them being the decree-holder himself with respect to a part of the property, the purchaser of the other part being a stranger, the question arose whether the order of the lower Court comes within the purview of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure and is, therefore, appealable. The suit on the mortgage was instituted after the attachment in execution of the money decree and the sale under the money decree which was subject to the mortgage was made between the dates of the preliminary mortgage decree and the final decree. I shall proceed on the basis assumed in the order of reference that the question that has arisen relates to execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of section 47, and that all that we are asked is whether such a question arose between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives.

As I understand the facts, the question in the appeal arose in execution of the mortgage decree; and, so far as the decree-holder-purchaser is concerned, there can be no question of his position as he is a party to the suit.

But the decisions of this Court as to who are to be deemed, within the meaning of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to be the representatives of the parties to the suit in which the decree which is being executed was passed, are in a state of considerable conflict. On the question whether the purchaser can be regarded as the representative of the decree holder in cases arising between him and the judgment-debtor or his representative Moore, J., had no hesitation in Kasinatha Ayyar v. Uthumansu Rowthan (10) in holding that the auction-purchaser, even if he was not the decree-holder, was the representative of the judgment-creditor, basing his opinion on the Privy Council ruling in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22) and on the Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (20) and on that of a Divisional Bench of the same Court in Dwar Buksh Sirkar v. Fatik Jali (24). Bhashayam Aiyangar, J., the other learned Judge, did not express any dissent from that view, but pointed out that the order was nonetheless an order under section 244 (now section 47), because it was also passed under sections 318 and 334 of the Code of Civil Procedure (corresponding to rules 95, 97 and 98 of the Code of Civil Procedure). The ruling was followed by White, C. J., and Subramania Ayyar, J., in Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2), by White, C. J. and Sankaran Nair, J., in Arthanari Ohettiar v. Nagoji Rao (14) and by Benson and Wallis, JJ. in Manickha Olayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (13). But the opposite view is expressed by White, C. J., sitting with Miller, J., in Krishna Satapasti v. Sarasvatula Sambasiva Row (7) and by Wallis and Krishnaswami Aiyar, JJ., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) and has been accepted by Sadasiva Aiyar and Bakewell, JJ., in Meda Ohinna-subamma v. Bapireddi Gari Ohinnayya (12). In this Court, therefore, the conflict of opinion on the point is such that one could not say that there is a clear preponderance of authority in support of one view rather than the other.

As regards the other High Courts, it was held by Jenkins, C. J., in Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji (25) that an auction-purchaser could not be regarded as the representative of the decree-holder for the purposes of an application under section 3.0 (a) of the old Code, but Order XXI, rule 89, of the new Code now expressly provides that a person owing property which has been sold or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale may also apply to have the sale set aside on depositing the purchase money. As regards Calcutta and Allahabad no express ruling on the question has been cited before us and I have not found any.

On the question whether an auction-purchaser can be treated as the representative of the judgment-debtor, we find a similar conflict. In Paramananda Das v. Mahabeer Dossji (8) Subramania Aiyar and Boddam, JJ., and in Sivarama Sastri v. Somasundara Mudali (11) Subramania Ayyar and Sankaran Nair, JJ., answered the question in the affirmative. But in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3), already mentioned, to which Wallis, C. J., was a party, Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., held that he was not such a representative, and this view has been followed by Sadasiva Aiyar and Moore, JJ., in Thangavelu Mudaliar v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (5) and in Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalinga Mudali (6), at least in cases where the decree does not mention or affect the property purchased. In another case reported in Kuppuna Kavundan v. Kumara Kovundan (9), both Wallis and Krishnaswami Aiyar, JJ., held that the auction-purchaser would be the representative of the judgment-debtor, and in an unreported judgment in Appeal No. 249 of 1916, Wallis, C. J., sitting with Kumaraswami Sastri, J., expressly disapproved of the dictum of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) and of the rulings in Thangavelu Mudaliar v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (5) and Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalinga Mudali (6), following Paramananda Das v. Mahabeer Doss (8), Sivarama Sastri v. Somasundara Mudali (11), Narayanaswami Naik v. Seshappaiyer (26) and Kuppuna Kavundan v. Kunara Kavundan (9). Though on this aspect of the question also it cannot be said that the law is settled by a long current of decisions in this Court as the learned Chief Justice suggests in the unreported judgment, I agree with him so far that the view that an auction-purchaser of the judgment-debtor's interests in the property in dispute is his representative for the purposes of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure has a preponderance of authority in its favour. As regards the other High Courts, both Calcutta and Allahabad [see Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (20) and Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (21)] have finally decided in favour of the view that the word 'representative', when taken with reference to the judgment-debtor, does not mean only his legal representative, that is, his heir, executor or administrator but it means his representative-in-interest, and includes a purchaser of his interest, whether by a private sale or at Court auction, who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree. In Allahabad [Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (27)] and probably also in Calcutta, the purchaser would not be regarded as the representative of the judgment-debtor except in cases where the property purchased by him is involved in the decree in the course of execution of which the question has arisen. But except in Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalinga Madali (6) this distinction does not appear to have been drawn in the rulings of our Court. A recent Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Narsinghbat v. Bandu Krishna (16) has ruled contrary to the view of the law as laid down by the Calcutta and Allahabad Full Benches.

Now, the Code has not defined the word 'representative' though it has defined the phrase 'legal representative'. But that the two terms are not used in a synonymous sense is obvious, for while in section 47 the Legislature uses the word 'representative', it uses the phrase 'legal representative', as it were by contrast, in sections 50 and 52 and so on. Nor can there be any doubt that the word 'representative' was intended to have a wider meaning than 'legal representative.'

I think some light can be obtained on this question if we find out in what matters the purchaser of the interest of the judgment-debtor in property sold in execution can apply to the executing Court for redress or can be proceeded against in that Court. Under section 64 an alienation after attachment is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. Under section 74 where the purchaser has been obstructed in obtaining possession by the judgment-debtor or by any one on his behalf, the latter can be dealt with by the Court at the instance of the decree holder or purchaser. Then we find under Order X&I, rule 35, that under a decree for delivery of immoveable property possession may be given by the Court executing the decree by removing any person bound by the decree, which would apparently include a purchaser pendente lite. This seems to be made clear by the fact that under rule 54, which provides for attachment of immoveable property, persons are prohibited from taking any benefit under any transfer made after attachment. In the case of a person who claims a title to the property either independently of the defendant in the suit or if from the defendant he asserts a title anterior to the institution of the suit in which the decree under execution was passed, his claim is placed on a different basis by the Legislature. If such a person is in possession of the property, the Court executing the decree cannot dispossess him and his right to establish his title by a separate suit is expressly recognised. See Order XXI, rules 58, 63, 99, 100 and 101. By rule 89 an application to set aside a sale by depositing the purchase-money may be made by any person owning the property or holding an interest in the property under a title acquired before sale, and such an application would clearly be one between the judgment-debtor or a person who has acquired his interest on the one hand and the decree-holder and the purchaser under the decree on the other. It further says that the judgment-debtor's liability for costs will not be affected by such application. By rule 90 an application to set aside the sale on the ground of irregularity may be made by the decree-holder or any person entitled to rateable distribution or a person whose interests are affected by the sale, and to such an application the purchaser would clearly be a necessary party and questions arising under the application may have to be determined between him and the decree-holder or the judgment debtor, as the case may be. The purchaser may himself apply to have the sale set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest and only on questions raised under rules 89, 90 or 91 being decided in favour of the purchaser that the sale will be confirmed. The purchaser can apply for the delivery of the property purchased by him as against the judgment-debtor or against any person claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the attachment. If the holder of a decree for possession of immoveable property or the purchaser of any such property sold in execution of a decree is obstructed in obtaining possession, that is a matter to be investigated by the executing Court. If the resistance or obstruction is by the judgment-debtor or by a transferee from him after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed, in that case the question is to be decided finally in execution. On the other hand if the obstructor is a bona fide claimant under a title independent of the judgment debtor then, as already mentioned, he would have a right to sue in spite of the decision in execution.

I think these provisions of the Code show that the Legislature intended that all questions affecting a purchaser of the interest of the judgment-debtor in property which is either affected by the decree or is sold under a decree, are to be decided in execution between the parties interested if the purchase was after the institution of the suit, whether at a private sale or at a sale in execution of a money decree against the defendant. I may here also refer to section 146, which says that "Save as otherwise provided by this Code, or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him." Under this section the claim is not confined to an interest in property. It seems to me that the purchaser of property in execution of a decree may well be said to claim under the decree-holder for the purposes of proceedings under section 47 in which his rights are affected. It may also here be pointed out that the law, so far as the rulings of this Court and also of the Calcutta High Court go, is settled that not only the assignee of a decree-holder comes within the scope of section 47 but a person attaching the decree is the representative of the decree-holder within the meaning of this section—see Sah Man Mull v. Kanagasabapathi (28), Krishnan v. Venkatapathi Ohetty (29), Pearry Mohun Chowdhry v. Romesh Ohunder Nundy (30). I do not see how the case of a purchaser in execution of a decree can well be distinguished on principle. On the other hand, where the interest of the purchaser of property either in execution of the same decree or of another decree is affected by any question raised in execution by the holder of the decree under execution the purchaser is entitled to defend his interest as a person claiming under the judgment debtor. As has been pointed out time after time by the Privy Council as well as by the High Courts, section 47, corresponding to the old section 244, should be interpreted in as liberal a spirit as the language would reasonably admit of. I would, therefore, have little hesitation in holding that the word 'representative' is not intended to be confined to legal representative but is used in the wider sense indicated in Krishnabhupati Devu v. Vikrama De.u (17): "It is a well-known principle that a purchaser in a Court-sale represents the judgment-debtor to the extent of the right, title and interest as he had in the property purchased at the date of sale and represents the execution creditor, in so far as he had a right to bring such right, title and interest to sale in satisfaction of the decree." This principle was laid down by Muttusami Ayyar and Best, JJ., in holding that the purchaser was a party claiming under the execution creditor within the meaning of section 13 of the old Civil Procedure Code; and there was thus privity of law between the two. No doubt the learned Judges with reference to some cases cited against that proposition dismissed them with the remark that they were cases under section 244 and not under section 13, but they were not considering any question under the former section. I do not see why the principle should not be applied to section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure as well.

The question, however, seems to be concluded by the ruling of the Privy Council in J'rosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22), where their Lordships say: "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible and their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244, and that when a question has arisen as to execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser who is not a party to the suit is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section." Their Lordships in laying down the law in these terms observed that as the respondent was not represented before them, they had examined the rulings of the Indian High Courts for themselves; and they also mention that Mr. Doyne who appeared for the appellant admitted before them that it was the common practice to make the auction-purchaser a party to an application for setting aside an execution sale; in that case the appellant wanted by a suit to have the judicial sale of the Zamindari set aside on the ground of fraud on the part of the decree-holder and it was held that the question was determinable by virtue of section 244 only by an order of the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. No doubt their Lordships do not say that the auction-purchaser would be a representative of either the judgment debtor or the decree-holder within the meaning of section 244, but they clearly intended to lay down that as a party most interested in the result he would be entitled to be heard in any application under section 244 and that if the question was one of the character described therein, i.e., relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, then it must be determined by a proceeding under that section, in which the auction-purchaser must be joined. In Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji (25) above mentioned it is observed that the Privy Council could not have intended to delete the words "arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives" from section 244. But there seems to be no inconsistency, if I may respectfully say so, in holding that the question was one arising between the parties, although an auction-purchaser who was most interested in the dispute was entitled and bound to ask for a decision by the Court executing the decree. Otherwise the result would be that the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder would be bound to have the question settled by the execution Court and so far as the purchaser was concerned, a fresh decision would have to be obtained by a separate suit.

The law, therefore, in my opinion, is that a person who has bought the property of the defendant in a suit since the institution of that suit, whether at a Court auction held in execution of a money decree passed in another suit or by private purchase, is entitled and bound to have any question relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree decided under section 47 by the Court executing the decree, when his interest is affected either by the decree itself or by the sale held in execution of that decree, and the same rule applies to a purchaser of the property under such sale, whether he is the decree-holder himself or a stranger. Whether the purchaser in the one case or the auction-purchaser in the other is to be regarded as the representative of the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder depends upon the nature of the question raised and who the contesting party is. This is in accordance with the view of the law adopted in Kasinatha Ayyar v. Uthumansa Rowthan (10), Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2), Arthanari Chettiar v. Nagoji Rac (14), Manickka Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (13), Paramananda Das v. Mahabeer Dossji (8), Sivarama Sastrial v. Somasundara Mudali (11), Suppana Kavundan v. Kumara Kavundan (9) and the unreported judgment in Appeal No. 249 of 1916 and is opposed to Krishna Satapasti v. Sarasvatula Sambasiva Row (7), Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3), Meda Ohinnasubamma v. Bopireddi Gari Chinnayya (12), Thangavelu Mudaliar v. Mahomed Ibrahim Sahib (5) and Arasayee Ammal v. Sokkalunga Mudali (6), and the latter rulings to that extent must be considered to be overruled.

OLDFIELD, J.—It is clear that the questions before us were framed on the assumption that the applicability of section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the cases before the Subordinate Judge can be disputed only on the ground that some of those who contested them were neither parties (that is not alleged) nor their representatives; and in particular that the stranger purchaser referred to in the third question at the Court sale in connection with which these proceedings have arisen must be regarded as the representative of one party or other to the decree under execution, if section 47 is to be applied. That assumption, I agree with the learned Chief Justice, must be rejected, because, as the Judicial Committee held in Prosunno

Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22), the auction-purchaser's inclusion in the proceedings is justifiable on the ground of his interest in their result and without reference to his possession of a representative character. In fact there was in that case, as I understand it, no attempt to decide whether he had one; and, if the judgment in Magan Lal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji (25) assumes such a decision, I would respectfully dissent from it. The committee regarded it as sufficient to attract the application of section 47 that a question relating to execution had arisen between the parties to the decree, without reference to the purchaser's inclusion in the proceedings. It need only be added that in order to the arising of such a question, it is not essential that all the parties to the decree should actually be impleaded in the proceedings, in which it is raised. For, although I deprecate the common practice, which is exemplified by the cases before us, of failing to implead in such proceedings either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, the nature of the question to be dealt with cannot be affected by their absence. In the cases before us the terms of the reference assume and it is evident that a question relating to the execution of the decree has arisen. It is, therefore, unnecessary to answer the third question referred directly or otherwise than by saying that the inclusion of the auction-purchaser as a party to proceedings relating to an auction-sale does not make section 47 inapplicable to them.

The foregoing, of course, supplies no answer to the other questions referred, in which the representative character of the other contesting party in the cases before us, the purchaser in execution of a previous money decree or his transferee, is in issue. For the connection of either with the proceedings in execution of the mortgage decree, in which the dispute to be adjudicated on has arisen, is indirect and their interest in the result of these proceedings accrued to them independently of the sale, which they impugn. And accordingly, so far as they are concerned, their possession of a representative character must be established, if section 47 is to be applied. It is not suggested that they can be regarded as the representatives of the holder of the decree under execution in the present proceedings, since he had no connection with the Court-sale and private sale, under which they claim. The conclusion will, therefore, depend on whether they represent the judgment-debtor in these proceedings, who is also the judgment-debtor under the money decree in execution of which that sale was held. It appeared, it may be observed, in the course of argument that the statement of the parties' characters in my order of reference was inaccurate, inasmuch as in all these appeals, and not only in Appeal Against Order No. 260, the contesting party was the vendee of the decree-holder purchaser under the money decree. This, however, authorizes hardly any restriction of the discussion of the general principle involved. For the three alternatives have still to be considered that the purchaser represents (1) no one or (2) the judgment-debtor or (3) the money decree-holder, either because he in fact derived title from him or on other grounds.

It does not seem to me that any detailed discussion of the numerous decisions enumerated in the judgment just delivered is called for, since the conflict between them is for the most part beyond reconciliation. On two points, however, there is a distinct preponderance of authority in this Court; and I, therefore, take it as settled law that the representative mentioned in section 47 is not to be identified with a legal representative as defined in section 2 (11) and that a purchaser at Court auction represents some one; that is, either the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder. For, although the latter conclusion is contrary to the dictum of Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) and the cases from unauthorized reports, in which it is followed, to which my order of reference refers, it is, as I have pointed out there, unsupported by reference to principle and irreconcilable with another portion of the learned Judge's judgment and another earlier and later decisions.

The question is then whether the purchaser is the representative of the judgment-debtor or decree-holder; and it is sufficient for the present reference to deal with it as regards money decrees only and without regard to the special and more difficult considerations arising in connection with sale under mortgage decrees, by which the interest of the mortgage decree-holder as well as the equity of redemption is ordinarily transferred. As regards money decrees it seems to me very difficult, if not impossible, to imagine a case, in which the purchaser can become the representative of the decree-holder. The dictum of Moore, J., in Kasinatha Ayyar v. Uthumansa Rowthan (10) was obiter, the fact that the auction-purchaser was the decree-holder affording, as he points out, an alternative ground for his decision; and the sale was in execution of a mortgage decree and was, therefore, subject to the consideration above referred to. In Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2) the question arose regarding a purchaser from the decree-holder purchaser at the Court-sale; and in that case and in Manickka Olayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (13) the Court sale was held under the decree, in the execution of which the application of section 47 was proposed. Of the decisions relied on by Moore, J., in Sandhu Taraganar v. Hussain Sahib (2), Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22) has already been referred to, whilst Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (20) does not, with all due deference, support him and Dwar Suksh Sirkar v. Fatik Jali (24) deals with the transferee from a decree-holder of his decree, not of what he had purchased in execution of it. On the other hand, as the learned Chief Justice has shown, the purchaser at Court-sale has been regarded, so far as appears on general grounds, as the representative of the judgment-debtor in Krishna Satapathi v. Sarasvatula Sambasiva Row (7) and Meda Ohinnasubamma v. Bapireddi Gari Ohinnayya (12). Apart from authority the fact recognized by Krishnaswami Aiyar, J., in Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3) that the purchaser succeeds to the judgment-debtor's rights in the property sold, would ordinarily be sufficient to constitute him his representative in interest, at least in proceedings regarding that property; and the only argument suggested to the contrary, that the purchaser and decree-holder are both interested to support the sale, at which the purchase was made, appears to assume, what is not the case, that they both have or have had in succession an identical interest in the property sold.

Holding that the purchaser in execution of a money decree is ordinarily the representative of the judgment-debtor, I consider next whether he is so when, as in the cases before us, he is also the decree-holder and when his position comes in question in a distinct proceeding. It may be pointed out that, where his position does not so come in question, the fact that he is the purchaser does not consistently with the reference already made to Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22) require consideration. When it does, it seems to me that his character as decree-holder in one execution can have no effect on his position in another and that there is nothing in authority or on principle to debar us from treating him like any other stranger to the latter, no reason appearing for according him any other rights than a stranger purchaser from the judgment-debtors, whether by execution or private sale, would acquire.

The foregoing entails that the purchaser from a decree-holder purchaser under a money decree is the representative of the judgment-debtor for the purpose of enquiry into a question relating to the execution of a distinct decree affecting the same property. I would answer the second question referred accordingly. An answer to the first question is not necessary.

SESHAGIRI Aiyar, J.—Before dealing with the questions referred, a short statement of facts may not be out of place. The property in suit belongs to one P. P. Maya Nadar. One Muthuswamy sued him in Original Suit No. 733 of 1915 and obtained a money decree on the 6th of January 1916. In pursuance of that decree the properties were attached on the 21st of June 1916. They were sold on the 24th of October of the same year, purchased by the decree-holder, and the sale was confirmed on the 27th of November 1916. The property was delivered on the 12th of February 1917. The decree-holder purchaser sold the property privately on the 28th of March 1917 to the present appellant. That is the history of one stage of the proceedings. After the attachment under the money decree one M. V. Nadan brought a suit on a mortgage executed by P. P. M.

Nadar on the 14th of July 1916. He obtained a preliminary decree on the 25th of September 1916. The final decree was on the 11th of July 1917. The property was sold on the 17th of December 1917; three items out of four were purchased by the decree-holder himself and the 4th item by one Subbiah Nadan, a stranger. The sale was confirmed on the 21st of January 1918. The purchasers under the mortgage decree in endeavouring to take possession were obstructed by the purchasers under the money decree. Thereupon they applied for the removal of the obstruction. The lower Court held that the purchase under the money decree was affected by the doctrine of lis pendens as the sale was subsequent to the institution of the mortgage suit. The present appeals are by the representatives of the purchaser under the money decree against the order of the lower Court directing possession to be given to the purchasers under the mortgage decree.

A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lies because the purchaser under the money decree cannot be regarded as a representative of any of the parties to the decree. It was under these circumstances the three questions have been referred for the opinion of the Full Bench.

Upon one question there was no contest. It was conceded by the Counsel for the respondent that where the equity of redemption is purchased under a money decree, in matters relating to execution of a mortgage decree, the auction-purchaser under the money decree will be the representative of the judgment debtor in the mortgage decree. This matter apart from concession has been definitely decided by the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ishan Ohundur Sirkar v. Beni Madhub Sirkar (20) and by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (21). In the first of these decisions it was held that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Radhamadhub Holdar v. Monohur Mukerjee (19) is only consistent with the view that the auction-purchaser is the representative of the judgment-debtor. Although the point was not expressly decided by the Board, I respectfully concur with the view taken in Calcutta that that decision is authority for the proposition enunciated. It is true in Bombay they have held that the auction-purchaser is the representative of neither the decree holder nor of the judgment-debtor; and in the latest decision of that Court in Narsinghbhat v. Bandu Krishna (16) it was held that he is not a representative of the judgment-debtor. But having regard to the decisions of the Judicial Committee and of the two Full Bench cases referred to by me, I am of opinion that the auction-purchaser represents the judgment-debtor in questions relating to the execution of decree in the second suit on the mortgage. But the question whether in the same suit he would be the representative of the judgment-debtor is not quite settled. I shall not discuss the authorities bearing thereon, as in the view I am taking the discussion would be unnecessary. Before proceeding further I might state that the view that the auction-purchaser is the representative of the decree-holder has not been accepted in Calcutta or in Allahabad. It is certainly not the law in Bombay. In this Presidency the weight of authority is against making him representative of the decree-holder. Krishna Satapathi v. Sarasvatula Sambasiva Row (7), Nadamuni Narayana Iyengar v. Veerabhadra Pillai (3), Meda Chinnasubamma v. Bapireddi Gari Ohinnayya (12) take that view. On the other hand, we have Manickha Odayan v. Rajagopala Pillai (13) and Arthanari Ohettiar v. Nagoji Rao (14) in favour of regarding the auction-purchaser as the representative of the decree-holder. On principle it seems to me that this latter view is wrong. He is certainly not a representative-in-interest. Because beyond being the instrument for bringing the property of the judgment-debtor to sale, ordinarily speaking, a decree holder does not transmit any of his rights to the auction-purchaser. I can understand his legal representative standing in his shoes. I can understand his assignee or other heir prosecuting his right. But I am unable to hold that an auction-purchaser represents the decree holder. On the motion of the decree-holder the Court proceeds to sell the property of the judgment-debtor and the principle of caveat emptor has been applied to purchases so made. The only provision in the Code of Civil Procedure which affects the decree holder is that which provides for an application by the auction-purchaser for a refund of the money from the decree holder in case the sale is set aside. I am, therefore, unable to accept those decisions which hold that he is a representative of the decree-holder, as correct.

But I think all these difficulties may be overcome by a legitimate application of the principle enunciated in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22). In that case a suit was brought by a judgment-debtor for setting aside the sale of his property on the ground that the decree-holder acted fraudulently. The auction purchaser at the execution-sale was made a defendant. When the matter finally went before the Judicial Committee, their Lordships said:—"Mr. Doyne, who appeared for the appellants, admitted that the question at issue was one relating to the 'execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree.' But he argued with much ingenuity that the suit was not barred by the provisions of section 244, because the question concerned the auction-purchaser as much as any body (the italics are mine) and, therefore, as he contended, it could not properly be described as a question 'arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed.'" Their Lordships say further on: "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244, and that, when a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit (the italics are mine) in which a decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section." This statement shows that what the Courts have to see is whether the issues arising for decision relate (a) to execution; (b) to deciding rival rights of the decree holder and of the judgment-debtor, in the subject-matter. If those conditions are satisfied, the fact that others are interested in the result of the decision should not affect the jurisdiction and competency of the executing Court to deal with the matter. Their Lordships lay special emphasis on the cheapness and speediness of remedies expected of an application in execution. If we turn to the language of section 47, which corresponds to section 244 of the Code, of 1882, the same result would appear to follow. The section lays down only two conditions which have been insisted on by the Judicial Committee. It does not describe who the parties to the execution application should be. The obvious object of the Legislature was that once a matter has been adjudicated upon by a regular trial, question affecting the same matter should, as far as possible, be dealt with in the execution department. In very many cases the same Judicial Officer may have to deal with the matters in execution: that would be a distinct advantage. Further the parties will be saved considerable expense if the question is dealt with in execution. I am, therefore, of opinion that as extended an application should be given the rule enunciated by the Judicial Committee as is consistent with the language of section 47. In Ganapathy Mudaliar v. Krishnamachariar (15), another decision of the Judicial Committee, they reiterated the principle enunciated in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (22). In Krishnabhupati Devu v. Vikrama Devu (17) this view seems to have found favour with the learned Judges. In Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji (25) there are observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins which may be regarded as enunciating the same principle. The rule itself is so eminently a workable one and steers clear of many difficulties which have sprung round the application of section 47 that, in my opinion, both the letter of the law and the reason of it demand that this principle should be given wide effect by Courts in this country. I would, therefore, answer all the questions referred to us by saying that if the points for decision in an application before the executing Court relate to the rival rights of the decree-holder and of the judgment-debtor and also relate to execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, it should be dealt with in execution and not by separate suit. The right of appeal and second appeal will be governed by the same rules as affect applications under section 47.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XLl, r. 5—Receiver, appointment of—Appeal—Order directing—Receiver not to act pending decision of appeal, validity of—Revision, whether lies.

An order made by an Appellate Court on an appeal against an order appointing a Receiver, directing the Receiver not to take any steps in regard to, or exercise any dominion over, the property till further orders, is an order made in the exercise of jurisdiction vested in the Court by law, and the High Court has no power to interfere therewith under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 222, col. 2.]

Where a Receiver is appointed by writ, it is open to the Appellate Court, on an appeal against the order of appointment, to stop the issue of the writ pending the decision of the appeal, or, if the writ has been issued, to direct the Receiver through the Court which appointed him not to take any steps in compliance with the writ of appointment. [p. 223, col. 1.]

Civil revision against an order of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 25th May 1919.

Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukerji, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Siveshar Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—It is quite clear that what the District Judge means is not to discharge the Receiver outright, because he had no power to do that without hearing the appeal, but to direct him not to take any steps in regard to, or exercise any dominion over, the property till further orders on the appeal. That is the only reasonable way in which the order of the learned District Judge can be interpreted; and reading it in that way, we think that it was a proper order and that there is no reason for interfering with it in revision, even if we had power to do so. In my opinion we have no power to interfere, because the District Judge has exercised a jurisdiction vested in him by law.

Then it is said that it was an illegal exercise of jurisdiction on his part, because he has passed it without hearing the opposite party, and reliance is placed upon the case of Multanchand Shivram v. Khar-sedji Nasarvanji (1). I respectfully beg to differ from that authority, because in my judgment there was no defect as regards jurisdiction. The learned Judge may have committed an error of procedure, but that is not a matter which can come within the purview of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code as interpreted by this Court.

Finally, it is said that under Order XLI, rule 5, of the Civil Procedure Code, which is the provision of law under which the stay of proceedings in the matter of the order made by the Subordinate Judge has been based by the District Judge, the District Judge has no authority to proceed without requiring security under sub-clause (3) of the rule. In my opinion the provisions of sub-clause (3) of rule 5 are not applicable to the case before us.

The learned Vakil for the petitioner has brought to our notice the case of Dharram Singh v. Kishen Singh (2), in which it was held that after a decree had been executed, the Appeal Court could not in exercise of its powers of stay interfere with the execution that had already taken place. The principle of that case also is not applicable to the present case. Here the Court has appointed a Receiver by a writ and it was competent to the Appeal Court either to stop the issue of the writ of appointment pending the appeal, or, if the writ had been issued, to direct the Receiver through the Court which appointed him not to take any steps in compliance with the writ of appointment. That is what the District Judge has done and no more. Therefore, the application will be discharged. But we learn that the 14th instant has been fixed for the hearing of the appeal, and we trust that if the property requires protection, the question of interim protection will be considered again if the appeal is not heard on that day.

The application is dismissed with costs.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIX, r. 1—Injunction, temporary, to restrain marriage, whether can be granted.

A Muhammadan wife obtained a declaration against her husband that she had ceased to be his wife by reason of the fact that she had exercised against him the option of puberty given by the Muhammadan Law. The husband appealed from the decree, and, during the pendency of the appeal, applied for a temporary injunction restraining certain relatives of his wife, who were parties to a cross-suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights which had been dismissed and was also the subject of an appeal, from giving the woman away in marriage before the disposal of the appeals:

Held, that the application was not maintainable. [p. 224, col. 1.]

Mr. S. M. Sulaiman, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The litigation out of which the application before us arises related to the position of Muhammad Yamin, the appellant in this Court, as the husband of Musammât Razia Begam. He sued for restitution of conjugal rights and for a declaration of his legal status as the woman's husband. There was a cross-suit based upon an allegation by the woman that she had ceased to be the wife of Muhammad Yamin, if she ever was, by reason of the fact that she had exercised against him the option of puberty given by the Muhammadan Law. Appeals are now pending against the decision of the Court below, which was in favour of the lady's contention. In this application the prayer is that the defendants be prohibited from giving away Musammât Razia Begam in marriage to any one, before the disposal of the aforesaid appeals. As it stands, the prayer in the application must be understood to refer to the defendants other than the lady herself, who are relatives of hers. It is obvious that such an application could not by any stretch of language be brought within the purview of rule 1 of Order XXXIX, Civil Procedure Code. It is not so clear that an application of this nature might not, under certain circumstances, be taken cognizance of by a Court of Justice as falling under rule 2 of the same Order. In the present case there was a relief by way of injunction sought in Mohammad Yamin's suit, that is to say, he asked for an injunction against the defendants other than Razia Begam, to the effect that they should not place any hindrance in the way of the lady's return to his house. It is contended that this was a suit for restraining these defendants from committing, or at any rate assisting in the commission of, a breach of the contract of marriage between the parties, or in the alternative for restraining them from committing an injury against the marital rights of the petitioner. From this the argument is advanced that the present petition is merely one for a temporary injunction to restrain certain defendants from committing a breach of contract, or injury of a like kind, arising out of the same contract, or relating to the same marital rights. Under the circumstances of the case we think it would be doing some violence to the language of the rule to bring this application within its scope. We note moreover that, according to its terms, the application seeks no remedy against Musammât Razia Begam herself. She is now, under the religious law governing the parties, of an age to enter into a contract of marriage on her own account, and an injunction directed against the remaining defendants would be meaningless if it were not accompanied by some injunction addressed to the lady herself. It has been suggested that we might allow the application to be amended; but the fact remains that, from the petitioner's point of view, and accepting for the purpose of argument his contention that the lady is still in the eye of the law his wife, any such injunction addressed to the lady as the appellant now suggests would amount virtually to an injunction not to commit adultery. Under the circumstances of the case we do not think that this Court ought to interfere in the manner suggested, and we dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 178—Person employed to take delivery of goods, whether in possession of goods—Pledge by person in possession, validity of—Fraud of third person, effect of.

Where a person, to whom goods are consigned, employs another to take delivery, making over to him the relative documents for the purpose of obtaining delivery, the latter has possession, within the meaning of section 178 of the Contract Act, both of the documents and the goods they represent, and is in a position to make a valid pledge of the goods, inasmuch as he did not obtain them by means of fraud or of an offence within the meaning of the second proviso to the section. [p. 226, cols. 1 & 2.]

The provision contained in section 178 of the Contract Act, so far as it goes, gives statutory effect to the principle that where one of two innocent parties must suffer for the fraud of a third, the loss should fall on him who enables such third party to commit the fraud. But it is unsafe to employ that principle as a separate and independent ground of decision. [p. 225, col. 2.]

PROFULLA KUMAR ROSE v. KAMINI KUMAR ROY.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—In this case the defendant No. 1 employed the defendant No. 2 to take delivery of a parcel of jute which he had despatched to the Chitpur station of the East Indian Railway. The jute was consigned by the defendant No. 1 to himself, so that the railway receipt was made out in his name as consignee. Without endorsing the receipt he entrusted it to the defendant No. 2 for the purpose of obtaining delivery. The defendant No. 2, therefore, had implied authority to do all that was necessary for that purpose, including authority to endorse the receipt in the name of the defendant No. 1.

What happened was that the defendant No. 2 took the receipt to the plaintiffs, and representing himself to be the partner of the defendant No. 1, asked for a loan for which he offered the receipt as a pledge. The plaintiffs requested him to get the receipt endorsed by the consignee. Two days later the defendant No. 2 again presented the receipt to the plaintiffs with an endorsement upon it purporting to be signed by the defendant No. 1 and to authorize delivery to Nanda Lal Dutt, the servant of the plaintiffs. The endorsement including the signature was in fact written by the defendant No. 2.

The plaintiffs then took delivery and on the security of the goods paid the defendant No. 2 Rs. 1,011 by way of loan together with Rs. 30 for the railway freight. He fraudulently appropriated the money for his own purposes.

In a criminal case instituted by the defendant No. 1, the plaintiffs were charged with collusion with the defendant No. 2 and an order was made prohibiting them from selling the jute. They accordingly instituted this suit to establish their rights as pawnees. The jute is now in their godowns. Their claim is contested by the defendant No. 1, the defendant No. 2 not having appeared. In the trial Court the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs succeeded in the lower Appellate Court and this appeal has accordingly been preferred by the defendant No. 1.

On the facts found in the Courts below it is finally established that the plaintiffs acted honestly in this transaction and the question is which of two innocent parties should suffer for the knavery of the defendant No. 2.

It is clear, and has so been found, that the defendant No. 2 had no authority from his principal to pledge either the railway receipt or the goods it represented with the plaintiffs. Under the general law of principal and agent, the loss would prima facie fall on the plaintiffs. The Additional District Judge has invoked the principle that "where one of two innocent parties must suffer for the fraud of a third, the loss should fall on him who enabled such third party to commit the fraud." It is unsafe to employ that principle as a separate and independent ground of decision. As to estoppel it is not suggested that the defendant No. 2 was that sort of agent whose ordinary business it is to sell or pledge goods, and his mere possession of the indicia of title with the consent of the defendant No. 1 is probably not by itself sufficient to create an estoppel against the latter, but that question was not discussed.

The plaintiffs found their case on the provision contained in section 178 of the Contract Act, which no doubt, so far as it goes, and in the cases to which it applies, modifies the general law and gives statutory effect to the principle on which the Additional District Judge relied. The extent to which for the present purpose that principle is operative is measured by the terms of the section.

The section consists of a sweeping provision to which the plaintiffs appeal, and two provisos. So far as it is material, it runs as follows:—

"A person who is in possession of any goods or of any bill of lading,..... or warrant or order for delivery, or any other document of title to goods, may make a valid pledge of such goods or document:

"Provided that the pawnee acts in good faith, and under circumstances which are not such as to raise a reasonable presumption that the pawner is acting improperly:

"Provided also that such goods or documents have not been obtained from the lawful owner or from any person in lawful custody of them, by means of an offence of fraud."

On the questions which arise under that section, the Courts below have for the most part taken diametrically opposite views, and it is well to say that on questions of fact we are bound by the conclusions arrived at by the lower Appellate Court.

The first point in controversy arises on the meaning of the word "possession". If the section be construed as it stands, apart from authority, it would at least be a possible view that the word was used in its ordinary and natural sense and that the draftsman or the Legislature intended to include all possession recognized as such by the law, and to leave it to the two provisos to limit the scope of the general rule enacted in the first clause. The law has by degrees attached more and more importance in this connection to the possession of the indicia of title cf. Cahn v. Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co. (1). There are, however, decisions in India which limit the meaning of the term "possession" as used in sections 103 and 178 of the Indian Contract Act, and it was argued for the defendant No. 1 that the defendant No. 2 had not such possession as section 178 contemplates. The contention that he was a mere servant, which found favour with the Munsif, cannot be supported in view of the clear finding of the Additional District Judge, that he was an agent. If he was an agent, his possession (apart, for the moment, from any question arising under the second proviso) would appear to fulfil the requirements suggested by the case law. He had the indicia of possession and his possession was acquired under such circumstances that the owner of the goods, although he had parted with the possession, could give instructions to him as to their disposal [Greenwood v. Holquette (2)]; if the defendant No. 2 had in fact no authority to pledge the goods, there was nothing to prevent his having such authority and there was little difficulty in leading the plaintiffs to believe that he had. In my opinion the defendant No. 2 had possession within the meaning of section 178 both of the railway receipt and of the goods it represented.

The Munsif found expressly that the railway receipt was a "document of title", and the finding is impliedly adopted by the Additional District Judge [see also the case in Bank of Bombay v. Nandlal Thackerseydas (3)]. In any case the point is not one of much importance, as the pledge came ultimately to be a pledge not of the railway receipt but of the goods, and if any question arises, it arises not under the opening clause of the section, but under the second proviso. I shall deal with that later.

The next point is whether the plaintiffs acted in good faith within the meaning of the first proviso. The Additional District Judge, dissenting from the Munsif, held that they acted as reasonable and prudent men would naturally do. That appears to be a reasonable conclusion of fact and no error of law is disclosed which would justify us in differing from it even if we desired to do so.

The last point is whether the defendant No. 2 obtained the railway receipt, or the goods, from the defendant No. 1 or from the railway company "by means of an offence or fraud" within the meaning of the second proviso. The Munsif answered that question, so far as the goods are concerned, in the affirmative. The Additional District Judge, on the other hand, held that as the defendant No. 2 was in lawful possession of the railway receipt and had authority to take delivery of the goods from the railway, he was in a position to make a valid pledge of the goods to the plaintiffs. I concur in that view. The railway receipt represented the goods and the defendant No. 2 from the time the receipt was handed to him for the purpose of taking delivery was in possession of the goods. The custody of the railway was custody for the defendant No. 1 or any person he might authorize to take delivery. There was no fraud upon the railway when delivery was obtained on the strength of the endorsement signed by the defendant No. 2 in the name of the defendant No. 1. The defendant No. 2, as has been stated, was authorized to do all that was necessary for the purpose of obtaining delivery. It is immaterial that delivery was actually taken by the plaintiffs. In substance, as distinguished from the machinery by which the transaction was carried through, the defendant No. 2 took delivery of the goods from the railway as he Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 2nd June 1917, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 9th May 1912.

Mr. Siveswar Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Guru Saran Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This is an appeal arising out of the suit which was brought by Mahant Ishwar Das, the Mahant of a Sikh temple situated within the Bihar Municipality, against the Chairman of that Municipality, for a declaration that he is not liable to be assessed with a personal tax under section 85 of the Bengal Municipal Act, that his sanghat is exempt and that the taxes imposed by the Municipality are illegal and ultra vires.

The suit was decreed in the first instance by the Subordinate Judge, but on appeal to the District Judge it was found that only some rooms in the sanghat were used exclusively for public worship and the suit was remanded for a decision of the issue—

"What are the circumstances and property of the plaintiff within the Municipality?"

This order of remand was upheld on appeal to the Calcutta High Court. The issue was accordingly tried by the Subordinate Judge, who found that the plaintiff had no circumstances and property within the Municipality. This finding has been accepted by the District Judge except in regard to a small portion. It appears that the respondent has three sources of income, (1) from Zemindari which is situated outside the Municipality, (2) from offerings of the sanghat and (3) from certain shops in the town. The suit has been decreed in respect of the first two items, and against this decree the Chairman has appealed.

The main contention before us has been in respect of the income from the Zemindari property. This is situated outside the Municipality, but it is argued that the words "circumstances within the municipality" will cover this income, and the decision in the case of Chairman of Giridih Municipality v. Srish Chandra Mozumdar (1) is relied on. That was a case in which the Chairman of the Giridih Municipality brought a suit against a Deputy Magistrate who was drawing a salary of Rs. 300 per month, and tax was assessed on the full amount of his salary. He refused to pay the tax on the ground that he spent half his salary on the maintenance of his family outside the Municipality. The Judge in the Court of first instance accepted this contention, but on an application made to the High Court this order was set aside and it was held that the assessment on the whole of the salary was not ultra vires. In that case the meaning of the unfortunate word 'circumstances' was considered and it was held that it is equivalent to 'means' and that it does not restrict the meaning of the word 'property.' It is on this decision that reliance is placed, but that case is clearly distinguishable from the case which is now before us; and a case exactly similar to the present one, namely, Kameshwar Pershad v. Chairman of the Bhabua Municipality (2), was actually distinguished by Stephen, J., in that case. The present case is exactly on all fours with the case of Kameshwar Pershad v. Chairman of the Bhabua Municipality (2), and I agree with the view which was taken by the learned Judges in that case that income from Zemindari property outside the Municipality is not 'circumstances and property within the Municipality.'

The question of assessment on income from offerings of the sanghat appears to me to be concluded by the finding of fact that the offerings are made to the Granth Saheb and are spent in worship. If this is so, they can be no part of the circumstances or property of the Mahant.

In the result, therefore, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

DAS, J.—I agree.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 77—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 14, 29 (1) (b)—Suit to enforce registration of document—Presentation of plaint in wrong Court—Limitation, extension of, whether permissible.

The period prescribed by section 77 of the Registration Act for bringing a suit for the registration of a document cannot be extended by invoking the aid of section 14 of the Limitation Act. Section 29 (1) (b) of the latter Act specially excludes the application of the provisions of that Act to any special or local law which prescribes a special period of limitation for any suit, appeal or application. [p. 229, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against the decree of the Officiating District Judge, Rungpore, dated the 7th of February 1918, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 28th of November 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Ohandra Gupta, for the Appellant.—Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (1) is against me and I submit that the principle there laid down is not good law. Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2) is direct authority in my favour and it says that section 14 of the Limitation Act applies. The plaintiff is entitled to deduct the period during which he was prosecuting bona fide this suit in the Munsif's Court which the Court could not entertain for want of jurisdiction. I submit that section 14 of the Limitation Act is applicable, and if that is found to be so, I am within time.

Babu Brajendranath Chatterjee, for the Respondent.—I rely mainly on Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (1). The Registration Act is a special Act, and it is complete in itself. How could the special period of limitation in the Registration Act be overridden by the general provisions of the Limitation Act? Thirty days' limitation is stated in the Registration Act and not in the Limitation Act, and so it cannot be extended by reference to section 14 of the Limitation Act. Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2), which the other side relies on, has been overruled by later decisions. Section 29 of the Limitation Act distinctly lays down that general rules of limitation shall not be applicable to a case like this.

Babu Atul Ohandra Gupta, briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act for registration of a mortgage bond for Rs. 1,000, said to have been executed by two ladies; one of them admitted execution and the document was registered so far as she was concerned, the other denied and the Sub-Registrar refused registration on the 4th August 1914. On appeal the District Registrar refused registration on the 9th November 1914. This suit was filed on the 8th December 1914 before the Munsif, being then valued at Rs. 500. On the 16th September 1915, the Munsif held that it had not been properly valued. The plaint was then amended and "for the purposes of jurisdiction of the Court" the suit was valued at Rs. 1,100. The Munsif then held that it exceeded the limit of his jurisdiction and he returned the plaint on the 14th December 1915. It was then presented before the Subordinate Judge on the 16th December 1915, who dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The District Judge also took the same view on appeal, both of them basing their judgment on the case of Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa Khatun (1). Hence this appeal. The appellant contends that the case of Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2) is direct authority that section 14 of the Limitation Act applies and that the plaintiff is entitled to deduct the period during which he was prosecuting in good faith this suit in the Munsif's Court, which that Court could not entertain from defect of jurisdiction. In Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa (1) the learned Judges held that they were not prepared to follow Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2), specially having regard to the Full Bench case of Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (3), which had been followed by the Madras Full Bench in the case of Veeramma v. Abbiah (4). Even before Abdul Hakim v. Latifunnessa (1) this Court did not take the same view as was taken in Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2), in Girija Nath v. Patani Bibee (5). This matter is governed by section 29 (1) (b) of the Limitation Act, which says that nothing in that Act shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal, or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India. This clause corresponds to section 6 of Act XV of 1877, section 6 of Act IX of 1871 and section 3 of Act XIV of 1859. By section 77 of the Registration Act the period of 30 days is specially prescribed for such suits. Part 12 of the Registration Act specially deals with the procedure when registration is refused. Section 71 deals with the manner in which the reasons for refusal are to be recorded; it provides that a copy of the reasons so recorded shall be supplied without payment and unnecessary delay.

Section 72 relates to an appeal to the Registrar from the order of the Sub-Registrar refusing to register on grounds other than denial of execution. Section 73 deals with applications to the Registrar where the Sub-Registrar refuses to register on the ground of denial of execution. Section 74 relates to the procedure to be adopted by the Registrar on such applications and directs that he shall, as soon as conveniently may be, enquire into the matter. Section 75 deals with the order made by the Registrar and the procedure thereon. Section 76 provides that a copy of the order for refusal is to be supplied without unnecessary delay to the applicant. Section 77 empowers the institution of a suit within 30 days after the date of refusal. These sections contain a complete procedure when registration is refused and section 77 limits the period to thirty days. The prevailing idea is that there should be expedition and no unnecessary delay. It is with that object that a special rule of limitation was laid down under section 77 and the question is, having regard to such a provision, whether the period can be extended under section 14 of the Limitation Act. In Khetter Mohun Ohuckerbutty v. Dinabashy Shaha (2) the learned Judges relied upon Golan Ohnri Nowluchy v. Krishto Ohunder Dass (6), holding that the principle of that case was directly applicable to the case before them, but that case was practically overruled in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (3). The Full Bench relied upon Poulson v. Modhoooodun Paul Chowdhry (7) and the Privy Council case of Unnoda Persaul Mookerjee v. Kristo Oommar Moitro (8). In Girija Nath Roy v. Patani Bibi (5) the learned Judges had practically taken the same view. In Veeramma v. Abbiah (4) the Full Bench accepted the view of the Calcutta Full Bench in Nagendro Nath Mullick v. Mathura Mohun Parhi (3). Justice Muthusami Aiyar was of opinion that it would be incongruous to import into the Registration Act the general provisions of the Limitation Act and that indefinite extension was likely to defeat the object of registration and that the Registration Act with regard to this matter was complete in itself. We are of opinion that the principle laid down in the case of *Nagendro Nath Mullick v. The Allahabad Court held it was not a complete code in itself. We think that the question of limitation in this case has been rightly decided by both the Courts and this appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL NO. 19 OF 1919.

June 14, 1919.

Present:—Sir Dawson Miller, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Adami.

JAGDIS CHANDRA DAS—APPELLANT
versus

CHANDRA MOHAN DAS—RESPONDENT.

Letters Patent (Pat.), cl. 10—Rules of Patna High Court, Ch. VII, rr. 2, 16, Ch. VIII, rr. 3, 4—Letters Patent Appeal—Procedure on admission—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 11.

Under rules 2 and 16 of Chapter VII and rule 3 of Chapter VIII of the Rules of the Patna High Court the Bench before which an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent is laid has jurisdiction to deal with it in exactly the same way as appeals posted to a Bench for hearing under Order XLI, rule 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 230, col. 2; p. 231, col. 1.]

Mr. Lal Mohan Ganguly, for the Appellant.
JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent has been referred to a Bench of this Court under rules 2 and 16 of Chapter VII of the High Court Rules. The practice in this Court, which has been followed in such cases since the Court was constituted, has been for the Bench before which the appeal comes to deal with it in exactly the same way as cases posted to a Bench for hearing under Order XLI, rule 11, and until now this practice, which has much to recommend it, has never been questioned. It is now contended, however, that this procedure is not justified either by the rules of this Court or by the Letters Patent or by the Code of Civil Procedure and that in fact the Court is acting without jurisdiction in so dealing with the case.

Under the Letters Patent the Court has power to make rules for delegating judicial as well as non-judicial business and duties to the Registrar, and by the rules certain judicial duties which are performed by a Bench or a single Judge in other High Courts have been so delegated. The adoption of this system has been amply justified by the results, and the saving of the time of the Court, which would otherwise have been occupied in doing business of an interlocutory or preliminary character which can equally well be performed by the Registrar, has been so manifest that other High Courts are, I understand, taking steps to adopt the same procedure.

The duties of the Registrar with regard to appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent are to be found in Chapter VII, rules 2 and 16 and Chapter VIII, rule 4 of the rules of this Court. By rule 16 of Chapter VII the Registrar having satisfied himself that the memorandum of appeal is within time and is sufficiently stamped and is otherwise in compliance with the rules, is directed in the case of first appeals to admit them and issue notice to the respondent, in the case of appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent to order them to be placed before a Bench to which such appeals are assigned, and in the case of all other appeals to admit them and either issue notice to the respondent or place them before a Bench under Order XLI, rule 11. Rule 3 of Chapter VIII provides that when the appeal is to be heard under Order XLI, rule 11, or is an appeal under clause 10 of the Letters Patent as early a date as possible shall be fixed for hearing the appellant or his Pleader. It is clear from this rule that the practice contemplated in appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent is the same as that prescribed by Order XLI, rule 11 of the Code, and this is the practice which has all along been followed and which is now for the first time in the history of this Court called in question.

In support of the contention that the Court has no power to deal in this manner with appeals of this nature, it is pointed out that whereas in appeals from original decrees and in all other appeals except appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent the Registrar is directed to admit them, those under clause 10 are not admitted before being placed before a Bench and that until admitted, the Court cannot deal with them as appeals either under the procedure prescribed by Order XLI, rule 11, or indeed in any other manner. But the short answer to this is that the Bench itself admits them and then calls upon the appellant or his Pleader to proceed without serving notice on the respondent and if no case is made out why the appeal should be allowed, the Court dismisses it without calling upon the respondent, acting exactly as in cases under Order XLI, rule 11. It is, however, urged that by rule 4 of Chapter VIII of the Court's Rules when an appeal under the Letters Patent has been admitted, notice must be served on the respondent or his Pleader before the appeal can proceed. If this rule stood alone, there might be something to be said in favour of this argument and it may be that the rule is not very happily worded. But reading it in conjunction with the other rules already referred to, it is quite clear that rule 4 of Chapter VIII contemplates only those cases in which the appeal is admitted and the Court, having heard the appellant or his Pleader under rule 3, desires to hear the respondent before finally disposing of the appeal. It is obvious that if the appeal is dismissed there is nothing more to be done under rule 4, which can no longer apply, and I am satisfied that the rules contemplate and authorise the procedure which has been followed since the Court was constituted. The rules have received the sanction of the Governor General in Council and of the Local Government and have the force of law.

It would be sufficient to rest my judgment here and say the case is concluded by the rules, but for the fact that some time was occupied in arguing that the question is really one of jurisdiction and that the Court has no jurisdiction to try appeals of this nature in the manner which it has adopted. The argument was not put very clearly or scientifically by the learned Vakil for the appellant but as I understand it, it is this; that the Letters Patent grant a right of appeal to the High Court from a judgment of a single Judge of this Court, except in certain specified cases which are not material to the present discussion; that no procedure is prescribed by the Letters Patent for hearing such appeals and the Civil Procedure Code applies only to appeals from subordinate Courts. There is, therefore, no special procedure provided for appeals of this nature and in such cases to deal with appeals summarily, as the procedure provided by Order XLI, rule 11, has been described, is denying the appellant the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent which the Court has no right to do. I confess I have some difficulty in following this argument. Assuming, without deciding, that Order XLII of the Civil Procedure Code, which applies the rules of Order XLI, including rule 11, to appeals from appellate decrees (which the present is) has no application to appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent, then no special procedure is laid down governing the Court in such cases, except in so far as the High Court Rules provide. Now the High Court Rules, as already pointed out, although they do not set out in detail the procedure to be adopted in such cases, clearly indicate that procedure by coupling appeals under clause 10 of the Letters Patent with those under Order XLI, rule 11, and directing a date to be fixed for hearing the appellant or his Pleader. This hearing of the appellant or his Pleader undoubtedly constitutes an appeal and the Court considers any argument that may be put forward in support of the appeal by the appellant to whom the right of appeal is granted. If the appellant in the absence of his opponent fails to convince the Court that the judgment appealed against should be set aside or varied, it is difficult to see how the presence of his opponent would assist him in obtaining this result or how he suffers any injury by his absence. If, on the other hand, the argument shows that the appeal is one of substance requiring to be answered by the respondent, the case is in effect adjourned for the respondent to appear.

It was contended that two appearances by the appellant in cases where the respondent is called on involved extra expense and I suppose the argument is that, therefore, the practice is objectionable. This, however, is hardly a ground for challenging the Court's jurisdiction and in any case the suggestion is based upon an entire misconception. Although the Court has power under the Code to hear both first and second appeals without serving notice on the respondent, this Court does not in practice exercise that power in the case of first appeals, for the reason that the benefit to be derived from such a procedure is not so manifest in first appeals where questions of fact as well as law have to be considered and it has been found more expeditious in the long run to hear such appeals only after serving notice upon the respondent to appear. In appeals from appellate decrees, however, where the findings of fact cannot be questioned, the questions for determination in the great majority of cases require no lengthy argument and a short discussion as a rule is sufficient to enable the Court to come to a conclusion as to whether the appeal ought to succeed or not. If the Court should have a clear view that the appeal cannot succeed, it is entitled to dismiss it without calling upon the respondent. If, on the other hand, the case is one of doubt or difficulty requiring the presence of the respondent, then notice is served upon him and in due course he appears. But the appellant must in any case appear in order to get his appeal admitted, and the extra time occupied in argument in those cases where the Court wishes to hear the respondent before coming to a decision is a trifling consideration compared with the extra delay and expense that would result in the long run if in all such cases the respondent were called upon to appear. The argument, therefore, on the ground of extra expense is manifestly purely illusory, when one remembers that taking all the cases together the procedure results in a considerable saving both of the time of the Court and of the pocket of litigants.

In conclusion I should like to point out that even if no procedure were provided either by the Code or by the rules of this Court or elsewhere, it would be the duty of the Court to proceed according to the well-known rule which enjoins upon it the necessity, where no specific rule exists, of acting according to justice, equity and good conscience. Applying the rules of procedure laid down by the Code to cases not specifically mentioned but in all material respects similar to those mentioned seems to me to be not only in accordance with equity and justice but, in the particular case before us, the course best calculated to meet the ends of justice and I, therefore, hold that the objection is not sustainable, and having directed the appellant's Pleader to argue the case before us we have come to the conclusion in this case that the appeal cannot possibly succeed and ought to be dismissed.

ADAMI, J.—I agree.

In a suit for profits brought by one co-sharer against another, the nazrana realised by the latter can be included in the account, provided the nazrana and the enhanced rent taken together do not offend against the provisions of section 38 (2) of the Oudh Rent Act. [p. 233, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether in a suit for profits brought by one co sharer against another, the nazrana realised by the latter can be included in the account. Both the Courts below excluded it on the ground that the levy of the nazrana was illegal.

The levy is not, however, illegal, if the nazrana and the enhanced rent, taken together, do not offend against the provisions of section 38, clause (2), of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886). A co sharer is, moreover, liable to account for whatever profit he receives on account of the joint land to his co-sharers, whether he receives it in the shape of nazrana or in the shape of rent. It is open to a tenant to say that he would not pay the nazrana or any enhancement in excess of that sanctioned by section 38 of the Act; but if the tenant voluntarily pays it to the co-sharer who gives him the tenancy on behalf of himself and his co sharers, he has to account for the same to the persons on whose behalf he gave the tenancy. Section 90 of the Indian Trusts Act (II of 1882) provides that where a co owner by availing himself of his position as such gains an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property, or where any such owner, as representing all persons interested in such property, gains any advantage, he must hold, for the benefit of all persons so interested, the advantage so gained. Section 23 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872) applies to persons who are parties to the contract for the payment of the nazrana. It does not debar a co-sharer from claiming from the person realising the same his share of the realisations made. There is nothing to show that the nazrana and the enhanced rent, taken together, exceeded the extent of permissible enhancement.

A cross objection has been filed by the defendants respondents with regard to the manner in which the costs have been apportioned. But it does not appear that any mistake has been made therein.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit remanded to the Court of first instance with a direction to reinstate it under its original number and to dispose of it, after taking such relevant evidence as the parties may adduce, in the manner required by law. The parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

Sale of goods—Construction of contract—Agreement to sell goods of particular description out of goods to be received by seller—Goods received by seller not of that description—Breach of contract—Buyer, whether entitled to damages.

In September 1917 plaintiffs agreed to buy and defendants agreed to sell certain goods and entered into a contract. The material clause of the contract was as follows: "Ghaghrapat (cloth) cases or bales 19 'Gin' at Re. 0-10-8, inches 31. The above-mentioned goods which are to arrive are sold (to you). Those purchased by us from Graham & Co. are sold to you. Shipment thereof January or February. And there are (to be) two to three months in addition. To be delivered early if arrive early. To be delivered as and when the same may be received. To be delivered on the safe arrival of the steamer. Interest (at) eight annas. 'Sai' (allowance) at Rs. 2 per case. If the goods to arrive come 'late' the purchaser is to take (delivery of the same)." The goods which were eventually received by the defendants from Graham & Co. were not of the description which the plaintiffs had agreed to buy. The plaintiffs refused to accept the goods and sued the defendants for damages:

Held, per Heaton, J.—That having regard to the commercial situation in September 1917, it must be presumed that the parties intended that the defendants should offer to the plaintiffs nineteen bales out of those which Graham & Co. were sending to them; and that the bales should be as near the description stated in the contract as possible; that the contract might also have contemplated that if the plaintiffs were quite justly dissatisfied with a tender of goods on the ground that the goods were nowhere near the description contained in the contract, then they might repudiate the bargain altogether, but that neither of the parties could have contemplated that there should follow, on a repudiation of that kind, any right on the part of the plaintiffs to recover damages. [p. 237, col. 1.]

Per Marten, J.—What was sold were ginned goods, what arrived were unginned goods and therefore, the condition precedent of the contract viz, the arrival of ginned goods, not having been fulfilled, neither party was bound by the contract. [p. 239, col. 1.]

Per Curiam, that the plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, be dismissed. [p. 237, col. 1; p. 239, col. 1.]

Original civil jurisdiction appeal from the decision of Macleod, C. J., in Suit No. 149 of 1918.

FACTS and points of law involved in the case are similar to those in Suit No. 15 of 1918, in which Macleod, C. J., delivered the following judgment:—

"The defendants in this case indented through Messrs. Graham & Co. for certain goods called 'Gagrapat.' On the 1st of September 1917 the defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiffs ten cases of Gagrapat at the rate of Rs. 0-10-3 a yard. On the 4th of September 1917 defendants agreed to sell to the plaintiffs ten more cases, similar goods, at the same price.

"The contracts were made on a printed form and at the end of the printed conditions appears the description of the goods in manuscript.

"'Gagrapt cases or bales 10, inches 34, at Rs. $\frac{1}{2}$, $2\frac{1}{4}$ annas.'

"Then it is written. 'We have sold the above written goods to arrive. We have sold the goods to you which we have purchased from Messrs. Graham & Co. The time for the shipment thereof is December or January and 2 to 3 months are of grace. If the goods arrive early we are to give the same early. We are to give the same as and when the same arrive.'

"Then there is a fresh clause: 'If the goods to arrive should come late the party purchasing the goods should receive the same.'

"Ten bales arrived in April and the plaintiffs were informed that the goods were off sample and that Messrs. Graham & Co. had made an allowance of Rs. 1-6-0 per piece.

"Plaintiffs declined to take the goods with that allowance and in consequence the defendants sold the goods in the beginning of August. The remaining ten bales arrived in July. The same complaint was made, and the plaintiff refused to accept the goods. Plaintiff waited till January and then filed this suit claiming damages for breach of contract owing to the failure of the defendant to deliver the goods contracted for. He claims the difference between the contract rate and the rate for ten cases on the 2nd of August and the rate for the other ten cases on the 7th of August.

"Assuming then that the plaintiff is right and that the goods which were tendered were not the goods contracted for, it follows the goods contracted for did not arrive. The question then arises whether on a proper construction of the contract, the plaintiff is entitled to claim damages. The question at issue lies within a very narrow compass. The plaintiff as purchaser was informed that the goods were English goods which had been ordered through Messrs. Graham & Co. and that they were to arrive. It was then for the parties to contract in any form they pleased with regard to the purchase of the goods. It was open to the seller to guarantee the arrival of the goods, and to draw up the contract in such a form that if the goods did not arrive within the stipulated period, he would be liable to pay damages, or it was open to him to contract that he was only bound to deliver the goods if they arrived and that in the event of the non-arrival of the goods, the purchaser would not be entitled to claim damages.

"Now the limitation as regards the time of shipment in the contract was for the protection of the purchaser. He was not obliged to take delivery of goods which were shipped before or after the period mentioned in the contract. But that does not affect the question whether the seller guaranteed the arrival of the goods. This question depends on the proper construction to be given to the words 'we are to give the same as and when the same may arrive.' If the plaintiff's construction be a correct one, then, as far as I can see, these words appear to be superfluous and there was no necessity for them to be inserted in the contract; because it would follow as a matter of course that the seller, having sold goods to be shipped within a certain period to arrive, would be bound to give delivery as soon as they did arrive. It seems to me that the only construction that can be put on these words is that they mean that the seller has contracted that he will only give delivery when the goods do arrive and that if the goods did not arrive at all, then he could not give delivery and there would be no liability put upon him to pay damages for their non arrival. That seems to me to be the plain grammatical sense of these words. And, as a matter of fact, I cannot imagine any person who had indented for goods from England or any other part of the world abroad contracting in any other form, considering the numerous chances there then were of the non-arrival of the goods within the stipulated period; supposing the ship had been sunk, is it conceivable that under this contract the plaintiff could have claimed damages? As I said before, if the seller likes to guarantee the arrival, there is nothing to prevent him from doing so. But that is not what one would expect a prudent man would do, certainly not in September 1917. It seems to me that the onus is really thrown on the plaintiff to show that his seller guaranteed the arrival of the goods, and one would require plain words in the contract to show that the seller had acted in such an imprudent fashion. It would be a different matter if the contract had been for the sale of so many tons or bales of a particular commodity of a particular shipment. Assuming, therefore, that the goods contracted for did not arrive, in my opinion, the defendants were absolved from performing their contract and delivering the goods. The plaintiff, therefore, cannot make any claim for damages for non-delivery. The defendant's counter-claim on the ground that the plaintiff was bound to take delivery with the allowance, his Counsel said, would not be pressed if I found in the defendant's favour on the question of the construction of the contract.

"The suit will, therefore, be dismissed. I may note that the suit has really been tried on a demurrer and, if my decision is reversed, it will still be open to the defendant to prove the custom set up in the written statement and to prove his counter-claim. Plaintiff will have to pay defendant's costs of the action."

Mr. Coltman, for the Appellants.

Mr. Taraporewalla, for the Respondents.

HEATON, J.—The plaintiffs agreed to buy and the defendants to sell certain goods and entered into a contract. The important part of the contract (I will leave out the earlier part with its usual preliminaries) is:

"Ghaghrapat (cloth) cases or bales 19 'Gin' at Re. 0-10 3, inches 34. The above-mentioned goods which are to arrive are sold (to you). Those purchased by us from Graham & Co. are sold to you. Shipment thereof January or February. And there are (to be) two to three months in addition. To be delivered early if arrive early. To be delivered as and when the same may be received. To be delivered on the safe arrival of the steamer. Interest (at) eight annas. 'Sai' (allowance) (at) Rs. 2 per case. Fresh clause:—If the goods to arrive come 'late' the purchaser is to take (delivery of the same)."

The case has never been separately tried and we have been dealing with it on the pleadings, the correspondence which ensued between the parties and the contract itself, the important part of which I have just read out. The contract was made on the 15th of September 1917. In July of the following year, i.e., 1918, correspondence between the parties began. It appears that by that time certain goods had been shipped by Graham & Co. to the defendants and it was known to the defendants that the goods were not by any means exactly of the description given in the contract. A sample was sent by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and the defendants suggested that an allowance should be made; that the plaintiffs should take the goods with an allowance. This the plaintiffs declined to agree to, on the ground that the goods, which were thus offered them, were not the goods they had contracted to take. Subsequently the goods arrived. The plaintiffs refused to take delivery of them, and now they have brought this suit, claiming that the defendants have broken the contract and are liable to pay damages.

Independently of any evidence at all, we may take certain things for granted, because it is inconceivable that this contract could have been entered into if those things did not exist. One is that the plaintiffs and the defendants in connection with the contract must have discussed the quality of the goods they were bargaining about and must have discussed, or at any rate the matter must have been mentioned, the kind of goods the defendants had bought from Graham & Co. and which it was anticipated Graham & Co. would send them. Another thing we may take to be undoubted is that the goods to which the correspondence referred and the goods which actually arrived in the end were the goods the defendants had bought from Graham & Co. and were the goods which the defendants had in mind when they entered into this contract with the plaintiffs and were the goods which the defendants represented to the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs believed, to be the goods that they were contracting to buy. Having assumed as much as this, it remains to interpret the contract. We do not know actually what was the contract between the defendants and Graham & Co., nor do we know what passed between them in the way of correspondence, or what shipping documents there were. They have not been put in. We merely have to construe the contract in the light of its own words and the circumstances that have been mentioned. It does not help us that both the parties have at different times attributed quite different meanings to the contract, and in the case which has been argued before us they do not seem, especially the defendants, to rely on the meaning which they originally gave to the contract. This certainly is rather to be regretted, when we remember that the contract is supposed to express the intention of those who are parties to it; and if those who are parties to it are either so unwilling to disclose their true intention or so uncertain about it that they cannot be consistent in the intentions they assert, there must be some little difficulty in arriving at the real meaning. Undoubtedly that is so. We have to make the best we can of the material before us.

The position, however, when reached, is simple; though it may be difficult to arrive at it. If there was an absolute contract for sale, or if there was an absolute contract for sale subject to one condition, which was that the goods which the defendants had bought from Graham & Co. should arrive, then the plaintiffs are entitled to say: "You agreed to sell us certain goods. Every condition provided for has been fulfilled. But you have not given us the goods." In that case they would be entitled to damages. But if the contract was not a contract absolute for sale but was based on a mutual understanding that the goods which were to be offered to the plaintiffs were the goods which Graham & Co. were to send to the defendants, then if the plaintiffs refuse to receive the goods, though they may be perfectly right in so doing, they are not entitled to damages, because everything contemplated between the parties has then been fulfilled. It would be possible to occupy a very considerable amount of time by analysing the contract sentence by sentence but I am reluctant to do that; and I think I can express my conclusion sufficiently clearly, perhaps more clearly, without doing it. The contract is not one in common form. It was a contract entered into to meet very peculiar circumstances. Those circumstances were the commercial circumstances of September of the year 1917, and the commerce with which we are concerned was a commerce between England and India. It is, therefore, necessary to recall that in September 1917 England was only emerging from the most severe period of submarine peril and that the effects of the war on commerce, manufacture and trade generally had reached, although not the highest pitch of inconvenience, a very high pitch of inconvenience indeed. It is only necessary to remember these things to understand that traders, if they were, as they are supposed to be, sensible men, would make their terms, with a full understanding of the extraordinary risks involved in bringing to completion the arrangements they embarked upon. Like the Judge, the present Chief Justice, who tried the case on the judgment in which this particular case was settled, I feel quite certain that no sensible commercial man could at that period have entered into a contract of the nature the plaintiffs ascribe to this particular one. It seems to me, and on this point I really do not feel a shadow of a doubt, that what the parties intended, what they both had in contemplation, and what they intended the written contract to show, was an intention that the defendants should offer to the plaintiffs nineteen bales out of those which Graham & Co. were sending to them; and that the bales should be as near the description stated in the contract as possible. I dare say the contract contemplated that if the plaintiffs were quite justly dissatisfied with a tender of goods on the ground that the goods were nowhere near the description contained in the contract, then they might repudiate the bargain altogether. But I feel perfectly certain that neither of the parties ever contemplated for a moment that there should follow, on a repudiation of that kind, any right on the part of the plaintiffs to recover damages.

This opinion I have reached on a very careful consideration of the words of the contract and of the uncertainties they so clearly imply, in the light of the known circumstance of the time.

I think the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

MARTEN, J.—This is an appeal in substance, though not in form, from the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice in Suit No. 15 of 1919. The decision is in the nature of a demurrer, that is to say, that admitting all the facts stated in the plaint the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover the damages they claim. The formal issue, which is not in the paper book but which was No. 1 (a) in the Suit No. 15 of 1919, and which by agreement between the parties in the Court below was also to be raised in the present case, is as follows:—

“Whether on a proper construction of the contract the plaintiffs are entitled to any damages in the event of the goods contracted for failing to arrive.”

The particular contract sued on in this case is not in the paper book, that is to say, the official translation is not in the paper book. We have an official translation of the contract in the other suit but not in this one. However, it was in evidence in the Court below, and we have obtained for our own use a copy of this official translation.

Now, it is quite clear that the goods contracted to be sold were ginned goods.

The goods which have been tendered to the defendants are unginned goods. The plaintiffs plead in effect that these were not the contract goods. They say in paragraph 3:—

“The defendants having failed to deliver the contract goods and having insisted upon the plaintiffs accepting goods different to the contract goods.”

Then that is treated as a breach of contract for which the plaintiffs claim damages. The decision of the learned Judge in Suit No. 15 is that if that is so then the condition precedent in this contract, viz., the arrival of the goods, was never fulfilled and, therefore, the contract was at an end.

The point, therefore, which arises for our decision, is: Was the arrival in Bombay of ginned goods of this description a condition precedent of the contract?

Before passing to the contract, I will say that at the trial of the action it suited neither party to take this point. The plaintiffs wanted damages. The defendants, on the other hand, wanted the plaintiffs to accept the goods with an allowance of Rs. 1-6-0, the goods admittedly being off sample. At the trial they agreed that the case was governed by the decision in Suit No. 15 and that a decree for the defendants should be taken accordingly. In effect, therefore, the decision of the learned Judge was that they were both wrong, and that the contract was at an end.

Now, there are several expressions in this contract which may import words of contingency. The expressions are:—“Goods which are to arrive,” “to be delivered as and when the same may be received,” “to be delivered on the safe arrival of the steamer,” and “if the goods to arrive come late the purchaser is to take delivery of the same.” On the somewhat similar contract that he had before him the view of the learned Chief Justice was as follows:—

“It seems to me that the only construction that can be put on these words is that they mean that the seller has contracted that he will only give delivery when the goods do arrive and that if the goods did not arrive at all, then he could not give delivery and there would be no liability put upon him to pay damages for their non-arrival. That seems to me to be the plain grammatical sense of those words.

TRIBHOVANDAS NAROTTAMDAS v. NAGINDAS VIJBHUKANDAS.

And, as a matter of fact, I cannot imagine any person who had indented for goods from England or any other part of the world abroad contracting in any other form, considering the numerous chances there then were of the non-arrival of the goods within the stipulated period; supposing the ship had been sunk, is it conceivable that under the contract the plaintiffs could have claimed damages?"

In the present case there is an additional clause which was not in the contract in Suit No. 15 and which apparently was not brought to the attention of the learned Judge. I refer to the words "to be delivered on the safe arrival of the steamer." Having regard to those words, the case of Hale v. Rawson (1) might afford some argument that the contingency, the parties had in view, was the safe arrival of the steamer and not merely the safe arrival of the goods. It was put to Counsel for the appellants whether he contended that the contract was in all events an absolute one. He admitted, and I think he was bound to make that admission, that at any rate the contract was contingent on the safe arrival of the steamer. It was then put to him: Supposing the goods were never shipped in England, what then? Counsel answered that as then advised it would probably be that the vendor in that event would not be liable for the goods, because, as Counsel said, you cannot tell about the arrival of the steamer until the goods are shipped on the steamer. If you get to that point, it seems to me that it is only a comparatively small step to go from the case where no goods are shipped to the case where goods of a different description from the contract are shipped. It is not a case here of ginned goods, say slightly damaged by sea-water, or some bales damaged by sea-water, being tendered. It was the case of ginned goods and unginned goods, and the amount of the allowance that the defendants were willing to give shows the substantial difference between these two classes of goods.

Personally, on the construction alone, I respectfully agree with what the Chief Justice has stated in case No. 15 of 1919, and I think that what he there stated applies to the present case.

Now, this being my opinion on the construction of the contract apart from authority, is there any authority which prevents my taking that view? I think not, and that on the contrary such authority as there is tends to support the above view. This type of contract—I may describe it as a "goods to arrive contract"—came into operation in Bombay to a large extent during the war. It may have arisen because of the great desire to get goods of any description and at any time from England. Contracts in this form have given rise, so far as I am aware, to a great deal of trouble in Bombay, and it is not surprising to find that there is really very little authority on this class of contracts. I can only express the hope that the Bombay merchants will modify this type of contract and will with the aid of Counsel and their Merchants' Associations settle some common form of contract which will be free from the ambiguities which have led to the present and other litigation.

Turning then to such authority as one can find, perhaps the nearest statement on the point is that in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XXV, page 144. There it is stated in the note (g):—

"Where there is a contract for the sale of goods to arrive, or 'on arrival,' in the absence of terms creating such a warranty, the seller does not warrant the arrival of the goods, but the contract is on both sides contingent on their arrival, and when a particular ship is named, contingent both on the arrival of the ship in the ordinary course, and within the time stated, if any, and on the goods being on board; where there is a warranty that the goods are in a particular ship, the contract is subject to the single contingency of the arrival of the ship."

There are a considerable number of cases there referred to, but I think Counsel agree that there is no case precisely on all fours with the one we have to deal with.

Then, in Benjamin on Sale, Fifth Edition, pages 586 and 587, it is stated as follows:—

"It appears from this review of the HAR GOPAL v. RAM RICHPAL.

decisions that contracts of this character may be classified as follows:—

"1. Where the language is that goods are sold 'on arrival per ship A. or ex ship A.' or 'to arrive per ship A. or ex ship A.' (for these two expressions mean precisely the same thing), it imports a double condition precedent, viz., that the ship named shall arrive, and that the goods sold shall be on board on her arrival.

"2. The language of the contract may, however, show that the words 'arrival' or 'to arrive' are used only in connection with the goods. In such a case this is only a single condition precedent, viz., the arrival of the goods. And semble that 'to be shipped', or 'on shipment per ship A on arrival', or 'to arrive,' import such a single condition."

Then No. 5:—

"Where the sale describes the expected cargo to be of a particular description, as '400 tons Aracan Neerensie rice,' and the cargo turns out on arrival to be rice of a different description, the condition precedent is not fulfilled, and neither party is bound by the bargain."

It seems to me that the 5th proposition comes rather close to the present case. What was sold were admittedly ginned goods. What arrived were a different description, viz., unginned goods. According to the passage just cited, the result is that neither party is bound by the bargain.

After giving my best consideration to this case, I am of opinion that the judgment in the Court below was correct, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

There is one point I should mention, to shew it has not been overlooked. The ground on which the defendant succeeded was not expressly pleaded; but, I think, having regard to the issues which were raised by agreement, that it must be taken that all such amendments were made in the pleadings as were necessary for the determination of the issue on which the case was decided, viz., No. 1 A.

The legality of a decree cannot be questioned in execution. The remedy of the aggrieved party is by a regular suit to set aside the decree as illegal.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th October 1918, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Jhajjar, dated the 2nd July 1918, refusing to give possession of land to the decree-holder.

Lala Shamir Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gullu Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant applied for the execution of a decree providing for payment in annual instalments, in default of which the possession of land was to be handed over to the decree-holder as owner. The lower Appellate Court has held that this, being a provision for conditional sale, was null and void in accordance with Debi Sahai v. Ramji Lal (1) and was, therefore, inoperative. Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred.

Counsel for the appellant has cited numerous authorities that an executing Court cannot question the legality of a decree, e.g., Musammatt Mehr Nishan v. Nawabzada Muhammad Kazim Ali Khan (2), Maharaja of Bhartpur v. Rani Konno Der (3) and Radha Mal v. Imam Bakhsh (4). These are clear authorities in his favour. Debi Sahai v. Ramji Lal (1) relied on by the respondents is in no way in point. In that case the judgment debtor instituted a regular suit to set aside an illegal decree, a remedy which is open to the judgment-debtor in this case. I accept the appeal, but as the question whether the decree is otherwise executable was not disposed of Hindu Law—Minor—Mortgage executed by guardian—Recital in deed of payment of previous mortgages, whether binding on minor—Necessity, proof of.

A mortgage deed was executed by the guardian of a minor on behalf of himself and the minor, it being stated that, the consideration of the mortgage had been credited towards two prior unregistered mortgage deeds, which were neither filed nor proved:

Held, that the mere recital of the existence of the two prior mortgages would not bind persons other than the executant and that it was essential to prove that the mortgage was executed for family necessity and for the benefit of the minor on whose behalf the guardian purported to have acted.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 4th December 1918, upholding the decree of the Munsif, Dalman, dated the 19th August 1918.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rajeshwari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure brought by the plaintiff-appellant in respect of a mortgage, purporting to have been executed by Raghunandan on behalf of himself and as guardian of his minor brother, Sada Sheo, on the 25th May 1905. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 350, the whole of which was stated to have been credited towards two prior unregistered mortgages held by the plaintiff-appellant, one purporting to have been executed by Bisheshar, Ram Charan and Musammatt Janki for Rs. 50 on Bhadon Sudi 5, 1949, and the other by Bisheshar, Musammatt Janki and Raghunandan for Rs. 15 on Aghan Sudi 1, 1953. The plaintiff-appellant did not file any of those prior mortgage deeds or prove their existence. He sought to enforce the mortgage by conditional sale after the death of Raghunandan but was opposed by Sada Sheo, who has since attained majority, on the ground that Raghunandan had no authority to bind him or to make a mortgage of the joint family property without legal necessity.

The Courts below dismissed the claim. Their finding is that the plaintiff-appellant had failed to establish that the previous debts stated to have been credited in the mortgage deed in suit actually existed or that the consideration was taken for the benefit of Sada Sheo or for any legal necessity binding on the family.

The learned Counsel, who appears for the plaintiff-appellant, candidly admits that his client has not been able to produce any evidence about the existence of the alleged prior mortgage bonds, beyond the recital thereof in the deed in suit and a statement in the registration endorsement about their production before the Sub-Registrar. He suggests that the bonds have been mislaid; but the plaintiff who was examined in the suit said nothing about their loss. The mere recital of the existence of two mortgages in a subsequent deed executed by Raghunandan does not, as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Lal v. Inda Kunwar (1) and Shrinivasdas v. Meherbai (2), bind other persons. It was not enough for him to prove that Raghunandan had executed the mortgage deed in suit. It was incumbent on him to show that that mortgage was executed by him for family necessity and for the benefit of the minor on whose behalf he purported to act. On both those points he gave no evidence. The Courts below were, therefore, justified in holding that the defendant respondent Sada Sheo was not bound by the deed of mortgage executed by his brother.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 187—Failure to assist Salt Inspector in making search—Offence—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 103, cl. (2), scope of.

Clause (2) of section 103, Criminal Procedure Code, suggests that while the rendering of assistance to a public servant in making a search is imperative on the persons called upon to assist, they are not compellable to attend Court to give evidence without a summons in that behalf.

Failure, therefore, to assist a Salt Inspector in making a search, after being requisitioned by the latter to do so is an offence punishable under section 187 of the Penal Code.

Ramaya Naika, In the matter of, 26 M. 419; 1 Weir 136 (F. B.), distinguished.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court under section 433 of the Criminal Procedure Code by the Acting Sessions Judge, Ganjam, in his letter dated the 13th October 1919.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown, referred to Ramaya Naika, In the matter of (1). Section 103 of the Criminal Procedure Code only exempts the person called on to assist a public officer from giving evidence in Court without a summons. But the failure to assist the Salt Inspector in making the search is an offence under section 187, Indian Penal Code.

ORDER.—We are unable to agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the present case is covered by Ramaya Naika, In the matter of (1). What was decided by the Full Bench in that case was that the words 'assistance' in the first portion of the section must be read as being ejusdem generis with the same word occurring in the latter portion of the section. In the present case, the accused were called upon to assist the Salt Inspector in making a search. Under section 103 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he is authorised to call upon villagers to assist him in the execution of that duty. The last sentence of clause 2 of section 103 suggests that, while the rendering of assistance in making the search is imperative on the persons called upon to assist, they are not compellable by the Inspector to attend the Court to give evidence without a summons in that behalf. Therefore, the duty for discharging which the accused were requisitioned by the Inspector was ejusdem generis with that mentioned in the second clause: Consequently, the refusal of the accused to assist the Inspector is an offence punishable under section 187, Indian Penal Code. The conviction is, therefore, right. The papers will be returned.

Criminal appeal against the order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, Gaya, dated the 27th June 1919.

Messrs. Sami, Nand Keolyar and Gour Chandra Pal, for the Appellants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Dipan Singha has been convicted under section 143 and section 304, Indian Penal Code, and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for five years, and to pay a fine of Rs. 200. The other appellants have been convicted under sections 148 and 304/143, Indian Penal Code, and have been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 each. The Assessors were of opinion that the appellants were not guilty, one of them being of opinion that the case against them was "a malicious and false one."

Having anxiously considered all the evidence in the case and the able arguments that were advanced before me by Mr. Nandkeolyar on behalf of the appellants and the learned Assistant Government Advocate on behalf of the Crown, I am of opinion that the conviction of the appellants cannot be sustained and must, therefore, be set aside.

It is unnecessary to recapitulate the facts of the case, which will be found fully stated in the judgment of the Assistant Sessions Judge. It is sufficient to say that the case for the prosecution is that the appellants, known as the Baboos of Parasia, were building a new house at Parasia and that on the morning of the alleged occurrence, namely, 16th of May last, Brahmadeo Singha visited the house of Deodhary and asked him to go and construct the thatch of the new house which the Baboos were building. The prosecution alleges that the Baboos were exacting forced labour from their tenants without payment of any wages, that Deodhary on being asked to contribute labour that morning refused to go, whereupon Brahmadeo returned to his village but promptly came back with a mob, of which the appellants were members, and inflicted severe injuries on Deodhary and his brothers, Bishundhary and Sheodhary, from the effect of which Deodhary ultimately died.

There are eleven eye-witnesses to the alleged occurrence, and if the mere numerical strength of the witnesses were to be taken as establishing beyond doubt the fact to be proved, then I have no doubt that the guilt of the appellants has been completely established in this case. (But in my opinion the direct evidence of the witnesses must be tested and weighed in the same manner, whatever the numerical strength of the witnesses may be, and the conscience of the Court must be satisfied as to the guilt of the accused persons before they can be convicted of any crime. "It can", says Lord Macaulay, "by no means be laid down as a general maxim that the assertion of two witnesses is more convincing to the mind than the assertion of one witness. The story told by one witness may be in itself probable; the story told by two witnesses may be extravagant. The story told by one witness may be uncontradicted; the story told by two witnesses may be contradicted by four witnesses. The story told by one witness may be corroborated by a crowd of circumstances; the story told by two witnesses may have no such corroboration.) The one witness may be Tillotson or Ken, the two witnesses may be Oates and Bedfoe." (Cited in Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, 6th Edition, page 34.)

I have, therefore, to examine whether the story told by these eleven witnesses is a probable one, whether it is corroborated by the admitted facts and circumstances of the case or whether it is contradicted by testimony, direct and indirect, which is at least as unimpeachable as that furnished by these eleven witnesses. If the evidence furnished by the eleven witnesses stands the test, I am bound to act on it; if it does not, then the fact that eleven persons have sworn to the guilt of the appellants will not weigh with me.

Is the story then a probable one? The story is that the appellants had for days exacted forced labour from their tenants until the morning of the occurrence and that the tenants had rendered such services without protest. It is permissible then to enquire into the history of the relationship of the Parasia Baboos with their tenants for the purpose of finding out whether it is probable that the latter would render such services to the Baboos. Evidence discloses that there have been numerous proceedings in Civil and Revenue Courts between the Parasia Baboos and their tenants for the purpose of recovery of rents. In these proceedings most of the prosecution witnesses were parties and Daodhary, the deceased, was the leading spirit amongst the tenants. In other words, the tenants were refractory tenants. The learned Judge says in one place that the disputes regarding realisation of rents ceased in 1323 F. S. (1916) and in another place that they ceased in 1914. Neither of these findings is supported by the evidence on the record. Exhibit Q13 shows that there was an order for division of crops under section 69, Bengal Tenancy Act, against Daodhary and others in 1917, and there is absolutely no evidence that the tenants peacefully paid the rent in 1918. The question, therefore, arises whether Daodhary and others, who were fully alive to their interests as tenants and knew of every procedure by which they might defeat or delay the just claims of the landlords, would submit without any protest to the authorities to the exaction of forced labour from them. In my opinion the story is inherently improbable and the evidence must, therefore, be subjected to careful scrutiny before it can be acted upon to the detriment of any of the accused persons.

There is one aspect of the case which makes the story still more improbable.

The status of Daodhary and his brothers was not that of day labourers. They are Kashtkars and not Kamias, and it is from the class known as Kamias that labour is secured by the landlords. There is evidence that they were in a position to pay off Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 to remove the attachments of crops. They own 25 or 27 bighas of land, drive two ploughs, have bullocks and buffaloes and own two Kitis of tiled houses. The learned Assistant Government Advocate points out that they cannot be said to be substantial tenants, but the question whether they are substantial tenants or not is, in my opinion, irrelevant. The fact, the paramount fact, is that they are Kashtkars and not Kamias; it is, in my opinion, highly improbable that they could be called upon to contribute labour free or otherwise to their landlords.

It seems to me that the whole case of the prosecution must depend upon the story of forced labour. The prosecution has examined four witnesses on this point, P. W. No. 1, P. W. No. 2, P. W. No. 3 and P. W. No. 7. They agree only in this that, though they received no wages for their labour, they received some Sattu every day. But they differ as to the quantity they received. P. W. No. 1 says that they received one seer of Sattu a day, P. W. No. 2 says that they received half a seer a day, P. W. No. 3 is silent on this point and P. W. No. 7 says that they received $1\frac{1}{2}$ seers a day. It will be seen, therefore, that it is not a consistent story which they tell. There is another matter which must be considered in this connection. I cannot believe that the prosecution did not know that the question of forced labour was the critical question in the case. That is the immediate cause which it put forward for the alleged occurrence.

If the cause is found to be absent, it must necessarily throw a great deal of discredit on the evidence of the alleged occurrence. Yet on this vital issue the prosecution examined only four witnesses, all of them being members of the family of Daodhary. The learned Judge says that P. W. No. 7, who is one of the witnesses on this point, is not a relative, but his finding on this point, as on many other points, is in the teeth of what the prosecution witnesses have themselves said. P. W. No. 1 on the question of relationship said: "My father had two brothers, Jhumak and Nemi. Lal Behari witness" (that is to say, P. W. No. 7) "is son of Jhumak." There cannot be any doubt, therefore, that P. W. No. 7 is a relative of the deceased, since it is admitted that the deceased was the uncle's son of P. W. No. 1. The other witnesses on this point are P. W. Nos. 1, 2 and 3. P. W. Nos. 2 and 3 are brothers of the deceased, who in his lifetime led the tenants against the landlords. So far as P. W. No. 1 is concerned, the learned Judge himself says of him that he had suffered more wrongs from the Parasia Baboos than any other tenants in the village. These are the only witnesses as to the exaction of forced labour by the Parasia Baboos, which is alleged to be the immediate cause of the occurrence. The learned Judge has recorded a finding that a large number of labourers was employed in the construction of the house for a considerable period. And the question that at once arises is, why has nobody been examined on this vital issue outside the family sphere of influence. The evidence of the investigating officer is important on this point. He said as follows:—"The complainants and the prosecution witness had stated before me that labourers from Karma used to go from Karma to Parasia for working on the new house. They neither named any person as going there or said that they had themselves been going there. Trilochan (that is to say, P. W. No. 1) did not say that he or his son work on the new house." Here is an important issue in the case which, as I hold, Trilochan and the others must have known to be of paramount importance in this case, and yet no opportunity was given to the Police to investigate the truth of that matter. The Police evidence must throw considerable doubt on the testimony of Trilochan himself, who says in Court that he and his son were among those from whom labour was exacted by the Parasia Baboos.

The falsity of the story is further demonstrated by a piece of evidence which has not been considered by the learned Judge at all. The story is that Deodhary was wanted on that fateful morning for working on the Chappar of the new house. Now, if the house was not ready for the Chappar, the story must necessarily be false. Here again the evidence of the investigating officer is conclusive on the point. He stated as follows: "I examined the house under construction in Parasia. One storey of it had been completed and the earthwork was going on. I found the roof of the ground storey was complete with beams, rafters and mud and the walls of the next storey was going on. When I saw the new house, I found only two layers above the wall of the first storey, that is below four feet." It is absurd to suggest that a Chappar would be wanted for walls which were below four feet. The learned Assistant Government Advocate does not suggest that the house was ready for the Chhappar on that day, but he argues that there was nothing to prevent them from constructing the Chhappar before the walls were ready for it. The argument is an ingenious one, but is inadmissible on the evidence in the case. It is the case of the prosecution that the house was completely ready for the Chhappar, and the learned Judge himself complained of the attempt on the part of the defence to alter the character of the new house from a finished one to an unfinished one still in the process of construction. P. W. No. 1, who stopped work, according to his evidence, two or three days before the day of occurrence, says that the wall work was nearly complete when he left. P. W. No. 7 is more definite. According to his evidence he worked up to the day previous to the day of occurrence, and he says that when he left "the Dharan and Barahi were put on the wall of the new house and the bamboo structure was also placed." The learned Judge has ignored the evidence of the investigating officer and has relied on these witnesses for the conclusion that the house was a finished one, but I am unable to take that view myself. On a consideration of all these circumstances, I hold that the prosecution has not established that the Parasia Baboos were in the habit of exacting forced labour from their tenants or that on the morning of the date of occurrence, they or any of them went to Deodhary and called upon him to contribute labour for the construction of the house.

If this be so, then the prosecution has undoubtedly made a false case as to an essential part of its story, and the question is, can it secure the conviction of the accused persons on what remains of its evidence? In considering the rest of the evidence, the first point that strikes me is the undoubted delay that took place in lodging information at the Thana. Now, speaking for myself, I would not have, in the circumstances of the case, attached any importance to the delay in giving information, but for the explanation which the prosecution has offered for the delay.

When an explanation is offered, I must examine the explanation and if I find that it is unacceptable, I must necessarily view the delay with suspicion. Now what is the explanation? The explanation is that soon after the occurrence Jaggan, Chaukidar of Karma, came to the scene of occurrence and was taking the injured persons to the Thana, when they were met at village Askhan by the accused persons who forced them to return to Karma. I cannot accept this explanation. In the first place, this is not mentioned in the first information at all. In the second place, Jaggan Chaukidar who is admittedly alive has not been called to support this story. The learned Judge's comment on the failure to examine Jaggan Chaukidar is remarkable. He says: "If the story had been a concocted one, he would have in all probability been brought to assert it." I cannot assent to this proposition. I will not assume that Jaggan Chaukidar, if he had been called, would willingly have given false evidence in the case, but I will draw the only presumption which the law allows me, namely, that he would not have supported the case of the prosecution if he had been called as a witness in its behalf. In the third place, it is admitted that the appellants are the proprietors of village Askhan and have a Cutchery house there. At any rate it is within the sphere of influence of the appellants. It is also admitted that there was a shorter route to the Thana outside the sphere of influence of the appellants. It is incredible that the Chaukidar, with a man so injured that he had not uttered a single word since the blow was struck, should deliberately choose a route through the sphere of influence of the appellants when a shorter and a safer route was available to him. The comment on behalf of the appellants of course is that the whole incident is manufactured and that the prosecution was obliged to choose the longer route for the purpose of its evidence, as the essential part of the story is that the party was overtaken by the appellants and forced to return. The learned Assistant Government Advocate complained that the defence should have asked for an explanation from the witnesses why they chose a longer route and he argued that as it failed to do so, the argument founded on it is an inadmissible one. But the only person from whom the defence could have got an explanation is Jaggan Chaukidar who arranged the journey and was in the charge of the party, and as the prosecution failed to call him, I do not think that the complaint of the Assistant Government Advocate is a just one. I hold that the explanation offered by the prosecution for the delay in giving information is an untrue one and cannot be accepted.

I have, therefore, to consider why a false story was deliberately set up by the prosecution in order to explain the delay in giving information. And in this connection it is necessary to examine the defence theory. The case of the appellants is that they know nothing of the alleged occurrence and had no share or part in it and that the institution of the criminal proceedings against them is the outcome of the hostility of the tenants who for years fought them in Civil, Criminal and Revenue Courts. This is the case of the appellants. Apart from this definite case which they set up, they have a theory as to the injuries found on the person of Deodhary. This will be found in the fifteenth paragraph of their written statement which runs as follows:—

"That these accused do not know anything about the injuries found on the person of Deodhary, but the rumour about the locality is that a day before the alleged date of occurrence there was a family quarrel among the brothers of Deodhary and others, in which their respective partisans also took part and words led to blows. The matter at that time appears to have been settled or tried to be hushed up. But next day when the condition of Deodhary became probably serious, they with the advice of Babu Lal Behari Lal and others, the enemies of these accused, concocted a case implicating all the male members of the different families of Parasia landlords, leaving out only small infants two or three years old. The rumour is strengthened by the fact that Fauzdar Ahir's defence before the Police was to this very effect and some witnesses also were examined by the Sub-Inspector who proved it affirmatively, but the Police, evidently in collusion with Lal Beharee Lal and others, suppressed these witnesses and Fauzdar being not tried in this Court, these accused are unable to examine the said witnesses, as they are on terms of very strong enmity with these accused and other Parasia landlords.

BRAHAMDEO SINGHA v. EMPEROR.

If the Court will be so inclined, they may be examined as Court witnesses."

The learned Judge is of opinion that there is an inconsistency in the case set up by the defence. "Even the present defence," says the learned Judge, "is not without an inconsistency. The main defence of the accused now is that the story of the prosecution is a concoction and the outcome of hostile relations between themselves on the one hand and their seven co-sharer landlords, the informant, Trilochan Gope, the Goala tenants of Karma and Lal Behari Lal, on the other side. In stating their defence they add an allegation of a quarrel between Deodhary and his three brothers pretending to give it a minor position in the story."

With every desire to understand the learned Judge, I fail to see where the inconsistency is. I am bound to say that the whole judgment is vitiated by a special pleading on behalf of the prosecution which ought to find no place in a document so sacred as the judgment of the Court.

It is suggested by the appellants that the delay in giving information was due to the fact that they were unwilling to bring trouble on their brother, but when the condition of Deodhary became serious, they made up their minds to implicate their old enemies, the landlords, and implicate they did every adult member of the appellants' family. It is, therefore, material to consider whether there is any foundation for the theory put forward by the appellants. The Police undoubtedly thought it necessary to investigate the matter and the result of that investigation was that Fulman Ahir, the step-brother of the deceased, a person believed to have inflicted the injuries on Deodhary, could not be found in the village, though search was made for him. The investigating officer was informed that Fulman was a mad person roving about here and there and was not in the village for a long time and that his whereabouts were unknown.

This information completely satisfied the investigating officer. But the investigating officer admits that he examined various witnesses who completely supported the defence theory. His evidence on this point is of importance. He said as follows: "On the 21st June the accused produced the defence witnesses, but did not cite them. My diary does not show by whom the defence witnesses were produced or if they were produced by any accused at all. None of the accused pointed out any of the witnesses as his. I took the statements of Sohorai, Huesani, Sheodhary, Sorablak, Sheobalak and Nemdhary. These witnesses supported the defence that there was a quarrel between brothers. These persons asserted themselves to be eye-witnesses." The result of this evidence is that no less than six persons supported the defence theory, although they were not produced by the accused persons. These witnesses said that they were eye-witnesses to the occurrence which was one between the brothers. The question at once arises why did not the Public Prosecutor examine them? The weighty words of Wilson, J., in the case of Empress v. Dhunno Kazi (1), may be cited in this connection. "The only legitimate object of a prosecution is to secure not a conviction, but that justice be done. The prosecutor is not therefore, free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court. He is bound to produce all the evidence in his favour directly bearing upon the charge. It is prima facie his duty, accordingly, to call those witnesses who prove their connection with the transactions in question, and also that must be able to give important information. The only thing that can relieve the prosecutor from calling such witnesses is the reasonable belief that, if called, they would not speak the truth. If such witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown (and the mere fact of their being summoned for the defence seems to us by no means necessarily a sufficient reason), the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution." This decision disposes of the only argument that was advanced before me in support of the conduct of the prosecution in not calling them. It was urged that they were defence witnesses who, if called, would have supported the defence case and that it was no part of the duty of the prosecution to call them. I cannot assent to this proposition.

It is the duty of the prosecutor to call every witness who can throw any light on the inquiry, whether they support the prosecution theory or the defence theory. It is for the Court to choose which theory is correct, not for the prosecution. I strongly protest against a doctrine which would reduce criminal trials into a battle of tactics between the prosecution and the defence. As Sir Lawrence Jenkins said in the case of Ram Ranjan Roy v. Emperor (2), "that purpose", that is to say the purpose of criminal trial, "is not to support at all costs a theory, but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police, but the Crown, and his duty should be discharged by him fairly and fearlessly, and with a full sense of the responsibility that attaches to his position. The guilt or innocence of the accused is to be determined by the Tribunals appointed by law and not according to the tastes of any one else." I must not be understood, however, as suggesting that it is the duty of the prosecutors to call as witnesses persons who may support a particular case that the defence may set up, a case of alibi, for instance, or a case of right of private defence. There is, in the argument of the Assistant Government Advocate, a fundamental misconception of the meaning conveyed by the words "defence case." A defence case is that which is set up definitely and of the knowledge of the accused person as a ground of defence. The only defence which the accused persons set up in this case is that they knew nothing of the occurrence and had no part or share in it. They do indeed suggest that there was a fight between Deodhary and his brothers, in the course of which Deodhary received the injuries from which he ultimately died. But this is the theory which they advanced, not of their personal knowledge but as a result of what they had heard from others, and only to explain the injuries which were undoubtedly inflicted on Deodhary. I cannot assent to the argument that this was part of their case, which they had to establish to meet the criminal charges against them. The Police in the course of their investigation did examine persons who supported this theory and who definitely stated that they were eye-witnesses of the occurrence. I hold that it was the duty of the prosecution to call these witnesses and as it has failed to do so, I am entitled to, and do in fact, draw an inference adverse to the prosecution.

(1) 8 O. 121 at p. 124; 10 O. L. R. 151.

BRAHAMDEO SINGHA v. EMPEROR.

It is, therefore, a heavy burden which the prosecution has taken on itself to establish the guilt of the accused persons, and in my opinion it has not discharged that burden by developing the case from time to time. An examination of the first Sahana, the second Sahana and the first information will make good my criticism. The first Sahana is a colourless document. It mentions only four persons as having been members of the party that assaulted Deodhary and his brothers, but assigns no definite part to any of them. The second Sahana is a little more definite, in that it adds certain other names to the list of accused persons furnished by Trilochan and assigns a definite part to Deonandan who was, however, discharged by the committing Magistrate, but none to Deepan Singha, who was the principal accused in the Court below and who is alleged to have dealt the fatal blow to Deodhary. The first information, however, assigns a leading part to Deepan Singha and gives the whole story in all its details. It is remarkable that Trilochan is the informant on whose information the first Sahana as well as the first information were drawn up. I find it difficult to reconcile the statements made in these documents, and I attach great importance to the fact that no definite part was assigned to Deepan Singha in the first two documents.

There is another important matter that must be considered in connection with the first information, and it is this: the names of the witnesses were not given in the first information. The actual statement in the first information is as follows:—"The names of witnesses will come to light in the course of investigation." Trilochan has sworn in Court that he did give the names of the witnesses to the Sub-Inspector who recorded the first information, and the learned Judge has believed this evidence. If there was nothing in the first information itself to indicate either that he did give the names of the witnesses or that he did not, I might have accepted the finding of the learned Judge on this point, but I cannot do so having regard to the definite statement made in the first information which was read over to Trilochan and admitted by him to be correct.

We are now in a position to estimate the value of the evidence given by the eleven eye-witnesses. Out of these eleven witnesses, nine are relatives of Deodbary the person who led the tenants against the landlords. Most of these witnesses have themselves been parties to the litigation between the landlords and the tenants. Those that remain, namely, P. W. Nos. 4, 8 and 11, have also figured as tenants in all the rent suits. The story told by them is undoubtedly false as regards many important particulars, and I find it impossible to convict the appellants on what remains of their evidence. To take the evidence of Trilochan, I disbelieve his evidence as regards the incident connected with Jaggan Chaukidar and, having regard to the Sahana Exhibit No. 1, I do not believe that he saw that Deepan struck the fatal blow on Deodbary. I do not believe that he gave the names of the witnesses to the Sub Inspector, and having regard to the evidence of the investigating officer, I do not believe that he ever contributed any labour for the construction of the new house at Parasia. It is, in my opinion, impossible to rely on evidence of this character.

There is just one more circumstance to which I must refer. The learned Judge has throughout assumed that the appellants absconded after the alleged occurrence, and he says that this suggests an inference in favour of the prosecution. It is quite clear that no inference can at all be drawn until it has been established that they were wanted for the crime. The only fact which I find established is that they were not in the village when the investigating officer conducted his enquiry in the village. This, in my opinion, is not evidence of absconding. But the learned Judge says in one part of his judgment: "From the statement of Mosahib Singha, D W. No. 2, it appears that the accused knew the death of Deodbary immediately after it occurred and also the fact that they were wanted." This would undoubtedly be evidence of absconding, but I have searched the evidence of Mosahib Singha in vain for this statement. But the investigating officer, in answer to questions put by the Court, said as follows: "I met Mosahib Singha during the course of my enquiry. I enquired of him where the accused persons were and he informed me that the accused persons had absconded. I asked Mosahib who he was and he told me that he was the Gomasta of Deonandan Singh." This is hearsay evidence and is clearly inadmissible. It is a matter of great regret that the learned Judge should himself, by questions which he put, to which, therefore, no objection could be taken by anybody, have brought on the record a statement which cannot under any circumstances bind any of the appellants. The last question put by the learned Judge suggests that Mosahib, as the Gomasta of Deonandan Singh, could bind the appellants. The doctrine would be a remarkable one in a criminal trial. Without going, however, into the larger question, it is sufficient to say that Deonandan Singh was not an accused person before him and that it has not been established that Mosahib Singha was expressly or impliedly authorised to make the admission on behalf of the appellants. I find that the appellants surrendered as soon as the investigating officer received warrants for their arrest, and I am unable to agree with the learned Judge that they or any of them at all absconded.

Having examined the evidence in the case with great care and anxiety, I am unable to hold that the prosecution has established the guilt of any of the appellants. That being my opinion, I must allow these appeals, set aside the conviction and the sentences passed on the appellants and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Appeal allowed.

found in house occupied by several persons—Possession, determination of—Offence.

The mere fact that stolen property is found in a house in which the accused lived with his brothers, is not sufficient to establish that he retained such property in his possession or custody or to justify his conviction under section 411 of the Penal Code.

Where stolen property is found in a house occupied by several persons, it is not enough to show that the property was found in the house to convict a member of the family who may have had nothing to do with bringing or keeping it there.

Criminal application against the order of the Sessions Judge, Lucknow, dated the 12th April 1919, upholding the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Lucknow, dated the 19th March 1919.

Mr. R. F. Bahadurji, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Bashir Ahmad Khan, has been convicted of an offence under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months. It appears that a cash box was stolen from the room of a school building on the night of the 10th February last. It contained Rs. 31-4-6 and some papers. It was found that a person named Mohammad Mir Khan had visited the school the same evening. The Sub-Inspector went to search the house in which he was living. That house was occupied by him and his two brothers, Bashir Ahmad Khan and Nasir Ahmad Khan. The Sub-Inspector met Bashir Ahmad Khan outside the house. He asked him whether there was any box inside. He replied in the negative. He then said that he would search the house and went in and found the box in a room in the upper storey and a bundle containing some papers.

Mohammad Mir Khan made a confession, admitting that he and another person named Shafqat had stolen the box and taken it to a house, called Hamid Manzil, belonging to Mohammad Yusuf and removed the cash contained therein. He further admitted that he removed the box next morning to the house in which he himself lived with his brothers. The learned Magistrate who tried the case convicted Mohammad Mir Khan and Bashir Ahmad Khan.

The evidence against Bashir Ahmad Khan is, however, clearly insufficient to prove that the property was retained by him or was in his possession. All that is said is that when the Sub-Inspector asked him, he denied that any box was inside the house and that when the Police went in to make a search, he called out that the Police were coming to search the house. Bashir Ahmad Khan does not deny that he had noticed the box in the morning. He states that he had asked Mohammad Mir Khan whose box it was and that Mohammad Mir Khan had told him that it had belonged to a friend of his. It does not, however, appear that Bashir Ahmad Khan took it in his charge. His denial before the Sub-Inspector that Mohammad Mir Khan had brought any box may have been due to a desire to screen him from exposure or to an uncertainty in his mind as to whether the box he had noticed in the morning was the one about which the Police were making the inquiry. The possession or custody of the box has not been brought home to him. The mere fact that the box was found in the house in which he lived with his brothers is not enough to establish that he retained it in his possession or custody. Where stolen property is found in a house occupied by several persons, it is not enough to show that the property was found in the house to convict a member of the family, who may have had nothing to do with bringing or keeping it there.

The application is, therefore, allowed and the applicant, Bashir Ahmad Khan, acquitted of the offence charged. He will be set at liberty.

TULLA v. EMPEROR.

Complaint found to be false and frivolous or vexatious—Compensation, order for, legality of—"Frivolous", meaning of.

An order for the payment of compensation under section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code can be made in a case which is false as well as frivolous or vexatious.

"Frivolous" means "trifling" "silly", or "without due foundation."

Criminal revision of the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Nagpur, dated the 31st March 1919, in Criminal Case No. 1 of 1919.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The main ground urged on behalf of the present applicant is that the Magistrate having found the accusation made by the applicant to be a false one, it was not open to him to hold that it was frivolous and vexatious and that on the strength of the decisions in Ram Singh v. Mathura (1) and in Parsi Hajra v. Bandhi Dhanuk (2) as well as of the opinion of Prinsep, C. J., in the Full Bench case, Beni Madhub Kurmi v. Kumud Kumar Biswas (3), the present was a case where the order for compensation passed was illegal. I do not find it necessary, however, to admit this application for revision because I am in full agreement with the opinion of the majority of the Judges in Beni Madhub Kurmi v. Kumud Kumar Biswas (3), just quoted. It seems to me that the terms of the section are perfectly clear and that an order under section 250 for the payment of compensation can be made in a case which is false as well as frivolous or vexatious. I am unable to concur in the reasoning of Prinsep, C. J., in the case just quoted, and it seems to me that the four other Judges have taken a view which is unquestionably the right one. Moreover, it may be pointed out as regards Ram Singh v. Mathura (1), just quoted, that the facts of that case were very different. In it the complainant had alleged that he was kept in confinement for 3 days, while in the present case the charge was one of extortion on what would appear to have been a fantastic story that she had been put in fear that unless she paid Rs. 200, the corpse of her sister-in-law would not be allowed to be removed by any of the caste people. If the charge was found to be a false one, it was to my mind patently both a vexatious and a frivolous one. Frivolous may be described as meaning "trifling," "silly" or "without due foundation", and the charge in question would certainly, in my opinion, come within that term if it were false. I may point out moreover that in Emperor v. Bai Asha (4) Chandavarkar and Aston, JJ., have followed the decision in Beni Madhub Kurmi v. Kumud Kumar Biswas (3) and equally dissented from the earlier decision in Parsi Hajra v. Bandhi Dhanuk (2), on which reliance has been placed by Counsel for the applicant. The other so-called grounds of revision are not such as in my opinion call for any detailed discussion. The inferences drawn by the Magistrate from the evidence produced were very reasonable ones and there was ample cause for his holding that the complaint made by Jaina Bai was a false one. As regards the allegation that the amount of compensation ordered was excessive, I entirely disagree in view of the serious and repulsive nature of the charge made against the accused. The Magistrate's order in this connection would appear to have been a very proper one. The application for revision is accordingly dismissed.

Application dismissed.

TULLA v. EMPEROR.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Saharanpur.

FACTS appear from the following referring order :—

"Balloo, the applicant here, and Tulla, Mahabir and Shankar, the applicants in Revision No. 65, were convicted at the same trial. I, therefore, dispose of appeal and application together.

Balloo has been sentenced to six months under section 3 and two months under section 4 of the Gambling Act, eight months in all. The applicants have received non-appealable sentences under section 4.

The facts found in the case, which are proved by the evidence of Sub-Inspector Khuda Nur Khan, Muhammad Bakhsh, Mara and Imam-ud-din, are fully described in one of the opening paragraphs of the learned Magistrate's judgment. I concur in the learned Magistrate's findings.

There is no doubt that a dozen men were found gambling at 10 in the morning in the house of the appellant, Balloo. The appellant was sitting with the gamblers, and had beside him an earthen pot, in which were a quantity of pice aggregating Rs. 3-14-3 in value. Obviously, the odds are that this money represented the percentages so far accumulated for the benefit of the owner of the house. The assembly does not, on the face of it, appear to have been a mere friendly party of Balloo's assembled for a friendly gamble. The applicant's own Pleader indeed pointed out that one of his clients Mahabir has reason to be rather ill-disposed to Balloo than friendly with him. Had it been so, it was easy for any of the 12 accused persons to raise that plea. Not one, however, not even Balloo himself, made any such suggestion. Apart entirely, therefore, from the presumption which arises when a house is legally searched on a legal warrant issued under the Act, the circumstances leave, in my opinion, no reasonable doubt that the appellant's house was, under his own supervision, being used at the time when the Police raided it as a common gaming house.

The three applicants were obviously there for the purpose of gambling. No other possible reason for their presence appears; and as gambling was going on in the room where they were found, I have no doubt that they were taking part in it.

There is no direct evidence that Balloo was gambling but Rs. 40 which were found in a heap of fuel, having evidently been thrown there when the Police rushed in, are claimed by him, and are not likely to have formed part of his percentage. I have, therefore, no doubt that he was gambling with this money and he has been rightly convicted under both sections. Nor do I consider that there was any illegality in trying him under both sections in one trial.

The plea that there being a Police Inspector in Saharanpur the search could not legally be made by a Sub-Inspector, is, if there would otherwise be force in it, disposed of by the amendment introduced into paragraph 295 of the new Police Regulations.

All the applicants have been previously convicted, and have, therefore, been properly sentenced to imprisonment. The appellant Balloo has many previous convictions, and is clearly an incorrigible nuisance to the community. The only matter which calls for interference is the order of the learned Magistrate that "the money found on the spot and on the accused's persons will be confiscated."

The case of Maturwa v. Emperor (1), reported from this district in March last and which followed Emperor v. Tota (2), is clear authority against such an order.

The case, therefore, after taking any explanation which the learned Magistrate may wish to submit, will be reported to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the above order of confiscation be set aside. With this exception, I dismiss the appeal and the application."

JUDGMENT.—This case has been referred by the Sessions Judge of Saharanpur for the purpose of having an order passed by a Magistrate set aside. The Magistrate was dealing with a case under the Gambling Act and after convicting the persons who were accused before him, he made an order confiscating some of the money which was found in possession of the persons concerned. The Judge, I think, is right in saying that the law does not contemplate the confiscation of the money found on the person of the accused. He refers to a ruling of this Court, Maturwa v. Emperor (1). I accept the recommendation of the learned Judge and direct that the order of confiscation be set aside.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 236, 237, applicability of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 109, 363—Person charged with kidnapping, whether can be convicted of abetment of the offence.

Section 236, Criminal Procedure Code, which must control section 237 of the Code, only applies when from the evidence led by the prosecution it is doubtful which of the offences has been committed by the accused. But if the evidence which has been led by the prosecution leads to one result and one result only, it cannot possibly be said that it is doubtful which of the offences has been committed by the accused [p. 253, cols. 1 & 2]

A person charged with an offence under section 363 of the Penal Code cannot be convicted of an offence under that section read with section 109, where he was not charged with that offence. [p. 253, col. 2.]

Criminal application against an order passed by the Sessions Judge, Chapra, dated the 1st September 1919, confirming in appeal the order passed by the Deputy Magistrate, Chapra, dated the 31st July 1919.

FACTS of the case are shortly as follows:—

On the 15th April 1919 one Arjunia took Lachhminia, a minor girl aged 10, from the field of her father on the pretext of purchasing dolls for her. Arjunia took Lachhminia first of all to her own house, where Sheoradni, the petitioner, and Sheoradni's sister were waiting. Sheoradni and Arjunia then took her to another place. Ultimately Sheoradni took her on Ekka and rail to different places where she was kept for some fifteen days. On these facts Sheoradni and Arjunia were put upon their trial before the Deputy Magistrate of Chapra for an offence under section 363, Indian Penal Code, who convicted Arjunia for the offence of having kidnapped Lachhminia and with regard to Sheoradni came to the following finding:—

"I am of opinion that Sheoradni was abetting the offence of kidnapping of this minor girl from the lawful guardianship of her father. Her presence at Arjunia's place, where her own sister Parbatia was waiting, goes to show that she (Sheoradni) was abetting the offence of kidnapping by instigation. I accordingly convict Sheoradni under sections 363/109, Indian Penal Code."

On appeal by Sheoradni the Session Judge held: "In my opinion it is clear from the subsequent conduct of the appellant in connection with the removal of the girl that there must have been a previous conspiracy between her and Arjunia for the purpose of this removal. Hence the appellant can be convicted of the offence of abetment of kidnapping. If the offence of kidnapping was completed before the girl was actually made over to Sheoradni by Arjunia, then Sheoradni cannot be convicted as a principal offender for the offence of kidnapping is not a continuing offence.

"After considering this point I have come to the conclusion that it must be held that the offence was completed by Arjunia before she actually made over the girl to Sheoradni.....

"Thus I do not think that Sheoradni can be convicted of the main offence of kidnapping."

Messrs. Varma and Negeswar Prasad, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was charged with having committed an offence under section 363, Indian Penal Code, but she has been convicted not under section 363 but under section 363 read with section 109 and has been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The first point that arises for my consideration is whether, although she was not charged with having abetted the committing of an offence under section 363, she could be convicted of abetment. Mr. Varma appearing on behalf of the petitioner has referred me to various cases. It is sufficient to say that so far back as 1874 the Bombay High Court held that when a man was charged with murder, he could not be convicted of abetment of it on the ground that abetment of murder could not be said to be a minor offence in relation to murder itself. That case has been followed in a series of cases in the Madras High Court, but the learned Assistant Government Advocate says that the conviction is perfectly correct under section 237 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. Section 237 provides that if, in the case mentioned in section 236, the accused is charged with one offence and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it.

It will be seen, therefore, that the operation of section 237 is by the express provision of that section limited only to the case mentioned in section 236. Section 236 provides that if a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be convicted of having committed all or any of such offences, or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences. Therefore, reading section 236 it appears that the accused may be convicted of an offence although he was charged with another offence, if a single act or a series of acts with which he may be charged is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute.

Now, in this case is it doubtful upon the facts found by the Courts below which of the several offences has been committed by the petitioner? In my view section 236, which must control section 237, only applies when from the evidence led by the prosecution it is doubtful which of the offences has been committed by the petitioner. But if the evidence which has been led by the prosecution leads to one result and one result only, it cannot possibly be said that it is doubtful which of the offences has been committed by the petitioner. That, I think, is the principle of section 237. In this case there is no doubt at all, if the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution are to be believed, that the petitioner has not committed the offence of kidnapping. Therefore, it cannot be said that it was doubtful which of the several offences was committed by the petitioner. In my opinion, therefore, section 237 has no application. That being so, the petitioner could not have been convicted under section 363 read with section 109, when she was not charged with that offence.

In the next place, I am of opinion that on the facts found by the Courts below she could not have been convicted of an offence under section 363 read with section 109. The facts found by the Courts below are these: (1) The girl was taken to the house of Arjuna where petitioner was waiting for her; (2) The petitioner then took the girl from place to place and concealed her in her own house for 15 days. Upon this the learned Sessions Judge records the following finding:— "I think there can be no doubt from the circumstances of the case that Sheoradni must have been privy to the transaction from before and must have conspired with Arjuna to kidnap the girl, as otherwise she would not have been waiting for the girl in Arjuna's house and would not have gone off with the girl immediately afterwards to Piprahia." I may draw the attention of the learned Judge to the case of Rakhal Nikari v. Queen-Empress (1). In that case the following facts were found. First, that the girl was taken to the house of a woman where Rakhal (the petitioner in that case) was present. Secondly, Rakhal for several days co-habited with her and took her from place to place concealing her to a great extent, and thirdly, when the woman was proceeded against Rakhal absconded. On these facts Trevelyan, J., a Judge of very great experience, came to the conclusion that he could not be convicted of an offence under section 363 read with section 109. In my view, the facts in this case cannot be distin-

I accordingly allow this application and set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 471—Lunatic accused—Court, power of, to issue direction for detention—Local Government, order of, whether necessary.

Section 471 of the Criminal Procedure Code, as amended by Act X of 1914, no longer requires a Court to report the case of an accused person suffering from mental derangement for the orders of Government. The Court can itself issue a direction for his detention in a lunatic asylum or, if there is no accommodation in it, in jail or some other place of safe custody in British India.

Revision on submission of the case by the District Judge, Lucknow, for orders of the Judicial Commissioner, on the direction of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Lucknow, then on leave.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused Maiku Ahir was found by the Court below to have been suffering at the time of the murder from a mental derangement, which rendered him incapable of realising in what injury his act would result or that what he was doing was unlawful. That Court accordingly directed that he should be kept in custody at the jail, pending the orders of the Local Government, to whom the case was to be reported under section 471 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Section 471, as amended by Act X of 1914, however, no longer requires that the Court should report the case for the orders of the Local Government. The Court can itself issue a direction for his detention in a lunatic asylum or, if there is no accommodation in it, in jail or some other place of safe custody in British India.

SREEMANAVEDAVA RAJU V. PARAPRAVAN NAIDU.

The order of the Court below is, therefore, varied in so far that the accused will be kept in the lunatic asylum at Bareilly or if there is no accommodation in it, in any other lunatic asylum in the United Provinces, or in jail or such other place of safe custody as may be practicable. If the presiding Judge of the Court below is on leave, the Sessions Judge can take the necessary steps to have this done.

Order varied.

Where a Magistrate declines to receive oral evidence in an enquiry under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, his proceedings can be revised by the High Court. [p. 256, col. 1.]

A decision as to possession based solely on local inspection is not what section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code contemplates. [p. 256, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 20th September 1919, of the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Tellicherry Division, in Miscellaneous Civil No. 57 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise an order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tellicherry under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. Two rival Jenmis were disputing the right to possession in respect of a tract of forest land, 30 square miles in extent. In February 1919 the Inspector of Police reported to the Magistrate that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace in respect of the possession of this property. Thereupon he initiated proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. Meanwhile a suit was instituted in the District Munsif's Court in respect of the very same property. An injunction was issued by the District Munsif. In consequence of the issue of this injunction, the Magistrate stayed his hands for some time. Subsequently this injunction was dissolved by the District Judge in August 1919. The Magistrate revived the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. We are told that there was a fresh report from the Police Inspector informing the Magistrate that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace. After passing a preliminary order, the Magistrate proceeded to the disputed locality and inspected it. According to the affidavit filed the Magistrate remained in the locality for about 2 hours and travelled over about 11 miles of it. On the strength of this inspection the Magistrate in paragraph 2 of his judgment says: "That inspection completely satisfied me as to the point in issue, viz., the fact of actual possession of the disputed property. I find that nothing is to be gained by calling on the parties to produce further evidence, the value of which (whether oral or documentary) in a dispute of this kind is very doubtful." Then he discusses the documentary evidence which was filed in the case, and says in paragraph 6: "Then very strangely the Idam demised the very same land on othi to Kalliatathu Kutti Nambiar on 11th June 1918." Now if the learned Magistrate had taken evidence, the petitioners might have been able to show that there was nothing strange in this second lease to Chathukutti Nambiar. Mr. Grant, who appeared for K. C. Manavedava Raja, informed us that his client transferred his lease to the Nambiar because he was unable to pay the lease amount. Subsequently the Nambiar surrendered the lease to the Idam. The Idam re-granted the lease to Manavedava Raja. He subsequently transferred his newly acquired right to a company known "The Malabar Trading Company" but is working as its agent. It was because the Magistrate refused to take evidence that he found himself in the strange position he described. Then, in another place, in paragraph 6 of his judgment, the Magistrate says: "The Idam must have regarded the lease to him as void thereafter." We are unable to understand where he got this idea from that the lease became void. This again is the result of his shutting out the oral evidence in the case. Under these circumstances, the question for our decision is whether we have jurisdiction to revise the order of the Magistrate. The learned Counsel for the petitioner has quoted a large number of authorities to show that the refusal to take evidence will amount to a declining to exercise jurisdiction. One of the earliest cases in the Presidency decided by Mr. Justice

SREEMANAVEDAYA RAJU v. PARAPPAYAN NAIDU.

Wallis, as he then was, is reported in Arumuga Govindan v. Venkatasubbier (4). There the learned Judge points out that where a Magistrate did not take evidence himself but acted on the evidence taken by somebody whom he deputed for the purpose, the Magistrate acted without jurisdiction and the High Court had no power to interfere. That decision was followed in Velayuda Kone v. Narayana Kone (3). In Calcutta the view has been consistently held that where there has been a refusal by a Magistrate to examine witnesses, that would be tantamount to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction. The Magistrate in this case based his conclusion on documents showing the title to the property. As was pointed out by Miller, J., in Pananganti Parthasarathy v. Venkatasawmi Reddi (10), documentary evidence of this description should only be utilized for the purpose of elucidating oral evidence that may be admitted in this case. By themselves, the documents should not be used for concluding the question as to the possession. We are, therefore, of opinion that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate in declining to receive oral evidence is a matter which can be revised by the High Court. This view is not inconsistent with the decision in Kamal Kutty v. Udayavarma Raja (1).

The Magistrate refers often to the local inspection which he made. As was pointed out in Sahadat Khan v. Tajaddi Sheikh (8), a decision as to possession based solely upon local inspection is not what section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, contemplates. The Judicial Committee in Kessowji Issur v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company (11) held that when a civil suit was decided, not on testimony given at the trial as to what took place on the night of the accident, but by the Judge's observation of what he saw on another night altogether, the decision based on it must be set aside. For these reasons we are of opinion that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was irregular and that as he acted without jurisdiction in refusing to take evidence, his order should be set aside. With the setting aside of the order, the order passed by the learned Judge of this Court attaching the timber must necessarily go, because it is for the Magistrate to say whether there was such an emergency as would justify him in acting under section 145, clause (4), Criminal Procedure Code. This case is not covered by section 146, Criminal Procedure Code. Reid v. Richardson (12), to which the learned Counsel for the petitioner drew our attention, was a case in which the lower Court, having found that neither party was in possession, refused to make an order as to the attachment of the property. When the matter came up before the High Court, it was held that it had the same powers as the original Court had under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, to direct the attachment of the property. We hold that the order as to the attachment, dated 10th October 1919 and made in Criminal Miscellaneous Petition No. 519 of 1919 on the file of this Court, must be vacated as a result of our setting aside the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code.

The only question is whether this case should go back to Mr. Throne. We do not wish to cast the slightest doubt upon his impartiality or upon his capacity to dispose of this case. But having regard to the statement which he has made more than once that any oral evidence that might be let in will not influence his mind, we would not be justified in sending the case back to him. In these circumstances we think it is desirable that the case should be sent to the District Magistrate with directions either that he should dispose of the case himself or send it for disposal to any other First Class Magistrate.

Where a decree-holder admits part satisfaction of his decree, the Court is bound to recognise the fact, and in the absence of any explanation why his admission should not be considered as representing the facts, the judgment-debtor ought not to be put to proof of the alleged payment. [p. 257, col. 2; p. 258, col. 1.]

There is no particular form under rule 2 of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code in which a decree-holder must certify payment to the Court. A mere admission by him recorded by the Court is legally sufficient. [p. 258, col. 1.]

Petition for revision of the order of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 19th March 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Mianwali, dated the 26th May 1916, and remanding the case to the Senior Subordinate Judge for execution in respect of Rs. 100 and costs, etc.

Mr. Pir Tar-ud-din, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the respondent obtained a decree for Rs. 254.13.0 against the applicant in July 1913. On the 23rd of August of the same year the Court recorded a note that the decree holder admitted the receipt of Rs. 100. In the following October the decree holder put in a stamped receipt for another Rs. 150. In December 1915 the decree-holder applied again for execution of his decree and stated that he had only received Rs. 150 of which he had given a receipt and that he had not received the Rs. 100 mentioned in the Court's order of the 23rd August. On this the judgment-debtor put in two receipts for Rs. 100 each and one receipt for Rs. 50. These the decree-holder admitted on solemn affirmation to have been correct; he finished by saying that he did not understand how he could have made the application for execution. Shortly afterwards he transferred his rights to his brother, a petition writer, and put in a lengthy statement that he had made a mistake in admitting the first payment. No affidavit, however, or sworn statement of the decree-holder was ever made or put in before the Court. The Munsif, after a prolonged enquiry, in an able and exhaustive judgment held that the decree-holder had himself admitted the decree to have been satisfied to the extent of Rs. 250, and rejected his application. Against this decision an appeal was preferred to the District Judge who, in a somewhat extraordinary judgment, accepted the appeal. He held that the Munsif was right in his decision that the decree-holder had himself admitted before the Court first payment of Rs. 100. He held, however, that the subsequent admission of this payment by the decree-holder could be corrected by him, and that the moment the decree-holder retracted his certificate the alleged payment became one which an executing Court could not take into account, an extraordinary proposition of law. He then proceeded on the assumption that it was for the judgment-debtor to prove payment and held that his evidence of payment was insufficient. He finally held that the payment in dispute not having been certified could not be recognised in execution, and that the payment alleged was not proved to his satisfaction. Against this decision a second appeal was preferred and admitted, presumably, as an application for revision and I allowed it to be treated as such.

The facts which I have stated above are by themselves sufficient indication of the perverse attitude of mind with which the District Judge approached the case. He himself held that the decree-holder had stated in Court that the sum of Rs. 100 had been paid, that subsequently he made a similar admission, but he gave no reason whatever why these admissions should not be considered as representing the facts. No explanation whatever was given by the decree-holder for his alleged inaccurate admissions, nor was any explanation forthcoming why the decree had been transferred to his petition writer brother. As for the finding that the payment in dispute not having been certified could not be recognised, and that the moment the decree-holder retracted his admission the alleged payment became one which an executing Court could not take into account, this decision is in itself of a surprising character. Under Order XXI, rule 2, there is no particular form required in which a decree-holder must certify his payment to the Court. A mere admission by him recorded by the Court is legally sufficient. The first admission, moreover, it must be remembered, had been subsequently repeated to be correct by the decree holder, and I cannot understand the meaning of the lower Appellate Court that the admission having been withdrawn the decree holder's certificate was thereby cancelled. In these circumstances, it was not necessary to call on the judgment debtor for proof of payment.

I accept the application and restore the decision of the Munsif. The appellant will get his costs in all the Courts.

Revision accepted.

Where there is a direction to fix a date as a matter of procedure, a Court is still at liberty, after expiration of that date, to entertain an objection and do justice between the parties if sufficient reason is shown for the delay. [p. 258, col. 2.]

The date of "issue" of a proclamation under section 110 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act is the day on which it is published in such a manner that the persons likely to be affected thereby can, with the exercise of reasonable prudence, obtain knowledge of its contents [p. 259, col. 1.]

Where such a proclamation assumes the shape of a notice to be served personally on the co-sharer, the date on which personal service is effected is the date of "issue" of the proclamation, and it is from this day that the period of thirty days for preferring objections must be reckoned. Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated [the 23rd

November 1906, reversing that of the Assistant Collector, Hardoi, dated the 11th April 1905.

Mr. Ishwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ali Ausat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

GREEVEN, A. J. C.—In the course of a partition proceeding, the present appellants preferred an objection to the effect that they were entitled to a larger proportion of the area to be divided, by reason of what is known as the right of the elder branch (haqq-jethwansi). This objection was tried as a question of title by the Assistant Collector who, sitting as a Civil Court under section 111, sub-section (2) of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901 (U. P. Act III of 1901), decided the point in the appellants' favour. The respondents appealed under section 112 to the District Judge who, so far as merits of the objection were concerned, affirmed the finding of the Assistant Collector; but he allowed the appeal and reversed the decree upon the ground that the objection should not be entertained inasmuch as it had been preferred after the date fixed in the proclamation issued under section 110.

The appellants challenge this decision on the grounds—

First, that the Assistant Collector was legally entitled, in proper cases, to entertain objections after the date fixed in the proclamation; and,

Secondly, that this was a proper case inasmuch as

(a) the proclamation "issued", for the purposes of section 110, at a time which did not allow the period of thirty days to elapse before the date for filing objections as that section requires, and

(b) the Assistant Collector, having proceeded into camp without notice to the appellants, was bound to allow them such time as was necessary for obtaining access to his Court.

Upon the first point, I should require no reported authority to induce me to hold that where there is a direction to fix a date as a matter of procedure, a Court is still at liberty, after expiration of that date, to entertain an objection and do justice between the parties, if sufficient reason is shown for the delay. As a matter of fact, the point is covered by express authority [Tulsi Prasad v. Matru Mal (1)]. This case was determined under the provision, somewhat differently worded, of the North Western Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1873 (XIX of 1873), since repealed; but for the purpose of the question now under consideration, there was no substantial variance of language.

In the present instance, I think that the Assistant Collector not merely exercised a wise discretion in allowing the appellants to prefer their objections after the date specified in the proclamation but acted in the manner expressly contemplated by section 110 of the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901. That section entitles a recorded co-sharer, who has not joined in the application for partition, to a period of not less than thirty days, from the date of the issue of the proclamation, before he is required to prefer his objections. The date of issue of a proclamation means, in my opinion, the day on which it is published in such a manner that the persons likely to be affected thereby can, with the exercise of reasonable prudence, obtain knowledge of its contents. Where a proclamation is affixed upon the land or is published by beat of drum, there can be no question about the date of issue. In the present instance, however, the proclamation assumed the shape of notices to be served personally on the co-sharers. Orders for the issue of such notice were given on the 20th February 1915. From a memorandum on the record, it appears that the notices were actually written on the 24th following. On the 25th the Sadr Qanungo was directed to serve the process; but, as he was apparently engaged, the Naib Qanungo was, on the 23rd, ordered to perform this duty. On the 1st March personal service was effected. The date fixed in the proclamation for preferring the objections was the 24th March. Having regard to the form assumed by this particular proclamation, I am of opinion that it did not "issue" till the 1st March for the purpose of section 110 and that the appellants were accordingly entitled to a period of thirty days expiring on the 30th March for preferring their objections.

There was, however, a special reason for admitting the objections when they were preferred on the 25th March, one day after the date fixed in the proclamation. The record itself does not disclose the Assistant Collector's place of sitting on the day so fixed; but an affidavit, which has been presented to this Court by the appellants and is not disputed by the respondents, shows that the officer in question had proceeded on tour to a distance of fourteen miles from the headquarters of the district. The Assistant Collector allowed them a period of grace for ascertaining his place of sitting and admitted their objections on their arrival on the following morning. He appears to me to have acted as both the law and the circumstances of the case required.

For the foregoing reasons, I am clearly of opinion that the learned District Judge's finding that the present respondents' appeal must be allowed and the objections preferred by the respondents must be dismissed as time-barred, should be reversed. In considering, however, the form to be assumed by the appellate order of this Court, we found ourselves confronted with a difficulty, inasmuch as the Court of intermediate appeal adopted the somewhat unusual course of first finding the appeal to be bad on the merits of the objection in the partition and afterwards proceeding to allow the appeal and to dismiss the objection on account of the preliminary defect that, as he supposed, it had been preferred beyond the period of limitation prescribed by section 110. This Court hesitated, in allowing the appeal, to restore the decree of the Assistant Collector, because, though the learned District Judge's finding upon the merits is purely a matter of fact, he recorded, upon the conduct of the trial of the objection, certain observations which might, especially in so far as the evidence is stated to have been taken without the sanction of an oath, have laid a foundation for a second appeal. As, however, the decree of the Court of intermediate appeal was entirely in the respondents' favour, they might, it was apprehended, be deprived of a right of a second appeal, if we simply acted upon the learned District Judge's finding of fact. On a consideration of the record, however, it is clear that no question of a second appeal arises on the merits of the objection. Quite apart from the oral evidence, the concurrent findings of fact in the two Courts below are supported by the overwhelming testimony of the documents adduced. An agreement, dated the 20th May 1864, for a reference to arbitration discloses that the dispute with respect to the unequal apportionment already existed; and a decision at settlement, given on the 21st May 1868, in accordance with the award of the arbitrators, assigned to the respondents a total area of 222 bighas, 19 liswas and 19 biswansis at a revenue of Rs. 319 as against a total area of 279 bighas, 16 biswas and 19 biswansis assigned to the appellants at a revenue of Rs. 339, while the area of the common land was 196 bighas, 9 biswas and 13 biswansis. The parties consented to maintain this difference of apportionment until the Government should intervene; and the wajib-ul arz of the former Settlement refers both to the custom and the arbitration assuring to the appellants, as the elder branch, a larger area. It appears that the partition has been completed in accordance with the Assistant Collector's decision which, as affirmed on the merits by the Court of intermediate appeal, should, in my opinion, be restored.

(1) 18 A. 210; A. W. N. (1896) 30.

For these reasons, I would allow this appeal, reversing the decree of the learned District Judge and restoring that of the Assistant Collector, with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

SANDERS, A. J. C.—I agree with the decision of my learned colleague. The appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge is reversed and that of the Assistant Collector is restored. The appellants are allowed their costs of this Court and of the Courts below.

Appeal allowed.

In a case of contract the offer is part of the cause of action and an action founded on contract may be instituted in the Court which has jurisdiction over the place where the final offer was made, but not in a Court within whose jurisdiction part of the negotiations took place. [p. 261, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice Bakewell, dated the 3rd April 1918, in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court, in Civil Suit No. 282 of 1917.

Mr. V. V. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Appellant.—In a suit on contract the offer is part of the cause of action. The offer must be deemed to have been made in Madras in the chambers of Mr. T. Rangachariar, High Court Vakil, where the parties met and made overtures. The fact that the negotiations subsequently culminated in Madura will not oust the jurisdiction where the first offer was made.

Mr. P. Ramanathan, for the Respondent.—Only certain preliminary negotiations took place in Madras. That will not be a cause of action. The final offer and acceptance was in Madura. The suit should have been instituted in the Madura Court.

JUDGMENT.

WALLIS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Bakewell, J., dismissing a suit, brought with leave under section 12 of the Letters Patent for specific performance of a contract completed at Madura for the sale of land in Malabar, for want of jurisdiction on the ground that no part of the cause of action arose in Madras within the jurisdiction of the Original Side of this Court. For the appellants it is argued that the offer must be held to have been in Madras where the parties had an interview at the chambers of Mr. Rangachariar, who took down certain notes of terms. Bakewell, J., held that the contract was concluded at Madura, and that no part of the cause of action arose here.

RAMESHWAR BAKSH SINGH v. DWARKA.

The cases of Borthwick v. Walton (1) and Green v. Beach (2) show that the offer is part of the cause of action and Aris v. Orchard (3) is not inconsistent, because it only decides that where certain terms were agreed on in one jurisdiction and the final contract was made with variations in another jurisdiction, no part of the cause of action arose in the first jurisdiction. In other words, what has to be looked at is where the final offer and acceptance took place. In the present case I think that from Mr. Foulkes' own evidence the inference is that the terms on which the plaintiff was prepared to sell were settled at the interview at Mr. Rangachariar's chambers in Madras. No contract, however, was then effected. The parties met again in Madura, when the plaintiff asked Mr. Foulkes what he intended to do and said if he did not purchase he would have to make other arrangements.

I think this amounts to a renewed and final offer in Madura, which was accepted there, and that assuming that in a case of contract the offer is part of the cause of action, we are only concerned with the place where the final offer which was accepted was made, and that the prior offer in Madras is immaterial. On this ground I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—I agree.

Practice—Procedure—Evidence closed by both parties

—Fresh witness, whether can be summoned—Landlord and tenant—Licensee, position of—Adverse possession—Improvement of buildings by licensee, effect of.

When both parties to a suit have closed their evidence, permission ought not to be granted to call any further witness.

Where a riaya of a village obtains possession of land as a licensee, the terms of the license being that so long as he is a cultivator and resides in the village he has a right to occupy the land for his own use, to construct buildings upon it, to dwell therein, and to enjoy the user but with no right in the soil, there can be no question of adverse possession on his behalf as against the licensor. The fact that he has improved buildings on the land or has replaced erections would not confer such a title upon him.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 18th July 1917, upholding the decree of the Munsif, Rae Bareilly, dated the 23rd March 1917.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kismat Rai Jagdhari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first point raised in this appeal is that the learned Munsif should have granted permission to the appellant to call his manager as a witness, although the application to summon the manager was made at a late stage of the proceedings. I find that the application to summon the manager was made when both parties had closed their evidence and in these circumstances, I consider that the learned Munsif acted rightly in refusing permission to call the witness at that stage. He would, in my opinion, have been wrong to have acceded to such an application.

The second point raised is as to the finding of the learned District Judge, that the defendant-respondent is in adverse possession of the land. On the evidence it appears to me clear that the defendant-respondent is a riaya of the village. Such being the case, he has obtained possession of the land in question as a licensee. The plaintiff-appellant is in the position of a licensor. The nature of the license is that the defendant-respondent, so long as he is a cultivator, resident in the village, has a right to occupy the land for his own use, to construct building upon it, to dwell therein, and to enjoy the user. But he has no right to the soil, and there can be no question of adverse possession on his behalf as against the licensor. But on the finding of the lower Courts, he has been in possession of this land for a very large number of years, and the suggestion made by the plaintiff-appellant that he has a right to terminate the license at his own will, and to turn out his licensee for no fault when there has been no breach of the license, is one that cannot possibly be approved. I should have noted before that there is a suggestion that there has been a breach of license because the defendant-respondent, on his own showing, has made permanent certain portions of his house, but by so doing he has, in my opinion, committed no breach of the license. There is no justification in Oudh for a doctrine that, when a superior proprietor permits a tenant to occupy a certain portion of land for his residence, the tenant's right of user is restricted to replacement of erections no more numerous and no better than the erections originally made. I do not see that the superior proprietor has the slightest right to object to a tenant improving his residence. In these circumstances, there has been no breach of the license and the tenant has done nothing wrong in improving the structures. He had the soil before and according to the findings of the lower Courts, he holds it still. He has taken no more than what he was originally allowed to use and he is at liberty to improve the buildings upon the soil.

For the above reasons the plaintiff appellant's suit was bound to fail and has been rightly dismissed. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Punjab Alienation of Land Act (XIII of 1900), s.

2 (3) (b)—Trees standing on land belonging to agriculturist, whether liable to attachment.

The protection afforded by clause (b) of sub-section (3) of section 2 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act does not apply to things material, such as standing trees, but to incorporeal rights. Therefore, trees standing on land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe are liable to attachment in execution of a decree.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Muzaffargarh, dated the 15th February 1915, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Class, Karor, dated the 7th November 1914, disallowing the objections.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Bishan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Certain trees on land belonging to a member of an agricultural tribe have been attached in execution of a decree. The judgment-debtor objected that they were not liable to attachment and sale, on the ground that they are protected by the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, XIII of 1900. The lower Courts have both found that trees do not come within the definition of land as given in section 2, sub-section (3) of the Act. The judgment-debtor has appealed to this Court.

Counsel for the appellant contends that trees are covered by clause (b) of sub-section (3). He is, however, unable to cite any authority in support of this proposition except Bagga Mal v. Moti Ram (1), which is irrelevant.

It has been held in Nur Muhammad v. Tiloka Mal (2) that clause (b) of sub-section (3) of the Alienation of Land Act refers not to things material but to incorporeal rights. In that view I concur and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The only objection to be considered is as to the appointment of two members of Ayirathalawar community and of the residents of Jangamarajapuram or Mangammalpuram as trustees of the temple in addition to the representatives of the families of Ramu Aiyar and Ramu Iyengar. The learned Subordinate Judge stated in his judgment that the representatives of the plaintiffs' community made large additions to the temple at great cost, and it was admitted before him that they had purchased the properties for conducting the worship and festivals of the temple to the extent of Rs. 30,000. No evidence was apparently taken in this case, as the parties agreed that a scheme should be framed by the learned Subordinate Judge. And there is no affidavit before us to show that the statement in the judgment which is referred to is incorrect. We think, under the circumstances, that the Judge was justified in having the Ayirathalawar community represented on the board of trustees; and the appointment of members from the village officers or residents of the two villages mentioned above seems to be a proper thing.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

FARZAND ALI v. SADIQ HUSAIN KHAN.

JUDGMENT.—Lala Fakir Chand gives up the first ground of appeal. In my opinion this appeal must be accepted. The plaintiffs, who are admittedly the owners, sued for ejectment of the defendants on the very definite allegation that the defendants, who were tenants-at-will, were denying their title as owners. They also sued for a declaration in the alternative, but it is not necessary to go into this latter matter. The allegation that the defendants were denying the plaintiffs' title was not traversed in the statement of defence and it was not necessary, therefore, for the plaintiffs to give evidence in support of their allegation. On the contrary the defendants persisted that they and not the plaintiffs were the owners. This position cannot be affected by the fact that in the alternative the defendants pleaded that if it was found that they were not the owners but were tenants, they were not entitled to ejectment so long as they served the takia. It is not a case of a denial only in the suit itself.

On the well-known legal principle that a denial by a tenant of his landlord's title causes forfeiture of the tenancy, I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to eject the defendants.

I, therefore, accept the appeal with costs throughout.

providing for payment of revenue by mortgagee—Revenue, enhancement of—Intention of parties—Oral evidence, admissibility of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 72, 76—Mortgage—Mortgagee, liability of, to pay revenue—"Contract to the contrary" in s. 72, what is.

Where a usufructuary mortgage deed provides for the payment of revenue by the mortgagee, but fails to indicate whether the parties meant the revenue as assessed at the date of the deed or as it might be re-assessed from time to time, evidence may be given under section 96 of the Evidence Act of facts to show what was meant. An express declaration of the parties subsequent to the execution of the mortgage deed, as to what they meant when the deed was executed, is admissible as such evidence. [p. 268, col. 1.]

Section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act imposes on the mortgagee an obligation to pay the revenue and Government charges when they can be paid out of the income. If they can be so paid, he cannot recover them under section 72 (b) of the Act, since the permission given by section 72 (b) must be read subject to the obligation imposed by section 76 (c). If they cannot be so paid, then in the absence of a contract to the contrary a mortgagee who has paid them out of his own pocket can recover them under section 72 (b). An agreement by the mortgagor to be personally liable for such charges is, however, a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 72 (b). [p. 267, col. 1.]

Messrs. M. Wasim and Haidar Husain, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan and Mr. Niamat-ul-lah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will cover Appeals Nos. 135 and 143 of 1916.

On the 15th of May 1869 Zamin Ali, the father of Sheikh Farzand Ali, the plaintiff in this case, executed a usufructuary mortgage of the entire village of Pindra in favour of Mirza Agha Hasan Khan, the father of Mirza Sadiq Husain Khan, the defendant, for a sum of Rs. 14,000. On the 24th of June 1878 Zamin Ali executed a second mortgage deed on the same village for the sum of Rs. 28,700. Subsequently the defendant Mirza Sadiq Husain Khan became the owner of a 4-annas share in the village. The present suit was brought to redeem the remaining 12 annas on payment of Rs. 30,325, that is $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of Rs. 14,000 and Rs. 28,700 less a sum of Rs. 1,700 which the defendant had already received from one Janki Prasad, who had purchased an area of 96 bighas, 2 biswas at a sale in execution of a decree.

The defendant pleaded that in order to redeem the property, the plaintiff was bound to pay him a sum of Rs 84,959 10 10. This sum is composed of several items in addition to those admitted by the plaintiff, but in these appeals we are concerned only with a sum of Rs. 50,027-2 10. The defendant pleaded that at the time of the mortgage the Government revenue on the village was only Rs. 1,300, but in 1302 F. at the new settlement the revenue was enhanced to Rs. 1,600 for five years and after that to Rs. 1,900, which he had paid, and he was entitled to recover from the plaintiff the amount which he had to pay in excess of the revenue payable at the time when the mortgage deed was executed, with interest thereon. He also pleaded that he had had to pay cesses which were imposed subsequent to the execution of the mortgage and that he was entitled to recover the amount so paid with interest from the plaintiff before redemption.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the defendant was not entitled to claim the enhanced revenue paid by him but was entitled to claim the amount paid as cesses with interest thereon at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum.

In Appeal No. 135 of 1916, the plaintiff attacks the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge with regard to cesses and in Appeal No. 143 of 1916, the defendant attacks the finding with regard to the enhanced revenue. It may be noted that ground No. 4 of the plaintiff's appeal with regard to the rate of interest allowed by the lower Court has not been argued.

The only question, therefore, which we have to decide in these appeals is whether the mortgagee is entitled to recover the enhanced revenue and the cesses paid by him from the mortgagor before redemption.

Both the mortgage deeds in suit were executed before the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) was passed, but it is admitted by the parties that sections 72 and 76 of that Act merely embody and reproduce the law as it existed prior to the passing of that Act, and if authority for this be needed reference may be made to the cases: Girdhar Lal v. Bhola Nath (1) and Jaijit Rai v. Gobind Tiwari (2). The case may, therefore, be dealt with as if sections 72 and 76 of that Act had been in force at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed. Section 76 (c) of that Act, inter alia, provides that when during the continuance of the mortgage the mortgagee takes possession of the mortgaged property, he must, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, out of the income of the property pay the Government revenue, and all other charges of a public nature accruing due in respect thereof during such possession. Any doubt that might arise as to the applicability of this provision to a usufructuary mortgage like the one in suit is removed by section 77, which excludes the operation of certain other provisions of the section in the case of such a mortgage. Section 72 gives the mortgagee in possession the right if he spends money, (a) for the due management of the property, or (b) for its preservation from destruction, forfeiture, or sale, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, to add any money so spent to the principal money.

According to the terms of the mortgage deed of the 15th May 1869 the mortgagor engages to obtain mutation of names in favour of the mortgagee. It is also stipulated that when revenue is paid, the dakhilas shall be issued to the mortgagee and that until redemption the profits of the villages including the Zamindari rights shall be lawfully appropriated by the mortgagee. The mortgagee is to have all the rights of management. He is not to be entitled to anything for increase in cultivation or produce, nor is the mortgagor to be entitled to claim any mesne profits or damages. Redemption is not to be allowed for 25 years. There can be no doubt that this mortgage was intended to be an ordinary usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagee paying the revenue. Now it is a question material to this suit whether the revenue contemplated as being paid by the mortgagee was the revenue as assessed at the date of the mortgage or the revenue as it might from time to time be assessed. It is clear that it was within the competence of the parties to contract that it should be either of these. Section 96 of the Evidence Act is, therefore, applicable and, as the language of the deed might have been meant to apply to revenue in one sense or the other but not in both, evidence may be given of facts to show to which it was intended to apply. The Counsel for the plaintiff mortgagor has argued that, in view of the certainty of a new settlement taking place within the period of 25 years and also in view of the provision now enacted in section 76 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act but in force even before that Act, which requires the mortgagee in the absence of a contract to the contrary to pay the revenue accruing due in respect of the property during possession, the parties must be deemed to have meant that the revenue to be paid by the mortgagee was the revenue as it might be assessed from time to time. In this case the mortgagee would be liable to pay the revenue notwithstanding enhancement and would not be entitled to add the excess to the principal money. If the case merely stood thus, we concur that the liability of the mortgagee to pay the whole revenue before and after enhancement would stand beyond all doubt.

At the beginning of the hearing of this appeal, however, the learned Advocate for the defendant produced a document, dated the 6th of July 1871, executed by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee and asked that it should be received in evidence. This document refers to the mortgage deed of the 15th of May 1869 and states that as the mortgage transaction had been entered into on the basis of present profits or whatever the mortgagee might add to them by his own efforts and on payment of Rs. 1,300 Government revenue, it is agreed that if there be any enhancement in the revenue the mortgagor shall pay any such enhancement out of his own pocket up to the time of redemption and the mortgagee shall not be liable to pay any other charges than the land revenue payable at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff strenuously opposes the application to have this document in evidence at this stage, and has questioned the truth of the defendant's affidavit to the effect that the document was accidentally found among the estate papers after the suit had been decided in the lower Court. He has urged that this document was deliberately suppressed as under it only a personal liability for the payment of enhanced revenue and other charges has been accepted, and that the defendant has now produced it only because he failed to have the enhanced revenue added to the principal mortgage money. In the view which we take of this document it is immaterial whether it is on the record or not, for we are of opinion that it can in no way help the defendant in the present case. This agreement indicates that the intention of the parties at the time of executing the mortgage deed of the 15th May 1869 was that the revenue to be paid by the mortgagee was the revenue as assessed at the date of the deed, and not the revenue as it might be assessed in the future after a fresh settlement. The express declaration by the parties of their intention, even though it took place two years after the deed, must outweigh any inference as to that intention derived merely from the circumstances existing at the date of the deed, to which reference has been made above, namely, the existence of a rule of law that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee would pay the revenue as assessed from time to time and the certainty of a revision of revenue within the 25 years specified in the mortgage deed. Assuming then that the deed meant that the mortgagee was not liable for any extra revenue assessed subsequent to the date of the mortgage, it has to be considered whether under section 72 the mortgagee may add such excess to the principal money. Now this agreement provides, not that the mortgagee shall be entitled to add the extra revenue to the mortgage money, but that the mortgagor shall be liable to pay that extra revenue out of his own pocket and that the mortgagee shall have a right to sue him personally to recover the excess, if he fails to do so. This is quite clear from the passage in the agreement: "If the said mortgagee will have to pay the enhanced amount in any year, then he shall realise the said money with interest at 2 per cent. from me by instituting a suit in Court." This provision is incompatible with the mortgagee having a right to add the excess money to the mortgage money. The mortgagee cannot, therefore, plead section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act as enabling him to add any revenue, paid to save the property from attachment, to the principal, because there was a contract in existence to the contrary, namely, a contract that he should recover personally from the mortgagor. The agreement, therefore, does not assist the mortgagee.

As to cesses if we exclude the agreement of 1871 from consideration, there being nothing in the mortgage deed to relieve the mortgagee of his statutory liability under section 76 (c) to pay out of the income of the property "all charges of a public nature accruing in respect of the property during possession," he must be deemed liable to pay these cesses notwithstanding the fact that their imposition may not have occurred until subsequent to the mortgage deed. We cannot concur with the Subordinate Judge in finding any expression in the mortgage deed of an intention that the cesses should be paid by the mortgagor. Indeed it follows from the Subordinate Judge's finding that no cess was in contemplation at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed, that the parties cannot have intended that the mortgagor should pay them. On behalf of the mortgagee it has been argued that, although bound initially to pay these unanticipated cesses to Government out of the income under section 76 (c), he is entitled under section 72 (b) to re-imburse himself by adding the amount so paid to the principal money. It is to be noted that the obligation imposed by section 76 (c) only extends to paying the Government dues out of the income. If this income does not permit of this, section 72 (b) will be applicable. In this case it is admitted that the income was sufficient. No authority is quoted by the mortgagee's Counsel for the proposition that, even when paid out of the income under section 76 (c), Government dues can be recovered under section 72 (b). Had this been the intention of the Legislature, it must have been expressly so stated. In our opinion the permission given to the mortgagee by section 72 (b) must be read subject to the obligation imposed on him by section 76 (c). If we take the agreement of 1871 into consideration, the case as to cesses stands on the same footing as the case as to revenue. In that agreement the mortgagor states that he will be liable for anything outside the original revenue such as taxes (which are specifically mentioned), but his liability is to pay them out of his own pocket. The agreement does not provide for them being added to the mortgage money. Section 72 is, therefore, inapplicable, as an agreement of the mortgagor to pay the cesses out of his own pocket and to be liable to suit for them is inconsistent with the mortgagee having a right to add them to the mortgage money.

There is a further reason why the mortgagee defendant is not entitled to require that the excess revenue and the cesses paid by him should be added to the principal mortgage money before redemption by the plaintiff mortgagor. This case was argued before us as if the second deed of the 24th June 1878 were a deed of further charge. At the close of argument, however, the appellant's Counsel stated that, although he had not made a ground of appeal, the fact that the lower Court had ordered the property to be sold on the assumption that the deed to be redeemed was the first deed, that is to say, a usufructuary mortgage deed, the decree should really be one for foreclosure, as the later deed of the 24th June 1878 was a conditional sale-deed. The respondent's Counsel admitted that the decree should be for foreclosure. An examination of the second deed indicates that it was the intention of the parties that the second deed should take the place of the first deed, although incorporating the mortgage money payable under the first deed by reference. The second deed indeed states that, although possession at the time of the execution of the deed was with the mortgagee under the first deed, yet the mortgagee was again put in possession under the second deed. Now the second deed cannot be deemed in any way to be affected by the agreement of the 6th July 1871. The second deed is absolutely silent as to the extra revenue or cesses. It is, therefore, governed by section 76 (c) of the Act.

The result is that the defendant's Appeal No. 143 of 1916 is dismissed. The plaintiff's Appeal No. 135 of 1916 is allowed to the following extent. He will be given a decree

If the plaintiff pays up the redemption money together with the defendant's costs in the lower Court (rightly awarded to the defendant by the lower Court for the reasons stated in its judgment), the defendant will pay costs of both appeals in this Court. A decree under Order XXXIV, rule 7, of the Code of Civil Procedure will be prepared and six months will be allowed for payment. If the plaintiff pay into Court the amount due within the time allowed, the mortgages shall be redeemed and the plaintiff shall be put in possession of the property in suit, excluding the Thana building and the trees standing on Nos. 1064, 1548 and 1146. If such payment is not made within the time allowed, the plaintiff shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property and will be liable for the total costs throughout.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 22 (5) (a) —Pre-emption suit—Withdrawal of deposit money, effect of—Dismissal of suit.

Where in a pre-emption suit the money deposited by the plaintiff is withdrawn, the suit is liable to be dismissed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 6th March 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 26th August 1918, decreeing the claim with half costs.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case sued for a declaration that a sale-deed executed by his brother Prabhu in 1916 in favour of Dalpat Rai was invalid as having been executed without necessity, and in the alternative asked for a decree for pre-emption. The first Court passed a decree declaring the alienation, which was for Rs. 400, to be valid only to the extent of Rs. 76 but on appeal the District Judge has dismissed the suit, finding that the sale was for necessity. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court.

The consideration for the sale was made up of debts due to Munshi Ram. A book debt had been incurred, and there was also a bond, the last of a series of bonds, the first of which had been executed in favour of Munshi Ram's father by Prabhu's father. These debts have been discharged by the vendee. The necessity for the sale is apparent, and I cannot agree with the contention that the sale was a benami transaction, the real purchaser being Munshi Ram.

The only other point is that raised in the first ground, namely, that the alternative claim for pre-emption has been ignored by the lower Appellate Court. This contention is correct, but the claim for pre-emption must also fail, as the money deposited by the plaintiff under section 22 of the Pre-emption Act was withdrawn by him on the 11th November 1918. Sub-section 5 (a) of that section provides that if the sum deposited is withdrawn by the plaintiff, the suit or appeal shall be dismissed.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 36 —Execution of decree—Property in possession of mortgagee—Delivery of possession, effect of—Mortgage by several mortgagors—Redemption by one co-mortgagor—Redeeming co-mortgagor, rights of—Remedies of mortgagee, whether can be used—Contribution, liability of co-mortgagors for.

The language of Order XXI, rule 36, of the Civil Procedure Code is wide enough to include delivery to a person while the property is in the rightful possession of a mortgagee, but such delivery is in fact no delivery at all and has no effect beyond being a notice to the mortgagee that the decree-holder is entitled to redeem. [p. 271, col. 1.]

A co-mortgagor paying off a mortgage is not the successor-in-interest of the mortgagee in every respect, but for the purpose of enforcing his right of contribution against his co-mortgagors he is entitled to all the securities of the mortgagee. He can take advantage of a decree in favour of the mortgagee that the mortgage was good and existed, and he is not precluded from doing so by the fact that he does not admit the decree to be a right decree. [p. 272, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act, where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors for his proportion of the expenses incurred in redeeming the mortgage. The section contemplates that the entire share of each co-mortgagor must be treated as one unit for the purposes of contribution, so that a co-mortgagor cannot ask to redeem separate fractions of his share. [p. 272, col. 2; p. 273, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 19th December 1918.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Wazir Hasan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a claim for possession and mesne profits by the plaintiff-respondent against his three cousins and the widowed daughter-in-law of another cousin in respect of a six-annas share in the village of Harharpur. For the relationship between the parties the genealogical tree* given at the beginning of the lower Court's judgment may be consulted. To make that genealogical tree correct, however, the parties agree that the name of Lalta Prasad Kanungo, son of Lakhat Rai, should be Sital Prasad Kanungo and Musammat Rajrani defendant No. 4 should be shown not as a daughter but as the daughter-in-law of Harihar Saran Das. These inaccuracies do not, however, affect the present case. It is common ground that in the year 1808 Chandraka Prasad, the father of the first three defendants, was entered as holding a four annas share in the village and Raj Narayan plaintiff another four annas share. The remaining eight annas at that date were recorded in the name of Musammat Batash Kunwar, the widow of Gaya Prasad, a great uncle of Chandraka Prasad. On the 3rd November 1892 Chandraka Prasad for himself and as guardian of the plaintiff (then a minor), along with Batash Kunwar and Hulas Kunwar, another lady of the family, executed a deed of mortgage in respect of the whole village of Harharpur in favour of one Janki Prasad for a sum of Rs. 15,000. In 1908 Chandraka Prasad died leaving the three sons, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. His son Harihar Saran Das had apparently predeceased him leaving the defendant No. 4, his daughter-in-law. Janki Prasad mortgagee having died, his heirs brought a suit for possession on the mortgage and on 23rd May 1908 got a decree for possession and profits against the plaintiff, the defendants and Musammat Batash Kunwar. In February 1910 Musammat Batash Kunwar died. On her death disputes arose between the plaintiff and the defendants in respect of the eight-annas share which had been recorded in her name. On the 11th May 1911 the plaintiff obtained a decree against the present defendants for possession of two annas out of eight annas recorded in Musammat Batash Kunwar's name up to the date of her death. It may be mentioned that he got this two annas share as a co-reversioner, it being held in that suit that Musammat Batash Kunwar had held the eight annas as a widow's estate. Janki Prasad's heirs were parties to that suit. On the 17th

LACHMI NARYAN v. RAJ NARAYAN.

June 1913 the present defendants redeemed the whole sixteen annas from the heirs of Janki Prasad. On the 20th January 1916 the plaintiff in execution of his decree of the 11th May 1911 obtained formal possession of the two-annas share under Order XXI, rule 36, of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the 22nd February 1917 the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants under the Rent Act for his share of profits collected by the defendants in respect of this two-annas share. That suit was thrown out on the ground that the plaintiff had not got such possession of the two-annas share as entitled him to be regarded as a co-sharer. On the 9th June 1917 the plaintiff deposited a sum of Rs. 3,628-1-9 under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act for redeeming from his co-mortgagors the four-annas share in the property. The defendants refused to accept this. As a result of the defendants' refusal to accept this money and release the four-annas share and as a result of the plaintiff's failure to get a decree for profits in the Revenue Court, he has brought this suit claiming possession of the four-annas share on payment of the contribution money found due and for mesne profits and also asking for possession without paying anything and for mesne profits of the two-annas share. The main defence was that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree unless he paid up the contribution money in respect of the two-annas share as well as the four-annas share and that he was not entitled to mesne profits either in respect of the four annas share or the two-annas share.

The lower Court held that the plaintiff was not liable to pay any contribution money in respect of the two-annas share, rejecting the defendants' contention that by redeeming this two annas share from the mortgagees they obtained a charge over it for a contribution. It consequently also found that no mesne profits could be claimed in respect of this two annas share. The claim for recovery of the four-annas share had only been contested by the defendants on the ground that they must be paid the contribution money in respect of the whole six annas before being called on to give up the four annas. The lower Court, therefore, by reason of the decision just mentioned, held that the four-annas share could be recovered by the plaintiff on payment merely of contribution money proportionate to this four annas. It also allowed the plaintiff to deduct from the contribution money payable in respect of the four-annas share mesne profits, on the ground that the defendants had no right to refuse the contribution money tendered. These findings are impugned in appeal.

The questions for decision by this Court are

(1) Was the lower Court right in holding that no contribution could be required from the plaintiff in respect of the two-annas share?

(2) Was the plaintiff's tender in respect of the four-annas share a good tender or was he bound to tender the contribution money due in respect of the whole six annas?

As to question (1), the learned Subordinate Judge has held that no contribution could be required from the plaintiff in respect of the two-annas share because in respect of that share, to which the plaintiff became entitled as a reversioner of Musammât Batash Kunwar, the mortgagees' right to security as against this two-annas share came to an end on the death of Musammât Batash Kunwar. It is held that the mortgage of her share by Musammât Batash Kunwar has not been proved to be for necessity and, therefore, would not operate beyond her lifetime. He has also found that the decree obtained by the mortgagees on the 23rd May 1908 against the plaintiff, the defendants and Musammât Batash Kunwar could not be pleaded by the defendant as res judicata so as to enable the defendants to take advantage of that decree against the plaintiff. The first objection taken on these findings is that it was never the case of the plaintiff that the mortgage by Musammât Batash Kunwar would not operate beyond her lifetime owing to the absence of legal necessity and that, therefore, the Subordinate Judge has set up a new case for the plaintiff. This objection must be admitted. The plaintiff in his plaint has set forth that the mortgagees held a decree against Musammât Batash Kunwar and were in possession in pursuance of that decree and that the defendants redeemed the mortgage. It was, therefore, for the plaintiff to show some reason why he should not be liable to contribution. Nowhere is there any allegation in the plaint that he was not liable to contribution because the mortgagees had no right against Musammatt Batash Kunwar's share after her death as the deed was not executed for legal necessity. The plaintiff's case which has been ignored by the Subordinate Judge is quite different. It is this. Inasmuch as the plaintiff got a decree for recovery of the two-annas share against the defendants and in that suit had made the mortgagees parties, he must be deemed to have recovered a right to possession of the two-annas share from the date when that decree was executed, that is in January 1916, after the defendants redeemed the whole sixteen annas, which was in 1913. The plaintiff's Counsel in appeal admits that the possession given to the plaintiff was only formal possession under Order XXI, rule 36. But he maintains that the possession should have been given and must be deemed to have been given under Order XXI, rule 35. The defendant's Counsel has made little attempt to support this case, which was the case made out in the plaint. It is obvious that it cannot be supported. In the suit by the plaintiff for the two-annas share against the defendants the mortgagees were only added as formal defendants. Indeed it does not appear to me that it was necessary to add them at all. That decree could not operate in any way to put an end to mortgagees' right to retain possession until the mortgage money was paid. The decree could not be executed by giving possession under Order XXI, rule 35. Order XXI, rule 36, runs: "Where a decree is for the delivery of any immovable property in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same and not bound by the decree to relinquish such occupancy, the Court shall order delivery to be made by affixing a copy of the warrant, etc." Now this is wide enough to include delivery to a person while the property is in the rightful possession of a mortgagee, but such delivery is in fact no delivery at all and has no effect beyond being a notice to the mortgagee that the decree-holder is entitled to redeem. All that the plaintiff got by that decree was a right of reversion or redemption. You cannot deliver possession of a mere right of reversion or redemption. The rule really only applies to a case where the actual possession by a person in occupation is deemed to be possession on behalf of the judgment-debtor. In English Law this will be called delivery of seisin in deed as opposed to seisin in law. In this case there was no change of possession effected by delivery under rule 36. Consequently the plaintiff's decree for recovery of the two annas share and the execution proceedings in pursuance of that decree in no way relieve the plaintiff from the liability to contribution arising out of the redemption of the whole mortgage by the defendants.

Assuming, however, that the lower Court was justified by reason of the oral pleadings of the parties in entering into the consideration whether the mortgagees' right to the two-annas share had come to an end by reason of Musammatt Batash Kunwar's death, its decision is impugned by the appellants on three grounds, and in my opinion successfully impugned on each of them. In the first place, as the plaintiff was bringing a suit for possession of the two-annas share without contribution, it was for him to prove his case. The initial burden of proof, therefore, that the mortgage ceased to affect the two-annas share on Musammatt Batash Kunwar's death was on him and it was for him to prove that the transfer by Musammatt Batash Kunwar was not for legal necessity. This was not a case where the mortgagee could be expected to be more cognisant of the facts attending the execution of the mortgage than the plaintiff. In the second place, the defendants rely on the fact that when the deed of 1892 was executed, it was executed not only by Musammatt Batash Kunwar but also by Musammad Hulas Kunwar, another lady of the family, and by Chandraka Prasad for himself and as guardian of the plaintiff. If Musammatt Batash Kunwar was only recorded as holding the eight-annas share by way of consolation or maintenance, then the transfer was really made by the plaintiff and Chandraka Prasad, in which case no question of legal necessity was involved. If, however, it be held that Musammatt Batash Kunwar was a divided widow, then Chandraka Prasad and the plaintiff being parties to the deed, it must be inferred from their consent that there was legal necessity for the transfer by Musammatt Batash Kunwar. It is urged that they were only parties to the deed in this case in respect of their separate share. The deed, however, does not indicate any such limitation of the position of Chandraka Prasad and the plaintiff. Indeed it is clear from the deed that the mortgagors were executing the mortgage as a joint family and not as a divided family, as was held in the suit by the mortgagees on the basis of it. In the third place, the defendants can take advantage of the mortgagees' decree for possession, dated the 23rd May 1903. This decree for possession by the mortgagees was based on the allegation that the mortgaging family was a joint family. The plaintiff of that case clearly shows allegations to this effect. The judgment, which I have permitted to be filed in this Court by consent of both parties, clearly shows that the question was in issue whether the family was joint or not. The decree was to the effect that the mortgagees should remain in possession of the whole property until repayment of the mortgage money of Rs. 15,000. Reading this decree along with the judgment, it is clear that the Court advisedly inserted this provision, instead of giving a decree merely for possession irrespective of its duration. From the date of this decree as against the mortgagees all the members of the family were debarred from raising the contention that the mortgage, so far as it affected the share recorded in Musammatt Batash Kunwar's name, would cease to operate on her death. The defendants by redeeming the mortgage have a charge over the property as against the plaintiff co-mortgagor for his share of the redemption money. They can certainly take advantage of this decree in favour of the mortgagees. They can, therefore, urge that the plaintiff cannot deny their liability to retain possession pending contribution as long as the mortgagees could have done. It is not necessary to hold that a co-mortgagor paying off a mortgage is a successor-in-interest of the mortgagee in every respect, but he certainly is entitled to all the securities of the mortgagee. He can take advantage of a decree in favour of the mortgagee that the mortgage was good and existed. It has been urged by the plaintiff's Counsel that in this suit the pleadings show that the defendants accepted the allegation of the plaintiff in the plaint that the family was a divided one at the date of the mortgage. This is not admitted by the appellants' Counsel. Be this however as it may, the defendants are not precluded from relying on the judgment and decree in favour of the mortgagees by the fact that those judgment and decree were based on findings of fact inconsistent with the present pleadings. It is open to the defendants to say that the judgment and decree were wrong but that nevertheless as they were not appealed against, they stand good in favour of the mortgagees and that they, the defendants, are entitled to take advantage of this decree in favour of the mortgagees. They are not bound to admit that it was a right decree. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that that suit cannot be deemed to operate as res judicata in favour of the defendants, because the plaintiff as next reversioner of Musammatt Batash Kunwar could not call in question the mortgage executed by her. Hence there was no such issue in that suit as in the present suit and it was not the time for the raising of such an issue. The lower Court, for reasons stated above, is wrong in thinking that there was no issue in that suit as to whether the family was joint or divided. Again, the Court found that the family was joint and its decree was based on this finding. The plaintiff cannot, therefore, plead that in that case he was a party merely as next reversioner. Nor again can it be pleaded that that judgment does not operate as res judicata as between the defendants to that suit. In the present suit, so far as contribution is involved, the defendants are the representatives in interest of the mortgagees and can plead that decree against the plaintiff.

As regards question No. 2, under section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof, he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors for his proportion of the expenses incurred in redeeming. This section clearly contemplates that the entire share of the co-mortgagor must be treated as one unit for the purpose of contribution. It will be absurd to suppose that the co-mortgagor could ask to redeem separate fractions of his share. It is not a question of the integrity of the mortgage being broken up. The mortgage has ceased by redemption to exist, but a charge has arisen under operation of the section in respect of the whole of the co-mortgagors' share and the integrity of the charge on the whole of that share has not been broken up.

I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff should only get a decree for possession of the six-annas share on payment of the full proportionate amount of the redemption money paid by the defendants, that is to say 6 16ths of Rs. 14,512-7, i.e., Rs. 5,442-2. The appeal is allowed with costs to the defendants in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—It is not easy to construe the judgment of the lower Court but reading it as a whole, it appears to me that the facts which the learned Judge intended to find are that defendant Hodi had taken goods of the value of Rs. 75 from the firm jointly owned by plaintiffs and Sukhia, defendant No. 2; that Hodi had actually paid the said sum of Rs. 75 to Sukhia, but that plaintiff was nevertheless entitled to recover the amount from Hodi inasmuch as the latter was not entitled by law to pay a debt to one of two partners. This is obviously an erroneous statement of the law, and the result is that I accept this petition and dismiss plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 87 of 1916, decided on the 25th September 1916, arising out of Civil Suit No. 135 of 1914, in the Court of the Munsif, Hoshangabad, decided on the 23rd March 1916.

Mr. D. W. Kathale, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. V. Joshi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaint on which this suit commenced recites that the plaintiff is a Malguzar and Sadar Lambardar of Mouza Thikwada, Tahsil Sohagpur. R. B. Seth Jiandas was occupancy tenant of field old No. 20 K, 203KH current No. 194 of that village. He executed in favour of the plaintiff a surrender with respect of the said land for Rs. 100 on the 25th September 1913. The land had been leased out that year to the defendants and plaintiff was to take possession in Baisakh Sambat 1970. Defendants, however, refuse to vacate and plaintiff, therefore, asks for possession. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are sons of the 1st defendant Tikaram. The 3rd defendant Dalip Singh pleaded that the land had been leased to him by plaintiff under a patta dated the 3rd April 1914. He at the instigation of plaintiff separated from his father and brother and they have nothing to do with the land in suit.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 denied that they had taken wrongful possession of the land in suit. They have no concern with it, it having been given by the plaintiff to Dalip Singh.

Plaintiff denied the lease to Dalip Singh and the case went to trial on the following issues:—

1. Whether the plaintiff sublet the land in suit to defendant No. 3 for one year as alleged?

2. Whether defendant No. 3 has thus become an ordinary tenant of the land in suit?

3. Are defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in possession of the land, as alleged?

The trial Court held the patta under which Dalip Singh professes to hold the land to be a forgery and decreed plaintiff's claim for possession with costs; and the decision was confirmed in appeal. On the 4th October 1915, when the case was in the first Court, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed an application stating that the matter in dispute had been concluded by arbitration. The award itself was filed on the 6th January 1916. On the 27th January 1916, the Judge held that the award relied upon fell within the definition of an instrument of partition. He held that the award directed a partition. The document was held inadmissible in evidence for want of a stamp, and as defendant did not pay stamp and penalty the document was impounded and sent to the Collector; and defendant's application setting up an adjustment was dismissed. The document has since been validated. In the lower Appellate Court the ground relating to the award was advanced late. It was here argued that the ikrarnama, Exhibit D-3, dated the 27th July 1915, concluded this suit, while for plaintiff it was submitted that the matter in dispute here was not submitted to arbitration. In my remand order I wrote:—

"It seems to me that it must be determined in the present suit whether the land in suit and the dispute regarding it was referred to the arbitrators and whether their award adjusts this dispute."

The following issue was remitted for trial:—

"Whether the subject-matter in this suit was referred to the arbitration of the Panchas and whether the land in suit passed with Mouza Thikwada under the terms of the award to the defendants."

The first Court found that the Panchas were called upon to decide all the disputes, including the dispute relating to the land in suit, and under the award the 1st defendant was to get it with the village of Thikwada. The Judge held that the parties in suit had signed the award. The plaintiff, when examined in the lower Appellate Court, made the following statement:—

"This document (Exhibit D-4a) is in my handwriting, but this document (Exhibit D-7) is not in my handwriting. The land in dispute in Thikwadi is called Jiwandaswale. Another land in the village is also called Jiwandaswale. The expenses given in Exhibit D-4 (a) relate to the land in dispute. As the Panchas were informed to transfer the village along with this land from our party to the other, I gave them an account of the expenses incurred in connection with this land."

The lower Appellate Court confirmed the finding. Despite the above statement objections have been filed to the concurrent findings of the Courts below and the validity of the award is questioned on various grounds. It rests on the plaintiff to show that under Order XXIII, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code there is no lawful adjustment. The objections are these:—

1. The Panchas have ordered the village of Piparia to go to the plaintiff. This is a protected Thekadari and under section 65-A (4) (a) of the C. P. Land Revenue Code, incapable of being transferred.

2. The Panchas have failed to decide about the money-lending of the parties in the different villages. There being no joint money-lending, this was part of the reference and they have not settled it.

3. That the award has not been signed by two of the Panchas and this invalidates it.

4. Rs. 8,300 had to be paid in Vaishakh and has not been paid. Plaintiff has since spent some Rs. 4,000 in payment of Towji and the erection of small buildings.

The reply to this is that the question of the protected village does not arise and the award is merely in the nature of a partition and not a partition, that there is no banking business in existence, and nothing to be realized. All Panchas not having signed the award is a mere irregularity, not invalidating it. Defendants have always been willing to pay, but that is a matter to be gone into when the award is enforced by suit. It is admitted that if the award is valid and the land in suit was referred to the arbitrators, the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed. There is no reasonable doubt from the evidence on record and the plaintiff's statement above quoted that the present dispute was referred to arbitration. In fact it is not seriously contended that it was not. It is not denied that Piparia is a Thekadari village and section 65-A (4) (a) states that "the incidence of the tenure of a Thekadar is that the tenure shall be heritable but not transferable by sale, gift, mortgage or dower; it shall not be saleable in execution of any decree, nor shall a decree be passed for the sale thereof and save in so far as any arrangements to the contrary are in force at the time of the declaration, it shall not be partitioned and shall devolve on one member only of the Thekadar's family." It is clear that the transfer of interest in a Thekadari village is prohibited, and it seems to me that the Piparia village or any portion of it could not be exchanged. The award states that the "four anna patta of Piparia of Tikaram Patel, with all rights, sir, khudkasht, garden, well and houses-3, has been given to Chhotilal Tejiram, etc., for a price of Rs. 9,500." This is practically a sale. For this reason it seems to me that the award is illegal on the face of it and as such not legally enforceable.

A suit can be adjusted wholly or in part by a lawful agreement or compromise and no Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree on a compromise unless it is a lawful compromise. Here the compromise was evidenced by the award and if that is illegal, no decree can pass thereon. The award in my opinion is invalid and a nullity.

In this view of the case it is unnecessary to consider the other points raised against the validity of the award. It is true that the question of the Sowkari business of the parties referred to in the reference to arbitration has not been decided by the award. The fact that two of the Panchas failed to sign the award would not vitiate it: see Ram Narain Ram v. Pati Ram Tewari (1); and the fact that the money mentioned in the award had not been paid would be a matter for the suit in which the award was sought to be enforced. As the suit has not been adjusted, the findings of the two lower Courts as to plaintiff's

RAM SARUP—RESPONDENT.

Landlord and tenant—Joint tenancy—Co-tenant becoming co-sharer in mahal, effect of—Devolution of tenancy—Survivorship—Succession.

Where two brothers are recorded as occupancy tenants, the mere fact that one of them acquires a share in the mahal would not affect the occupancy right which he holds jointly with his brother, notwithstanding that at a subsequent settlement, owing to his becoming one of the proprietors of the mahal, his name is not recorded along with that of his brother as occupancy tenant. In such a case on the death of one of them the other is entitled to the whole of the occupancy holding by survivorship, and not by succession.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Allahabad Division, dated the 9th October 1918, in the case of ejection.

JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—Even if the Commissioner's decision were otherwise correct, he has omitted to notice that he could not in appeal decree the plaintiff-respondent's claim to eject the appellant from all the land without a decision on the second issue as to whether 3 fields were grove and, therefore, not subject to the ejection section of the Tenancy Act. The Assistant Collector had not found it necessary to decide this point as he had dismissed the plaintiff-respondent's, the landholder's suit in toto in the first issue.

But I am clearly of opinion that the Commissioner's decision is incorrect and that of the Assistant Collector was correct. The appellant Khuman Singh and his brother Jodha Singh were recorded occupancy tenants in 1872 Settlement, and again in 1890 revision of Settlement, and again in 1305 Fasli papers. In the 1306 Settlement Jodha Singh alone was recorded, it is true, but that was because Khuman Singh had acquired a share in the mahal. The entry of Jodha Singh alone was undoubtedly a mistake—the brothers were joint and the mere fact that Khuman Singh had become one of the proprietors in the mahal would not, in any way, affect the occupancy right which he had jointly with his brother in the mahal. He and Jodha Singh remained occupancy tenants of this parcel of land in a mahal owned by Khuman Singh and other co-sharers. The Commissioner is wrong in thinking that when Jodha Singh died in 1315, Khuman Singh succeeded to Jodha Singh's occupancy right by inheritance as Jodha Singh's brother. He did not—he was entitled by survivorship to the old occupancy rights which he and Jodha Singh had possessed ever since 1872 and earlier. If the Commissioner had looked into the case as deeply as the Assistant Collector did, he would not have come to the conclusion he did. He starts on the erroneous basis that Khuman Singh had no share in the occupancy rights in 1306. Khuman Singh is undoubtedly an occupancy tenant as now recorded, since the muddle which the supervisor Kanungo made in 1908 was set right in the correction of papers case in 1915.

I would allow the appeal, set aside the Commissioner's appellate order and restore the finding of the Assistant Collector with costs to the appellant throughout.

HOPKINS, J. M.—I agree.

A puisne mortgagee is not bound to set up his right of redemption in a suit against him for ejectment and his failure to do so does not preclude him from relying upon this right in a subsequent suit for possession upon redemption. [p. 278, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 153 of 1916, dated the 20th December 1916, arising out of Civil Suit No. 163 of 1916, dated the 29th September 1916, before the Munsif, Morsi.

Mr. M. Bhowanishankar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Ohitale, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Shrawan Mali was the owner of the house in dispute. By an unregistered instrument he mortgaged it on the 3rd May 1905 to the defendant No. 2, Sakarsa, and he again mortgaged the same property to defendant No. 3, Bhagwant, by an unregistered instrument on the 21st May 1905. In Civil Suit No. 362 of 1907, Bhagwant Rao obtained a foreclosure decree against Shrawan Mali, which was made absolute on the 10th December 1908. Thereafter he sold the house to the plaintiff Bali Ram on the 30th June 1913. In the meanwhile defendant No. 2, Sakarsa, sued on his mortgage Shrawan Mali and one Sheoratan Das in Civil Suit No. 352 of 1909 and obtained a final decree for foreclosure on the 7th October 1910 and got possession of the house on the 7th January 1911. Sakarsa sold the house by a registered instrument to the defendant No. 1, Narayan, on 13th March 1912. In Suit No. 973 of 1909 Bhagwant sued one Sheoratan Das for foreclosure and eventually obtained a decree in the Appellate Court on the 20th March 1911. In execution of this decree Bhagwant dispossessed the defendant Narayan on 6th January 1913, whereupon on 28th January 1913 Narayan applied for restoration of possession under Order XXI, rule 100, Civil Procedure Code, (Miscellaneous Case No. 11 of 1913). The proceedings terminated on the 17th January 1914 by an order in favour of defendant No. 1, Narayan. During the pendency of these proceedings the sale by Bhagwant to the plaintiff took place. Defendant No. 1, Narayan, being again dispossessed, instituted Suit No. 253 of 1914 in which the present plaintiff, who was the contesting defendant, figured as defendant No. 3. A decree for ejectment was passed in favour of Narayan and was upheld in first appeal. A copy of the appellate judgment has been filed and is Exhibit D-1.

The present suit has been instituted by Bali Ram for redemption of the mortgage in favour of Sakarsa who is to all intents and purposes represented in this suit by defendant No. 1. It is not questioned that the sale to the plaintiff had the effect of conveying Bhagwant's right, as a mortgagee. The plaintiff and his predecessors were never parties to the foreclosure decree obtained by defendant No. 2. The plaintiff, therefore, as a representative of the second mortgage has a right to redeem the prior mortgage, both mortgages being unregistered. But the defendant No. 1 pleaded lis pendens and res judicata and the plea has been successful in the Courts below.

Now the plaintiff's sale took place when Miscellaneous Case No. 11 of 1913 was pending. The effect of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act is that the sale cannot affect the rights of Narayan under the order passed under rule 101 of Order XXI. As no suit was filed within one year to contest that order, it became conclusive under rule 103 as to the right to the present possession of the property. It does not affect the plaintiff's right to possession after redemption, provided his right to redeem has not been otherwise lost. I am unable to agree with the respondents' contention that a right to possession upon redemption is a right to the present possession of the property. I see, therefore, no force in the argument based upon section 52.

The next point which requires a decision is whether the plaintiff was bound to set up his right of redemption in Suit No. 253 of 1914 where he was joined as defendant No. 3. The lower Courts have held that explanation IV to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code governs this case. Explanation IV says :—

"Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

If the former suit had been one under Order XXXIV, the plaintiff was bound to enforce his right of redemption. But the suit was one in ejectment based on prior possession. Might the plaintiff have raised his right of redemption by way of defence? And further ought he to have raised it? Unless both these conditions are fulfilled, there is no constructive res judicata. My answers to both the questions are in the negative, though not without some hesitation with regard to the first. In Ganesh Das v. Khumansingh (1) Stevens, J. C., doubts whether there can be any entering into accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee except in a suit for foreclosure or redemption, and he refers to an earlier case where a defendant who set up a right of redemption was told to bring a suit for redemption. Assuming, however, that a defendant can in a suit for possession obtain relief by way of redemption, I am certainly not prepared to say that the present plaintiff was bound to do so in Suit No. 253. He had made no tender nor had he deposited the money. Accounts had not been settled. Whilst in a suit for foreclosure, a subsequent mortgagee must be prepared to pay the money or be foreclosed, he need not seek to redeem when he is not called upon to do so and may select his own time for redemption. The mere existence of a right to redeem is not a defence to a suit for ejectment. It is the exercise of that right by satisfying the conditions required by law which might be a good defence. In my opinion the plaintiff was not bound to exercise that right in the previous suit. Therefore, the right to redeem was not a defence of which we can say that he "ought" to have raised.

A right of pre-emption stands on a different footing, as such a right must be exercised immediately after the pre-emptor hears of the sale.

After the above judgment was dictated, the appellant's learned Pleader drew my attention to a case reported as Mahomed Ibrahim v. Hamja Mahomed Ally (2). The observations made at page 899* support my view.

It is urged that there was an express decision in the former suit that the plaintiff's sale was absolutely void. The word "absolutely" does not occur in the appellate judgment (D-1). All that was held was that the present plaintiff could not set up the sale deed to shew a title to possession. His right to redeem the prior mortgage was not in dispute then, nor was there a decision regarding it.

It is agreed that the plaintiff has to pay Rs. 150 as the price of redemption.

The decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the usual decree for redemption will be passed. The plaintiff will pay the costs of defendant No. 1 in the first Court and bear his own costs in that Court. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs in the two Appellate Courts.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 11—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 131—Partition, when comes into effect—Khudkasht holding allotted to mahal in which holder is not proprietor—Tenancy, commencement of—Occupancy rights, accrual of.

Under section 131 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, a partition takes effect on the 1st of July, following the date of confirmation of the partition. Consequently, where a mahal is partitioned and the land of a khudkasht holder is allotted to a new mahal in which he is not a proprietor, such holder can only count occupation from that date towards the accrual of occupancy rights. [p. 279, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 15th July 1918, in the case of ejectment.

GOVINDA v. UMRAO SINGH.

JUDGMENT.—There is no dispute as to facts. The appellant Ramnath was khudkasht holder of the land in suit in a joint mahal. In 1903—5, a partition took place. The partition proceeding was confirmed on 30th July 1903, lots were filed by the Amin on 4th July 1904, this land being allotted thereby to respondents' mahal; the partition was confirmed by the Collector on 6th April 1905, to take effect on 1st July 1905, as provided by section 131, Land Revenue Act. The Commissioner has held that appellant's position as a tenant in the respondents' mahal commences from the latter date; if either that date, 1st July 1905, or date of confirmation, 7th April 1905, be taken, the appellant has less than 12 years' tenancy to his credit on 2nd September 1916, date of institution of the present suit, which the respondent has brought to eject him as a non-occupancy tenant. The appellant's contention is that, as held by the Assistant Collector, he is entitled to count his period of tenancy from 4th July 1904, the date of allotment by the Amin of the land to the respondent's lot. He relies on Swami Mukand Lal v. Ram Sarup (1).

I am in entire agreement with the Commissioner in holding that Swami Mukand Lal v. Ram Sarup (1) is not applicable. It has no reference to the question of when tenancy begins in such cases. It merely lays down, for reasons of practical necessity chiefly, that land which is khudkasht not carrying exproprietary right on the date of its allotment in partition to the kurra of another co-sharer cannot become khudkasht carrying exproprietary right in the period between that date and the date the partition is confirmed. It does not say, either definitely or by implication, that the khudkasht holder becomes a tenant from that date, in the kurra to which the Amin allots the land. Nor can it be so. The constitution of the proprietary body of the joint mahal is unaltered till the partition takes effect under section 131 on the 1st of July following the Collector's order confirming the Amin's proposals. The proprietors of the new lots have their status from that date only, and even then it does not come into effective being till 1st July following. It is quite immaterial that under Gopi Nath v. Abdul Aziz (2) they are allowed to file suits against existing tenants when once the Collector has confirmed the partition, in advance of the date on which the partition takes effect. That is quite a different matter, which does not enter into the present consideration. The important fact is that no rent is payable to the new proprietors or to anyone else by the khudkasht holder in the joint mahal, whose land has been allotted to a new mahal in which he is not a proprietor, until the 1st July following the date of confirmation of partition. Up to that date he is a khudkasht holder; from that date he is a tenant and can only count occupation from that date towards accrual of occupancy right.

The Commissioner is right. The appellant is a tenant since 1st July 1905 only and had not completed 12 years when the suit to eject him was filed on 2nd September 1916. He is liable to ejectment and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ing the order of the Subordinate Judge, Amraoti, dated the 23rd November 1917.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. V. Deshmukh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The lower Appellate Court has held that the appeal to that Court was not properly presented. The petition of appeal was accompanied by a certified copy of the order complained of. The order embodied a finding that the application for execution is not barred by section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. The District Judge, on the authority of Qasim Ali Khan v. Bhagwanta Kuar (1), accepted the contention that a copy of the formal order to be found in the order sheet, should have been filed as a copy of the decree. The entry in the order-sheet is to the following effect: 'Order passed, application is not time-barred.' I cannot regard this as a decree. Unlike the Allahabad High Court, this Court does not insist on the Subordinate Court drawing up a formal decree in execution proceedings, nor is it the practice here to do so. The entry in the order-sheet merely shows what the Judge has been doing and is not treated here as a decree. I prefer to follow Khirode Sundari Debi v. Jnanendra Nath Pal (2). I hold that the appeal was properly filed in the Court of the District Judge.

The decree sought to be executed was passed on the 24th June 1905 and the present application for execution was made on the 29th August 1917, that is, more than twelve years after the date of the decree. Frima facie the execution is barred under section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code. But the lower Appellate Court finds that there was fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor which prevented the execution of the decree on two occasions and hence the case comes under section 48 (2) (a). The fact that the father of the judgment-debtor raised a frivolous objection to the attachment of the house on the allegation that it was his exclusive property, cannot be regarded as fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor, who is not shown to have taken any part in the proceedings and, moreover, lives separate from his father.

The other occasion referred to by the lower Appellate Court requires a more detailed statement of the facts and if the learned District Judge had carefully read the findings of his predecessor in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 138 of 1913, he would have come to a different conclusion as regards the alleged obstructive tactics said to have been resorted to by the judgment-debtor in delaying proceedings. The original decree-holder was a minor Narayansingh under the guardianship of his mother Musammatt Renuka. This decree in a partition suit came to the share of the present decree-holder. The judgment-debtor alleged that there was an adjustment of the decree and prayed that the decree be certified as adjusted. He succeeded in the first Court. But on appeal (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 138 of 1913) the District Judge held that there was a compromise of the decree as alleged but without the sanction of the Court. It was found that the judgment-debtor had not notice that the decree had since been assigned to the present respondent. The District Judge recorded a finding that Rs. 1,350 was paid to Musammatt Renuka in full satisfaction of the claim, but the appeal succeeded on the ground that the application to have the adjustment certified was barred by time, having been made after ninety days. Upon the above statement of the facts, it is obviously impossible to hold that there was fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor with intent to delay the proceedings. On the contrary the judgment-debtor had a bona fide claim, which though recognised by the first Court failed in the Court of Appeal on the sole ground that it was barred by limitation. The view taken by the lower Appellate Court cannot, therefore, be upheld.

The respondent tries to support the decree on the ground that there was a stay of execution and that under section 15 of the Limitation Act, he is entitled to a deduction of time which would bring the application within time. I am not prepared to accept this contention in the absence of any authority in support of it. The case relied upon Peary Mohun Aich v. Anunda Oharan Biswas (3) did not decide that section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1877, applied to section 230 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, but that the decree holder was entitled to the benefit of the rule laid down in that section on the broad principle that when the parties are prevented from doing a thing on a particular day, not by any act of their own, but by the act of the Court itself, they are entitled to do it at the first subsequent opportunity. It will be an undue extension of the maxim "actus curiæ neminem gravabit" to deduct the whole of the period during which the proceedings were stayed, in the absence of a specific statutory rule applicable to the case, especially as section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code allows the long period of twelve years. The maxim does not lay down a rule for the computation of time and has, so far as I know, never been so applied.

It would appear that where force or fraud is proved, that gives a fresh starting point, but there is no deduction of any particular period from the prescribed period of twelve years [Venkayya v. Raghava Charlu (4), Mohsin Ali v. Masoom Ali (5)]. The section does not seem to contemplate a deduction from the period fixed. I, therefore, hold that the present application is barred by section 48.

The result is that the appeal succeeds and the decrees, of the Courts below are set aside and the application for execution is dismissed with costs in all Courts. I fix ten rupees as Pleader's fee in this Court.

Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1833), ss. 12, 13

—Temple committee and trustee, nature of relations between—Archaka, duty of, to obey trustee in preference to committee—Archaka, rights and duties of—Trustee, power of, to dismiss archaka.

A temple committee constituted under the Religious Endowments Act has no business to interfere in the internal management of the temple or in mere matters of ritual or ceremonial. They should not interfere with the trustee, except where interference is necessary in discharge of the secular duties which the Act imposes on the committee. The committee's functions are primarily to see that the funds of the endowment are preserved and not wasted. [p. 283, col. 2.]

Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar, 21 M. 179 at p. 181 and Tiruvengadath Ayyangar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar, 22 M. 361 at p. 363, followed.

An archaka is bound to obey the trustee in preference to the committee in the matter of the distribution of honours and the trustee has power to dismiss even a hereditary archaka. [p. 283, col. 2.]

An archaka cannot withhold the honours due to the ubayakars of the temple on the ground that his perquisites have been withheld and such conduct would entail his dismissal. [p. 283, col. 2; p. 284, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 107 of 1917, (Appeal Suit No. 29 of 1917 on the file of the District Court, Chingleput,) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvellore, in Original Suit No. 304 of 1915.

FACTS —An Archaka in a temple, having failed to show the usual honours to the trustee and two devotees and disobeyed an express order of the trustee on the ground that the temple committee had passed a different rule, was dismissed by the trustee. Hence the present suit by the Archaka. The lower Appellate Court found that the temple was within the purview of Act XX of 1863 subject to the superintendence of the temple committee and that the rule passed by the temple committee was competent and reasonable and so decreed the suit. The lower Court also found that the Archaka bona fide believed that the committee was an authority superior to the trustee.

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar with him Mr. Sankara Sastri, for the Appellant.—The display of honours to devotees and others in the temple is a matter of pure ritual. A temple committee has no power to interfere with the trustee in matters of ritual. Tiruvengadath Ayyangar v. Srinivasa

NILI RANGASAMI MUDALIAR v. KARI KRISHNA BATTACHARIAR.

Thathachariar (1). Its functions are confined to seeing that the endowments are utilised for their legitimate purpose and are not wasted. See Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar (2). So the rule passed by the committee in this case is not legally binding on the trustee whose order is the only valid order. The Archaka is only a temple servant, liable to be dealt with by the trustee as he may see reason to do whether by way of dismissal or by suspension. He has no excuse for setting up a rule of the committee in defiance of the trustee's orders. That is clear disobedience. See Seshadri Aiyongar v. Ranga Bhattar (3). See also Second Appeal No. 226 of 1911 (unreported), which clearly says that Archakas are not to set up their judgment against that of the trustee who can dismiss them for good reasons. It won't matter even if they are hereditary Archakas. See also Sundararama Sastri v. Anantha Krishna Naidu (4), Ramanathan Ohettiar v. Swaminatha Aiyar (5), Subba Naidu v. Gopalaswamy Naidu (6).

As regards bona fides there is none. It was the Archaka who moved the committee to pass the rule in question. The rule is ultra vires of the committee and the Archaka is guilty of wilful disobedience and misconduct.

Mr. T. R. Venkatrama Sastri, for the Respondent.—The temple committee has certain visitatorial powers included in their power of superintendence, and in the exercise of such powers they can say that certain things should be done in a certain manner in the interests of the temple. Sitharam Ohetty v. Subramania Aiyar (7). The powers of the committee ought to be construed liberally. See also Kristnasamy Tatachary v. Gomatum Rangacharry (8).

In this case the Archaka felt a bona fide doubt as to who was entitled to the honour in question known as the 'Sirkar' honour. The trustee claimed it for himself. Hence the reference to the temple committee. The trustee also deferred to the arbitration of the committee.

[ODGERS, J.—He was sent for.]

And the committee passed an order. The Archaka was entitled to certain emoluments when the honour had to be shown. The trustee, by order, took them away. The Archaka bona fide appealed to the committee who were the trustee's superiors. It was quite against the usage of the temple for a trustee to pass such an order.

In any event I submit that no case has been made out for a dismissal.

At any rate, the Archaka, having been really aggrieved, acted under a bona fide doubt and he is not liable on the ground of disobedience for any act done in consequence of the proceedings of the committee.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff (respondent) is the hereditary Archaka for performing certain Poojas in the Sri Krishna Perumal Devasthanam. He was dismissed from his office by the 1st defendant (appellant before us), the Trustee of the Devasthanam since 1909, and brought his suit to declare that his dismissal was improper and for an injunction to restrain, inter alia, 1st defendant from excluding him (plaintiff) from his rights and for Rs. 343-80 damages respecting the value of honours detained from the plaintiff by 1st defendant.

The District Munsif decreed that, upon plaintiff filing in Court an undertaking that he will faithfully obey the orders of the trustee or his deputy for the time being in all the matters pertaining to the Archakaship, including the showing of temporal honours by garland, Theertham and the like to Ubayakars, and generally to conduct himself in subordination to the trustee in respect of his duties, the order of dismissal should be set aside and the plaintiff restored to office. He also granted an injunction, but found against plaintiff on the subject of emoluments. The Temporary Subordinate Judge confirmed this decree, but awarded the plaintiff emoluments as claimed by him. NILI RANGASAMI MUDALIAR v. KARI KRISHNA BATTACHARIAR.

ant appealed. The charges against the plaintiff were set out at length and two sets of these were dealt with in argument before us, viz., charges IV, VI, and IX together and charges VIII and X together. The first set of charges relates to non-observance on plaintiff's part of garland honours due to the 1st defendant; the second set relates to the non-observance of honours to certain Ubayakars. The plaintiff's answer to the first set of charges is that the orders of the 1st defendant were contrary to the Mamul of the temple; his answer to the second set is that his Swathanthrams were not paid to him.

The real fact seems to be that this is a contest between the temple committee on the one hand and the trustee on the other. The temple committee issued orders relating to the garland honours in Exhibit III dated June 1913. It is stated that the Amin, who was the 1st defendant's deputy, was refused garland honours subsequently to this by plaintiff, in consequence of Exhibit III. First defendant thereupon issued Exhibit I in January 1914, laying down the procedure as to these honours. All these relate to charges IV, VI and IX. As before stated, the answer to the charges VIII and X was that 1st defendant withheld the perquisites due to plaintiff. The question really is whose authority the plaintiff is bound to obey—can he set up the authority of the temple committee as against the trustee? Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri has argued that the temple committee can intervene to see that the Mamul of the temple is carried out. The Subordinate Judge found that there was nothing to show what the Mamul was and that Exhibit III was an illegal document. He seems to think, however, that the plaintiff might be justified in regarding the committee as having the authority of overriding that of 1st defendant in these matters. Both Courts found the charges proved against plaintiff. We had a long discussion as to the effect of certain provisions of Madras Regulation VII of 1817 Endowments and Escheats, and the Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863) in order to support the contention of the plaintiff as to the authority of the temple committee, but on a consideration of these enactments we are satisfied that it could never have been intended that the Government as represented by the Board of Revenue or the temple committee, as the successor of the Board, should intervene on a question of the kind before us, viz., purely temporal honours to certain definite persons. Section 15 of the Regulation and section 12 of the Act seem to us to be perfectly clear to exclude such matters as those in suit entirely.

As to the respective powers of the temple committee and the trustee, reference may be made to Seshadri Ayyangar v. Nataraja Ayyar (2), where at page 189 it is stated: "The question was much discussed whether the matters mentioned in the order relating to the conduct of the festival were within the scope of the committee's authority, the committee being primarily concerned to see only to the preservation and proper disposition of the temple property. In our opinion, having regard to the language of the Act the committee have no business to interfere in the internal management of the temple or in mere matters of ritual or ceremonial. Their interference with the trustee is unauthorised and improper, save so far as it can be justified as necessary in discharge of the secular duties which the Act imposes on the committee." In Tiruvengadath Ayyangar v. Srinivasa Thathachariar (1) the learned Judges say that "it is not part of the duty of the committee to interfere with the trustees in matters of ritual. The business of the committee is primarily to see that the endowments are appropriated to their legitimate purposes and are not wasted." Reference may also be made to Sundarama Sastri v. Anantha Krishna Naidu (4). There also appears to us to be ample authority to show that the Archaka is bound to obey the trustee and that the trustee has power to dismiss the Archaka, even though hereditary. See Seshadri Ayyangar v. Ranga Bhuttar (3) and Krishnasamy Tatachary v. Gomatum Rangacharry (8). It is, therefore, our opinion that the plaintiff was bound to obey the orders of the trustee and not those of the committee in the matters complained of. We also think that the answer on the second set of charges must fail. It was clearly the duty of the plaintiff to pay the honours and to recover his perquisites if withheld abunde. He was not justified in refusing to carry out the orders of the 1st defendant in the matter of these honours on the ground that his perquisites were withheld.

Reference was made by Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri to the opinion of Wallis, C. J., in Sitharam Chetty v. Subramania Aiyar (7), viz., that, in his Lordship's view, some of the earlier decisions had unduly fettered the discretion of temple committees. The case in question was a scheme suit, and it does not appear to us that what is said there can affect the present case which is one between the trustee and a temple servant. In our opinion the case is clearly proved against plaintiff and what he did would have justified his dismissal by the 1st defendant, but as there is no appeal as to this, the order as to his restoration on an undertaking will stand. With regard to the emoluments, we think, the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong. In decreeing emoluments to the plaintiff the latter was placed in the position of drawing pay for the interval between his dismissal and his suit and consequently suffered not at all for his acts of disobedience to the order of the trustee for which, in our opinion, he deserves punishment, and we adopt the view of the District Munsif on this question.

In the result the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the Munsif restored. The plaintiff will pay 1st defendant's costs throughout. Respondent's (plaintiff's) memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

applicability of—Appeal heard after death of respondent—Application to set aside proceedings—Inherent power of Court—Remedy, proper.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be invoked in aid of an application to an Appellate Court, asking that proceedings before it in an appeal be set aside as a nullity on the ground that on the date of hearing of the appeal the respondent was not living. The correct procedure is to apply, within the period of limitation, for a review of the judgment passed in the appeal. [p. 285, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the order of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 11th May 1918.

Mr. B. R. Pendharkar, for the Applicants.

Mr. D. N. Khare, R. B., for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—The applicant filed a suit, Civil Suit No. 156 of 1914, against one Sheoprasad, father of the non-applicants, in the Court of the Junior Sub-Judge, Wardha, on 14th February 1916. It was decided in his favour. Sheoprasad appealed to the Court of the Divisional Judge, Nagpur, Civil Appeal No. 43 of 1916, on 9th September 1916. That appeal was heard on 28th August 1916, and judgment delivered on 9th September 1916. Applicant then filed a second appeal in this Court, No. 14 of 1917; that was disposed of on the 22nd January 1918 by the following order:—

"Mr. B. R. Pendharkar, Pleader, appears for the appellant and says the respondent died on 21st July 1916, before this appeal was filed and before the decree appealed was passed, and even before the appeal was heard. In the circumstances the appeal abates and is dismissed as abated."

Applicant then on 8th April 1918 applied to the District Court, Wardha, under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, asking that as Sheoprasad, appellant, was not living on the date of hearing or the date of decision by the Divisional Judge his proceedings were a nullity and asked for an order to that effect. The District Judge was of opinion that the case was not one under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code and dismissed the application. Against that order the present application for revision is filed.

It seems to me that the circumstances complained of do not bring the case within the four corners of section 151.

BANSI RAM v. KUNJ BEHARI.

UTTAM CHAND SALIGRAM v. MAHMOOD JEWAMAAMOOJI.

That section is not meant to apply to these cases. It was defendant's business within the period of limitation to apply to the Divisional Judge for review of the judgment passed. This he failed to do. He did not come here in revision. He is as much to blame as Sheoprasad's heirs in not informing the Divisional Judge that the appellant was dead at the date of the hearing. I find it difficult to believe that the applicant was not in possession of information regarding Sheoprasad's death, considering that Sheoprasad lived at Malod, a village of which the applicant is admittedly the malguzar, and though he does not live there he has servants there. The applicant has misconceived his remedy. The road he should have taken, as I have pointed out, was to have applied in revision to the Divisional Judge's Court. I see no reason to interfere and as the case obviously cannot be dealt with under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, I dismiss this application with costs. I fix Pleader's fees at Rs. 15.

Application dismissed.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22—"Sharing in cultivation," what is—Boy of 8 or 10 doing petty work for relative, whether sharer in cultivation.

A boy aged between 8 to 10 or 11 years, who lives with an agricultural relative and does such petty work as is usually done by boys of that age, cannot be said to be "sharing in cultivation" with his relative within the meaning of section 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Gorakhpur Division, dated the 9th October 1918, in the case of ejection.
JUDGMENT.

FERARD, S. M.—(April 15, 1919.)—The holding was Ramphal's occupancy. His widow, Musammat Sheomani, mortgaged it with possession in 1303. Respondent Kunjbehari is his daughter's son. The main point argued is whether Kunjbehari was old enough to share in cultivation with Ramphal at his death put before 1303. There is no doubt that he lived with his grandparent, but this is not enough.

The first Court put Kunjbehari's age at 26. The Commissioner puts him down at a bit over 30, possibly even 35. He is at present in Court and I age him at 30 to 32. If Ramphal died only the year before his widow mortgaged the holding, i. e., in 1302, Kunjbehari could only have been about eight years old. I do not hold that the petty jobs which boys of 8 to 10 or 11 can do for their agricultural relatives can amount to "sharing in cultivation" with their agricultural relatives.

The Commissioner says that in a miscellaneous correction of records case, the appellant's karinda said that Kunjbehari shared in cultivation with his grandfather. This is not accurate. He only said he was "shamil sharik" with him which does not go further than that he lived with him. It cannot be taken as an admission that this small boy co-shared in cultivation with him within the meaning of section 22.

I would allow the appeal and, setting aside the Commissioner's appellate order, would restore that of the Assistant Collector, with costs to appellant throughout.

HOPKINS, J. M. (May 9, 1919)—I agree.

Arbitration—Dispute, existence of, whether necessary—Interest, award of, whether invalidates award—

UTTAM CHAND SALIG RAM v. MAHMOOD JEW A MAHMOOJI.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 62—Settlement contract, whether discharges original contract.

It is an essential condition for an arbitrator's jurisdiction that when his arbitration is demanded there shall be in existence a dispute between the parties. [p. 286, col. 2.]

On 27th April petitioner agreed to sell to the respondent a certain quantity of Hessian cloth at Rs. 30. Delivery of one-half was to be made in May and of the other half in June. Delivery not having been made in May and not being proposed to be made in June, two settlement contracts were entered into on the 31st May and the 6th June respectively and the same goods were re-sold by the respondent to the petitioner at Rs. 35. The respondent duly sent in bills but the petitioner, although admitting liability for the amount of respondent's bills, withheld payment by claiming to set it off against a larger sum than would be due to the petitioner from the respondent on other accounts. According to the terms of the contracts between the parties the respondent referred the dispute to arbitration and the arbitrators, appointed by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, gave their award in favour of the respondent and allowed interest on the claim. On an application by the petitioner to set aside the award:

Held, (1) that as the petitioner was withholding payment under a claim of right to do so, there was a 'dispute' between the parties, and this gave the arbitrators jurisdiction in the matter; [p. 288, col. 1.]

(2) that after the settlement contract was made the original contract was not utterly discharged by virtue of section 62 of the Contract Act; [p. 288, col. 2.]

(3) that the award was not bad because it awarded interest as it was for the arbitrators to decide this, and they had jurisdiction to decide it. [p. 289, cols. 1 & 2.]

When a settlement contract is made re-selling the goods back again from the original buyer, the intention is not that after the settlement contract the first contract should be discharged: the intention is that the two contracts should stand together. [p. 288, col. 2.]

Mr. M. N. Basu, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. N. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside an award made by the arbitrators appointed by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. In this case the original contract No. 59B made on the 27th April of last year was for sale of one lac of yards of Hessian cloth, the price was Rs. 30, delivery of one-half was to be made in May, and the other half in June. On that contract the petitioner was the seller, and the respondent the buyer. Delivery not having been made in May, and not being proposed to be made in June, two settlement contracts were entered into on the 31st May and the 6th June respectively. These are numbered 67 B and 70B, and the price at which the same number of yards, the same goods, was re-sold by the respondent to the petitioner was Rs. 35.

Now the first matter which the petitioner alleges as a reason for having this award set aside is that at the time the arbitration was called there was no dispute, and I am quite satisfied that it is an essential condition for the arbitrator's jurisdiction that at the time the arbitration is demanded there shall be in existence a dispute; at all events unless the petitioner here has done something to submit to jurisdiction afterwards upon a dispute subsequently arising, that must be a condition of the validity of the award. Now the arbitration here was called or demanded on the 2nd August 1918, and the petitioner's case is that he admitted his liability. He says that the mere fact that he did not pay does not amount to a dispute. On that I have to examine how the facts stand. Under the settlement contracts the delivery was not overdue until after the 31st May and the 30th June respectively, and the money difference was payable by the terms of those contracts by the 1st June and 1st July respectively. On the 31st May and on the 26th June the respondent sent in bills for the correct amount, of course at that time including no claim for interest. Those bills and the petitioner's receipts, therefore, have been produced before me.

Now these parties had various other dealings with each other upon entirely different contracts. Taking these other dealings together as a whole, there is a dispute on the evidence before me, a dispute as to which I cannot possibly now decide, whether they result or will result in a balance due from the petitioner to respondent or from respondent to petitioner. What is certain is that with the possible exception of a sum of Rs. 1,200 incidentally referred to in the letter of the 15th August and as to which I am not given a scrap of information, it is not even alleged by the petitioner that any item entering into the account upon which such balance would have to be struck was due to him at or even about the 1st July 1918. There is no award as regards any item in the petitioner's favour. In that state of affairs the petitioner admitted liability for the amount of respondent's bills in the matter now in question. Having done that, he contends now, and has all along contended, that there could not possibly exist any dispute. In my opinion this is a non sequitur, and the petition discloses an excellent illustration of its falsity. In paragraph 7 of the petition the petitioner says this:—

"That your petitioner has always admitted the claims of the said Uttam Chand Saligram for Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 2,000 mentioned above and in fact offered to credit him with the said amount in their account with your petitioner. That this offer was made by your petitioner prior to the submission to the arbitration hereinafter mentioned and that there was no dispute whatsoever in connection with the said settlement contracts or as to the amount payable by your petitioner. That on the 24th July 1918 your petitioner wrote to the said Uttam Chand Saligram accepting their bills for Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 2,000 and offering to credit them in their account with the same. The following is a true copy of the said letter:—

"Calcutta, 24th July 1918.

"Babu Uttam Chand Saligram.

"Dear Sir,

"I have received your two letters of even date re your bills for Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 2,000. In reply as there will be a big outstanding against you of mine commencing from this month, say over Rs. 12,000, I keep the above amount as margin against same crediting your account, which note."

Now I am of opinion that the effect of the letter of 24th July is that it is a claim to set off the amount in question against the big outstanding. It is quite clever to describe it as an offer, but it is quite absurd. In the face of the demand for payment the suggestion of set-off is not a proposal for the advantage of the respondent, but a decision of the petitioner for his own advantage. It is not only a claim, but it is put forward in the letter as a reasonable claim. The letter that follows of 15th August, though written after the arbitration had been called, throws light on the meaning of the letter of 24th July. The same claim is put forward as regards the question of set-off. In fact it shows that the position at all material times was this. Two people, each arguing as and when it suited him that accrued debts due from him should not be paid, and each resisting the same claim as and when it suited him on the ground that it was absurd. Now that is a dispute. It has often been pointed out that there are two elements or aspects of every debt, the debitum and the solvendum. A dispute as to the latter would be just as much a dispute as would a dispute as to the former. So, too, the Law Reports are full of questions as to the right of set-off, and the Courts have taken much time and pains in deciding them. If they give ample room for litis contestatio in the Courts, I do not see why, when parties are at loggerheads about them, it can be held there is no dispute. To take this point with any chance of success the petitioner would have to satisfy me that what he calls his offer, and what I will call his proposal, was one made without claim of right at all. He would have to show that the attitude he took was this: "I owe the money and am bound to pay it at once, but I am simply not going to do so." If this position was maintained exactly and consistently, it may be that there was no room for an arbitration. Such a position, however, is one of unstable equilibrium. It is like the position of the extreme sceptic in philosophy who affirms there is no true knowledge. This is quite unanswerable until you assert it; when you do you contradict yourself. Certainly any person who is desirous of evading arbitration by taking up this position would be well advised not to write letters to explain and justify his conduct. The better the letter the worse his chance. I do not read the letter of 24th July as a statement that petitioner is not going to pay at once contrary to or in despite of his obligations. His attitude, whatever it may have been, was not put forward as one of cynical disregard of obligation. Recently the case of Chandan Mall v. Donald Campbell & Co., decided in the House of Lords on 4th December 1916 was brought to my notice. It is not, I understand, in the Law Reports, but a report* will be found in the paper book in the Appeal in this Court, No. 42 of 1917. In that case Lord Sumner disposed of the very same sort of point as arises here in these words: "The real point is this. It is suggested that the appellant really disputed nothing, but simply could not, or would not pay; in other words, he lacked either money or honesty. My Lords, I cannot assume in Mr. Chandanmull's favour that he was wanting in either. If it be the case that no further dispute arises out of the contract when nothing capable of being disputed is to be found, and nothing is alleged to be disputable, I still think that if the appellant's attitude can be explained consistently with any recognition of his business obligations, this should be done." I think this reasoning directly applicable to the letter of July 14th and to the petitioner's conduct, if there be any doubt as to their true meaning, but in truth the petitioner's later letters to the Chamber, his petition itself in paragraphs 5, 6 and 12, paragraph 6 of the affidavit filed in his behalf in reply, all show conclusively that he was withholding payment under a claim of right so to do. That the claim had little substance makes his case so much the worse. In the cases to which I have been referred as having been decided by my brother Greaves and my brother Chaudhuri—Gordhan Das Benarasi Lal v. B. Nathumal & Co. and Narendra Nath Bavu v. Ramanaran Jailal, I do not gather from their judgments that there was any question of a dispute about right of set-off. Whatever the facts may have been, it is clear that the cases as ultimately presented to the Court in these actions required the Court to decide nothing, and that it decided nothing, which assists me in dealing with the particular facts in the present case.

*The judgment of the House of Lords is printed Appendix to this judgment at p. 289.—Ed.

So far I have left out all reference to any dispute about interest. By his letter of the 2nd August demanding arbitration, of which a copy is not before me, but which is referred to in the petition, the respondent put into writing a claim for interest. It is not contended that the petitioner has at any time admitted that respondent had any right to this, and petitioner still maintains that any claim for interest is bad. I have, therefore, to see whether this claim was put forward in the letter of 2nd August for the first time. Now, I have no previous letter from the respondent in which this claim is alleged, but then I have no letters from the respondent in evidence before me at all, save one of 9th September. What is certain is that while the date of the first claim for interest is nowhere specifically dealt with in the petition, the affidavit of Mulraj asserts that the plaintiff had refused to pay interest, and the affidavit of Ismaile does not challenge the respondent's statement as to this at all. In face of the petitioner's conduct in claiming a set-off against future debts, and delay in making payment, I think that a demand for interest was almost inevitable. As it has appeared to two commercial gentlemen to be well founded, I should be in favour of the respondent on this point, in view of the petitioner's attitude, even if I thought that the demand was made and persisted in partly for the purpose of forcing the petitioner from a nicely balanced attitude of disputing nothing and doing nothing.

The next point that was taken by the petitioner was this. He said that not only was there no dispute but that there was no submission. He said that the award was made upon the original contract No. 59B, and that after the settlement contracts that contract was gone by virtue of section 62 of the Indian Contract Act. This is a point not taken in the petition and if it be a matter of discretion on my part, as I think it is, in view of the unmeritorious nature of the point, I should not give to the petitioner any indulgence by way of allowing him to take it. At the same time as it is a matter of importance, I would like to say that in my view the point is bad. In a case like this one has to attend not only to the substance of the contracts between the parties, but to the form. When a settlement contract is made re-selling the goods back again from the original buyer, the intention is not that after the settlement contract the first contract should be gone. The intention is that the two contracts should stand together. That being so, there can be a set-off as regards delivery, and there can be a set-off as regards price for every thing except the difference. It seems to me to be abusing section 62 of the Contract Act to say that after a settlement contract the original contract is utterly discharged. Curiously enough in the case which the petitioner relied upon before me, decided by Mr. Justice Greaves, the objection taken there was all the other way. There the objection was that "the contract on which the award was founded was only a settlement contract, i. e., a contract which merely fixes the amount of the liability between the parties, and that even although it is made on a form containing an arbitration clause, any such clause cannot in fact be applicable," and with regard to that Mr. Justice Greaves said:—"I think that this fact, having regard to the fact that it was made on a form which contained the arbitration clause, does not by itself oust the jurisdiction of the Chamber to arbitrate as regards that." But I gather that Mr. Justice Greaves' view was so far in agreement with the view that was being put before him that he thought it would be safer and better that the arbitration had been called on the original contract. In the case cited to me decided by Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, there the award which was upheld was on the original contract and if there had been anything unusual or improper about that, I think that the learned Judge, even if the parties had not taken the point, would have been sure to comment on it. In any case my view is that whether the award is called on the original contract or on the settlement contracts, it is perfectly good, that it is open to the parties to found on any submission contained in either, that in any case it cannot be wrong to found upon the submission contained in the original contract. This dispute was undoubtedly a dispute arising out of the original contract, and I think there is nothing in the point taken by the petitioner. Even if I thought there was, the petitioner would still have to get over the facts that accidental slips can be corrected by arbitrators, and that apart from accidental slips it is in my power under the Indian arbitration Act to refer the matter back to the arbitrators so that this purely formal defect can be cured.

The last point taken was that the award was bad by reason that it contained an award as to interest. In my opinion in view of the case of Produce Broker's Co. v. Olympia Oil and Cake Co. (1), whether it was claimed by custom or otherwise it was entirely for the arbitrators to decide as to this, and that they had jurisdiction to decide it wrongly as well as rightly. It is always difficult to ensure complete correctness when one party refuses to appear and present his case; but notwithstanding this I have every confidence that the award as to interest was as right in law as it was just in substance.

The Rule is discharged with costs.

Rule discharged.

APPENDIX A.

The judgment of the House of Lords referred to on page 287 of 54 Ind. Cas. is as follows:—

EARL LOREBURN.—My Lords, this is a peculiar case, and, therefore, I will say a little more than I think might in other circumstances perhaps be really necessary.

It is an appeal to procure the setting aside of the second of the two awards which were made in regard to certain contracts between the appellant and the respondents. The contracts were for the sale by the appellant to the respondents of bales of jute. The jute was not delivered in time according to the contract, and indeed the bales, I am not quite sure whether all, but many of them, were not delivered at all, and the ground put forward by the seller was that there had been strikes preventing the delivery, as to which also the parties were not at one.

These contracts contain an arbitration clause for any dispute arising in relation to the contracts, their construction or fulfilment, and there were undoubtedly in fact differences between the parties because of non-delivery, and also there was obviously not an agreement, but a difference, as regards the validity of the excuse set forward in regard to strikes. Thereupon the buyers, who are now the respondents, demanded arbitration and they appointed an arbitrator. The seller did not do so and, therefore, according to the contract the arbitrator for the buyers acted alone and he made award No. 1.

Now, my Lords, I think that award No. 1, although, if I may say so, clumsily expressed, or rather expressed as a business man might express himself, taking things for granted instead of directly stating them, decided two things; in the first place, that there was default by the seller which was a matter of difference between the parties, for it recites that as a fact. It is admitted that the bales were not in fact delivered. It is admitted that the appellant did not appear before the arbitrator to give evidence with regard to strikes or other excuse and also unless the arbitrator was satisfied that there had been default, he could not possibly have found as he did find, and fix as he did fix, the prices upon the 32nd day after it. In my opinion the award also decided that the prices on that 32nd day were so and so—I need not elaborate what they were. It was not disputed that this award was valid as regards prices, but it was said by the learned counsel for the appellant that it was not admitted to be valid as regards default, and indeed at some stages in the argument it was contended that that was never referred to the arbitrator at all and it has always been maintained that that has not been decided by the arbitrator. But their contention really was that either way the 2nd award was bad for reasons which I will state.

My Lords, I now come, therefore, to the second award. When the buyers sent to the seller their claim calculated under award No. 1, the seller said that that award was bad and that he was not liable to pay anything at all. Upon that the buyers were in some difficulty for the frame of the award No. 1 might be disputable and it was possible that the seller might say that there was in fact no award that a certain sum was due and that on the construction of the award under the arbitration conditions, which are very express, an award for a sum certain was a condition precedent to bringing an action for any sum calculated as due on the footing of the first award. The buyers asked the seller if he would pay and in fact drew on him for the calculated figure and the seller repudiated all liability; and to my mind I must say that the seller throughout seems to have trifled with this business and sought for delay. The buyers were entitled to take precautions that they might not under these circumstances be confronted by that kind of technical difficulties and objections, and the action of the appellant certainly gave them ample ground for expecting that they would be met in that spirit. There thus arose in my opinion a difference under the contract which was arbitrable, namely, were the buyers entitled or not entitled to a definite and formal award for the sum due so as to avoid technicalities? Accordingly the buyers appointed a second arbitrator and referred to him the question. Did the seller owe £4,000 odd and had he disobeyed the first award? The seller repeated his former tactics, professed that he did not owe anything and that he did not even understand what the dispute might be. Upon this the arbitrator duly made the second award, in which he stated that the first award was good as to default and awarded the sum of £4,000 odd to be paid by the seller to the buyers.

My Lords, this is the award which the Divisional Court set aside and which the Court of Appeal decided to be valid, and I agree with the Court of Appeal. In my opinion the first award was valid as to default, and also was valid as to prices. There was a subsequent difference whether or not this sum, calculated on the basis of the first award, was due, which involved not only the validity of the first award but also whether there was a right in the buyers to have it ascertained as a definite figure so as to avoid technical objections in the future.

The second arbitrator decided that the amount was due, and he did so on the ground that the first award was right and that the first award had decided liability. I agree with him that the first award had decided liability, or rather had decided default; and the second arbitrator was entitled to make a definite award and to put it on that ground.

Sir John Simon pointed out the danger of allowing arbitrations upon arbitrations, and so ad infinitum, each arbitration being upon the validity of the previous award. The answer to this ingenious but unconvincing argument is that when an award assumes a shape which makes it available for a judgment enforcing it in a Court of law, the process of infinitesimal repetition is at once arrested, because there is nothing left for an arbitrator when the Court of law becomes entitled to give effect to the award. But when there is a doubt upon that subject, this submission is wide enough to entitle the parties to treat not the construction of the earlier award, but the disputable right to have the liability placed upon an indisputable footing by the ascertainment of a sum certain, and by the ascertainment of a duty to pay as a different arbitration, always provided that there is a dispute as to the liability to pay. Each case stands upon its own legs. This is a case in which the buyers were right as to that liability and duty to pay, but there was room for doubt or at least for technical difficulties of a formidable character being raised, and there was danger of a protracted litigation if the doubt were not set at rest.

My Lords, I should feel no hesitation in saying that the arbitration clause is wide enough to cover a difference of this kind. I think the first award would, after litigation, have proved watertight, but I do not think it can be said that there was no difference to arbitrate upon when there was in fact a plausible case, which some might think a well-founded case, for defeating the action on the award by reason of defects in form. In every difference one party is in the right and the other is in the wrong, and it is only when there has been an effective adjudication that the right to arbitrate under a clause like this ceases to exist.

My Lords, the learned Counsel for the appellant have simply done their professional duty in presenting this case quite properly to the House, but the action and conduct in this matter of the appellant have not been such, I think, as to commend themselves to the judgment of the House.

LORD ATKINSON.—My Lords, I concur.

LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE.—My Lords, I concur.

LORD SUMNER.—My Lords, I concur, but I desire to add a few words.

Most mercantile awards held under Trade Association Rules present features of importance and this case, so far as concerns Mr. Nevill's award, is no exception. As to Mr. Ritchie's award, the Court of Appeal has held that in fact he decided the question of the appellant's default, and for my part I entirely agree. The criticisms made on Mr. Pollak's affidavits would have been more cogent if he had been cross-examined upon it; as it is, they do not amount to much. It was Mr. Ritchie's duty not to award a market value in favour of the respondents unless he was satisfied that the appellant really had broken his contract. He was not to take it from the respondents, but I make no doubt that he did his duty. The thing was simple enough. On the face of the documents the appellant had not shipped the jute as his bargain required, on the face of the correspondence he alleged that he had an excuse—an excuse, he it said, not easy to make good—but he put in no evidence of it, and the documents do not show that the strike in question in fact did, or would prevent or delay shipment. In a sense, may be, the question of default has been treated as automatic and has never been tried, but whose doing is that? It has been decided in the only sense in which the course taken by the appellant permitted it to be decided on the material before Mr. Ritchie. I cannot doubt that on and before the 2nd November Mr. Ritchie was authorised by the respondents to decide the default question so far as it might arise at any time before him. There was no reservation made by them against the appellant on his case. I am not surprised that Mr. Ritchie cabled shortly to India that he was arbitrator to fix default prices or that in his award he recited the default but awarded the market value—for that is the principal thing, namely, to arrange a settling price. Nonetheless I think that his award involved a finding of the appellant's default and that he did in fact decide it.

As to Mr. Nevill, it is said that he was called in to decide the meaning of Mr. Ritchie's award (which I think is clearly not the question) and that he made an award upon an award as if that were something altogether impossible. The phrase is [more specious than sound. Incidentally, the effect of a prior award might come into question in an arbitration upon a dispute arising out of a contract if the defendants alleged and the claimant denied that the award already made had decided the matter in dispute. Possibly the effect of an award might directly be arbitrable matter as itself involving a dispute arising out of the contract, if, for instance, it directed how something should be done in performance of it or in satisfaction of the object of it. This, however, we need not now decide. The important thing here is whether Mr. Nevill had before him a dispute arising out of the contract. If he had, the contract still stood as a binding obligation to submit and he was validly appointed to decide it. Mr. Lords, I think this was so. It is true that Mr. Chandanmull, when required to pay in accordance with the first award, preserved a Sphinx-like silence. It is true also that it takes two to make a quarrel. But a dispute may perfectly well arise when only one disputant is articulate and the other stands mute when called upon to plead. What is required is that one party should affirm and the other deny, and conduct will do this as well as words. The respondents said in effect: "You owe the money and have no excuse for not paying it." The appellant to my mind in effect retorted nonetheless eloquently, though he held his tongue: "I owe you nothing. I have a defence under the contract." But the point in dispute came to be whether he had an excuse under the contract or not.

My Lords, it is true that no one had disputed the calculation of £3,779 5s. 0d. and £175 13s. 0d., for I think the point made by Mr. Roche as to the costs of the first award really does not constitute any separate argument in the matter. The amount is based on the contract stipulation as to weight, and though in the case of three contracts the calculation brings in a rate of commission and brokerage exceeding that named in those contracts, and this difference has not been accounted for, as the amount is relatively small, we may perhaps pass it by. The real point is this. It is suggested that the appellant really disputed nothing but simply could not or would not pay, in other words, he lacked either money or honesty. Mr. Lords, I cannot assume in Mr. Chandanmull's favour that he was wanting in either. If it be the case that no further dispute arises out of the contract when nothing capable of being disputed is to be found and nothing is alleged to be disputable, I think still that if the appellant's attitude can be explained consistently with any recognition of his business obligation, this should be done. One explanation and, I am inclined to think, one only can be found for the fact that a merchant seemingly in good credit should refuse to honour bills drawn on him on the footing of the first award, and certainly one not unfair to Mr. Chandanmull is that there was a dispute intimated upon the clause in the contract relating to the condition: and I assume this explanation to be the true one in the absence of all evidence to the contrary. I think that he disputed his liability to meet the bills on the legal ground that no award had been obtained such as would satisfy the stipulated condition precedent to his being sued on the contract, further on the ground that the respondents were not entitled to obtain one. For myself I think there was much to be said for his point, but it is enough to say it was an arguable point and raised a dispute under the contract whether or not he need pay any damages although he had not shipped any jute, and if so, what amount. I agree with the learned members of the Court of Appeal in thinking that in substance this was a dispute which Mr. Nevill was appointed to settle, and that being so, the award which he made was within the submission. The argument is that instead of a new dispute justifying a new award being disclosed by these considerations, they only disclose a defect vitiating the old award. Mr. Nevill's award is said to be bad because there was nothing to submit to him, and Mr. Ritchie's because it did not decide all that was submitted to him: a happy sequence for Mr. Chandanmull for the moment, although I suppose when he had time, and money had been wasted and both awards had been set aside, a third to decide the effect of both might still be duly obtained. I think, however, the argument fails.

The question how much Mr. Chandanmull should pay was not submitted to Mr. Ritchie; as is usual in trade, he was only asked to fix default and the market value as the basis, if default, of a calculation for damages. The clerks were left to do the rest. Mr. Ritchie's award was valid, but in view of the appellant's attitude towards it a second dispute arose and a second award was needed to resolve the first. That second award of Mr. Nevill was duly made and I think the appeal fails.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment, order for—Partition—Possession delivered to landlord other than one to whom plot had been allotted, effect of—Ejectment, whether effective as against tenant.

Where an order for ejectment has been carried out and formal possession delivered to the landlord, the fact that shortly before the order was carried out a partition had taken place and the particular plot from which ejectment had been effected had fallen to the lot of another co-sharer landlord, would not make the ejectment less effective as against the tenant.

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 6th November 1918, in the case of declaration of rights.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant's case rests on a very bare technicality. The Lambardar Dr. Baldeo Singh of the joint mahal obtained decree for his ejectment and then applied for, and obtained order for execution on 31st May 1917. Nothing remained except for the Amin to carry out that order, which he did on 10th July. The appellant was thus actually ejected on 10th July, and it is immaterial that accidentally owing to a partition coming into effect on 1st July, the Amin delivered possession to the Lambardar of the former joint mahal, Dr. Baldeo Singh, instead of to the respondent, a co-sharer of the former joint mahal and now sole-proprietor of the mahal into which the land has come by the partition.

I agree with the Commissioner that the ejectment is effective against appellant. There is no doubt that he is not now holding the land by the landholder's, respondent's consent. He is, in fact, a trespasser.

The graduated scale of fees paid on the amount for which Probate is granted cannot come under the expression ad valorem fee used in rules 35 and 36 of the Madras High Court Appellate Side Rules. [p. 293, col. 2.]

The right in dispute in Probate proceedings is not so much a right to property as it is a right to manage and administer the estate by the person applying. [p. 293, col. 2.]

The subject-matter, therefore, of a Probate appeal is not capable of valuation and the proper rule applicable for determining Pleader's fees therein is rule 38 of the Appellate Side Rules. [p. 293, col. 2.]

Petition praying that, in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed therewith, the High Court will be pleased to amend the order in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 125 of 1918, preferred against the decree of the District Court, North Arcot in Original Suit No. 1 of 1917, by allowing, in place of the sum of Rs. 75 as Pleader's fees for the respondents in the said Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 125 of 1918, the proper fee prescribed by either rule 33 or rule 34 of the Fees Rules, viz., Rs. 532.12 or Rs. 145 4.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Aiyar, for the Petitioner.—An application for grant of Probate is not a "suit" in the ordinary acceptance of the term. A Probate is not a decree of Court. See Bayabai v. Sarasvatibai (1); Dawubai, In the matter of the Will of (2). But see Umrao Chand v. Bindrabai Chand (3), where the order was treated as equivalent to a decree for the purpose of appeal. The fact that an ad valorem stamp duty is paid is also material. But there are no decided cases in this Court to regulate the practitioner's fees. In Bombay the long standing practice is said to be to fix the fee at Rs 30. See Sundrabai Saheb v. Collector of Belgaum (4). As regards Calcutta see Pratap Chandra Shaha v. Kali Bhanjan Shaha (5), *Ameer Chand v. [SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., referred to land acquisition cases].

There the Pleader's fee is an ad valorem fee of $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. See also rules 33 and 31 of the fees rules of the High Court.

Mr. N. C. Vijayaraghavachariar, for the Respondents, dealt with the rules.

ORDER.—Mr. Chandrasekhara Aiyar has raised an interesting question as to the fee payable to practitioners in appeals from orders, granting or refusing Probate or Letters of Administration. The Taxing Officer has informed us that there is no settled practice in this Court on the subject. Sometimes he fixes a reasonable fee. Sometimes ad valorem fee as in a regular appeal is fixed. In Bombay according to a long standing practice, only a fee of Rs. 30 is decreed. See Sundrabai Saheb v. Collector of Belgaum (4). In Calcutta sometimes the Judges fix the fee at the hearing. If that is not done, the Taxing Officer fixes Rs. 80 as the fee. See Baijnath Prasad Singh v. Sham Sunder Kuer (7). It is not denied that in the Mofussil the Pleader's fee is on the ad valorem scale as in a suit. In the Original Side of our High Court also, the same practice is alleged to exist. In this state of the authorities we have been asked to settle the rule of practice. Mr. Chandrasekhara Aiyar contended that rule 36 of the Appellate Side Rules read with rule 35 should govern these matters. Although in sections 19 A and B in the table to the Court Fees Act, the duty payable on grant of Probate or Letters is referred as Court-fee, that expression has reference to the machinery which collects the fee, and to nothing else. In essence, it is duty which the Crown levies on that party who benefits by the testator's property. Therefore, in our opinion, the graduated scale of fee paid on the amount for which Probate is granted cannot come under the expression ad valorem fee used in rules 35 and 36. It was pointed out in Rodrigues v. Mathias (8) that the right in dispute in Probate proceedings is not so much a right to property as it is a right to manage and administer the estate by the person applying. It is that right that the Court adjudicates on before granting Probate. That right may refer to any extent of property, large or small. But that is not what the Court has to consider. It is only the personal right. Consequently it seems to us that the subject-matter of a Probate appeal is not capable of valuation and the proper rule applicable is rule 36. In this view, the order of the Taxing Officer is right.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Suit No. 32 of 1916, decided on the 4th December 1917.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and D. N. Chaudhri, R. B., for the Appellants.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The present claim is brought by Domarsingh and his brother Rai Bahadur Singh, sons of Jalamsingh, for possession of four villages, namely, Sihawa, Chhara, Ghhotagaon and Amdi in the Dhamtari Tahsil of the Raipur District. They sue as heirs of their brother Bhaiyalal.

Jalamsingh, the son of Jodhasingh, had four sons, Bhaiyalal and Chhotelal from his senior wife and the two plaintiffs from his junior wife Sugandhibai. The plaintiffs' story is that after Jalamsingh's death there was a partition at which the villages and the moveable property in suit fell with other property to the share of Bhaiyalal who lived in Mauza Sihawa. At that partition the plaintiffs remained joint. Bhaiyalal had married some 24 or 25 years ago, but his wife left him shortly afterwards. He then, the plaintiffs allege, kept as his mistress Musammatt Hirondebai, a Kurmi, the 1st defendant. From her he got a daughter defendant No. 2, Bhagwatibai, now married to Fulsingh. Hirondebai is said to have a husband, one Kulanjan Kurmi, still alive. Bhaiyalal died in June 1915 and according to Hindu Law the plaintiffs alone are his heirs. But his mistress and illegitimate daughter have taken possession of Bhaiyalal's property. The villages have been mutated in the names of the defendants. Plaintiffs claim to be Nandvansi Ahirs.

Defendants denied that Jodhasingh was a Nandvansi Ahir at his death. He came from Bundelkhand and like other Nandvansi Ahirs who settled in Chhattisgarh was outcasted and was out of caste till his death. He like other Bundelkhandi Ahirs in Chhattisgarh took a Rajputin woman for his wife, Jalamsingh being born of that union, and his sons are not real Nandvansi Ahirs, though they call themselves so. The wives of Jalamsingh were not Ahirs. It was denied that the sons and daughters of Jalamsingh married into pure Nandvansi Ahir families but into families which, though reputed to be Nandvansi Ahirs, were really not so on account of their being outcaste Ahirs who married women of various castes. Defendant No. 1 was not the mistress of Bhaiyalal but his wife married to him in the churi form, such a marriage being legal among the Chhattisgarh Nandvansi Ahirs. It was contended that if it be true that Bhaiyalal was married as alleged by the plaintiffs, plaintiffs have no right to sue so long as the alleged first wife is not dead or her marriage with Bhaiyalal dissolved. It was stated that defendants do not know how far the allegations as regards Musammāt Hirondebai being a Kurmi by caste or her marriage with Kulanjan Kurmi are true, because her father died while defendant No. 1 was an infant. She was married to Bhaiyalal at the age of 13 and has since lived with him as his lawful wife. She was not the wife of anybody else at the time of the marriage. It was denied that plaintiffs were legal heirs of Bhaiyalal but defendants are. It was contended inter alia that the plaintiffs are Sudras of mixed blood chiefly governed by their caste customs and generally by the Hindu Law applicable to the Sudra class. They filed four Wills said to have been executed from time to time by Bhaiyalal in their favour.

Plaintiffs denied that Jodhasingh had lost his caste or had married a Rajputin woman. He brought his wife from Bundelkhand. Jalamsingh's wives belonged to his caste and all his children are married in Ahir families. The story of being mixed blood was denied.

The lower Court has found that Hirondebai was a Kurmi. She had been married to one Kulanjan Kurmi and then eloped with Bhaiyalal. Her husband divorced her before she went through the churi marriage with Bhaiyalal. Churi marriages are in vogue among Ahirs who have settled down in Chhattisgarh and adopted the customs of their new domicile. The union between Bhaiyalal and Hirondebai, both Sudras, was held valid.

As to the Wills, four were produced: Exhibits D-3, D-4, D-1 and D-5. These, the lower Court finds, have not been proved to have been executed by Bhaiyalal and there was no evidence to establish an oral Will alleged to have been made just before his death by Bhaiyalal. The plaintiffs' case was dismissed; hence the present appeal.

The first ground raised in argument is that there should have been a specific issue as to plaintiffs being Vaishyas and the case was remanded to the first Court for a finding on the following issues:—

1. Whether the Nandvansi Ahirs of Bundelkhand are Vaishyas or Sudras?

2. Whether this particular family of Nandvansi Ahirs are Sudras by reason of the allegations mentioned in the defendants' written statement?

We also directed that further evidence could be called on the second half of the 5th issue which runs:—

Whether defendant No. 1 was the wife of Kulanjan Kurmi when she married Bhaiyalal: if so, is her marriage valid?

The lower Court now finds that Nandvansi Ahirs of Bundelkhand are Sudras and not Vaishyas and that the marriage of Hirondebai with Bhaiyalal was valid.

Domarsingh has been examined and his story is that the family are Nandvansi Ahirs. He states that he is the son of an Ahirin. The male members of the family either go to Bundelkhand or send for girls from there for marriages. He denies that the family intermarry with Chhattisgarh Ahirs, or that widows re-marry or there is any custom of churi marriage in the caste. He admits that he went to the Ganges with Musammāt Hirondebai to throw the ashes of Bhaiyalal in the river. He can quote no authority for his assertion that he is a Vaishya. He denies that his elder brother Chotelal's widow Rukhminibai was married in the churi form to Rai Bahadur, but admits that one Maina, sister of Behari, a caste-fellow, has married one Kodu by the churi ceremony. He states he does not know if the illegitimate children of Behari are married to Ahirs or not, but admits that Hirondebai's daughter was married to Fulsingh son of Budhsingh at Sihawa. He attended that marriage. He states that the title Dauwa was given in ancient days to their ancestors by the Bundelkhandi Rajas for valour. He admits that one Chandulal son of Gumanabai has married his niece but says the couple are out of caste. He admits that Rai Bahadur was married during the pendency of this litigation.

Plaintiffs endeavour to show that Nandvansi Ahirs are one of the twice-born castes, but in this they have not been successful. Domarsingh can give no good reasons for thinking that the caste are Vaishyas. P. W. No. 4 Nilkanth, who lives in the Drug District, merely repeats that the plaintiffs in the case are Vaishyas and P. W. No. 14 Gajrajsing, a relative and tenant of the plaintiffs, says the same thing. P. W. No. 17 Ramnath, a Brahmin of Dhamtari who comes from the Banda District, infers from certain books that Nandvansi Ahirs are descended from Nand and they are twice-born. He states that there is no widow re-marriage in the caste and that their marriage rites and customs, the naming and other ceremonies are performed as in the case of Brahmins and Kshatriyas. He makes the curious statement that neither Kshatriyas nor Vaishyas in Bundelkhand wear the sacred thread. We are not satisfied that witness, a Brahmin, knows enough of the caste he is speaking of, to make his evidence of any value. Reliance is placed on the evidence of Nathooji, a Maratha of Dhamtari P. W. No. 18, but we find the same objection applies to his evidence. He really knows nothing or next to nothing of the customs of Ahirs. He does not know if re-marriages are permitted or if caste rules allow the eating of meat. P. W. No. 19 is another Maratha and states that the plaintiffs' customs are those of the Bundelkhandi Ahirs and not of Chhattisgarhi Ahirs. Domarsingh's son is this witness' son's Mahaprashad. P. W. No. 20 Keshoprasad, Brahmin of Dhamtari, a resident of Rewa but who has lived in these provinces for five years, says that at his native place there are Nandvansi Ahirs who are Vaishyas. He states he can prove it from the Shastras and quotes a book by Pandit Mishra. His arguments are based on the assumption that the mythical Nand was a twice-born. He states that among Nandvansis there is no widow re-marriage. On the birth of a male child they perform the Namkaran and Annaprashan ceremonies as Vaishyas do. Their marriages are performed by Brahmins. He states that no Kshatriya or Vaishya put on a Janav or sacred thread and says that all Ahirs are Vaishyas. He obviously knows little of the caste and is forced to admit that his statement that plaintiffs are Nandvansis is based on information given by their relatives.

P. W. No. 21 is Surdas, Brahmin of Dhamtari. He states he came from Bundelkhand where a large number of Nandvansi Ahirs reside. About 100 or 150 of these are his jajmans. He states that all 16 Sanskars are performed by Nandvansi Ahirs who are Vaishyas, and bases his opinion on a book recently published. He says no widow re-marriages are allowed. P. W. No. 22 Beniprashad, another Brahmin of Dhamtari who originally came from Jhansi, has admittedly no personal knowledge of the sub-caste, but states that some 15 or 20 years ago there was a caste agitation to proclaim Nandvansis as Vaishyas. P. W. No. 23 Chandoolal, a Kosta of Dhamtari, does not know if plaintiffs are Vaishyas or Sudras. P. W. No. 24 Ghasi of Dhamtari and the Mukhya of the Raouts there is a Chhattisgarhi Ahir. He states that plaintiffs' customs and rites are different from his own; he says he is a Sudra. P. W. No. 31 Dauwa Garoo, Zemindar of Mouza Sura in Bundelkhand, states that Domarsingh has married his niece and Rai Bahadur his daughter. He says that the plaintiffs' family are Nandvansi Ahirs and Vaishyas. They do not wear sacred thread, nor do they eat bread out of the chauk. P. W. No. 32 Dauwa Rajlhar makes a similar statement. His family is also related to that of the plaintiffs.

For the defendants witness No. 24 Giridhari Shastri, a Pandit by profession, states that Ahirs who tend cattle and sell milk and curds are Sudras. The witness, however, had never been to Bundelkhand and knows nothing of the Nandvansi Ahirs. D. W. No. 25 Mahadeo Prasad, who came originally from the Banda District in Bundelkhand, states that the Ahirs in Bundelkhand are Sudras. He has never heard of Nandvansi Ahirs. Witness No. 26, who came from Bundelkhand 28 years ago and has still relatives there, speaks to Ahirs in his native country being Sudras. He also states he has never heard of any caste called Nandvansi. D. W. No. 27 Ramdas, a Brahmin, by occupation a Pleader of Raipur, states that the family comes from Bundelkhand and he has visited that province some five or six times. He states that his caste-fellows always regard Ahirs as Sudras. The witness does not know if Nandvansis are Vaishyas. P. W. No. 28 Rajaram, a Dauwa Ahir of Dhamtari, states that he is a Sudra. He is married to the daughter of plaintiff Domarsingh's sister. D. W. No. 30 Ramsewak, a relative of the plaintiffs, and D. W. No. 31 Panchobai, the step-sister of Domarsingh, state that the family are Sudras. Bhairu Prasad Bani, of Chhattarpur says that Ahirs are Sudras and allow widow re-marriage. He also states that a Ahir is termed a Dauwa whose wife suckles a chief's son, and these are Sudras. The next witness is Vijai Lal Chaudhari, another Bania from the same State. He says he never heard the term Nandvansi but Ahirs are Sudras, and confirms the former witness that Dauwas are Ahirs whose women have been wet-nurses in chiefs' families. Pandit Gaya Prasad Tiwari, a Pleader of Chhattarpur, states that the Ahirs in his State are Sudras but he does not know the Nandvansi Ahirs. Witness No. 36 for the defendants, Dauwa Sitaram, Jamadar, Police, Chhattarpur, has also not heard of Nandvansi Ahirs, but corroborates the Pleader's statement that Ahirs are Sudras. He states that formerly the pure Ahirs of Bundelkhand did not inter-marry with Dauwas but are now beginning to do so.

We have endeavoured to ascertain from various books of reference what we can about the Ahirs and especially about the sub-caste of that tribe to which the parties to this suit belong. Ahirs are a caste of cowherds, milkmen and cattle-breeders, variously known as Ahir, Gaoli, Gaola, Golkar, Gaolan, Rawat, Gahra and Mahakul. The principal sub-castes of the tribe in Northern India are the Jadhav Vansi, Goral Vansi and Nand Vansi. The parties to this litigation are members of an offshoot of the latter sub-caste. It has been argued that all Nandvansi Ahirs are descendants from Nanda, the cowherd foster father of the god Krishna. The argument is purely conjectural. Russell in his "Tribes and Castes of the Central Provinces of India," the standard work on castes and tribes in these provinces, states that "the Dauwa or wet-nurse Ahirs are descended from the illegitimate offspring of Bundela Rajput fathers by Ahir mothers who were employed in this capacity in their families" (page 25, Volume II); and further that "widow re-marriage is permitted and a widow is often expected to marry the younger brother of her deceased husband." "Widow re-marriage is a sign of the Sudra. In "Hindu Castes and Sects" by J. N. Bhattacharjee, page 294, the author states that cowherds are Sudras though high up in the Sudra castes. Steele in his "Law and Custom of Hindoo Castes" at page 105 ranks the Ahir Gaoli below Koonbees. As regards Damoh, a district containing a large number of Ahirs and not far from Bundelkhand, the District Gazetteer at page 53 speaking of the tribe states that "The Dauwas are another sub-division who are really illegitimate, as they are the offspring of Bundela fathers by Ahir women, who were employed as dais or wet-nurses in Bundela families." In the Raipur District Rawats constitute about 10 per cent. of the population. These tribes are said to be of comparatively low origin in which the re-marriage of widows is permitted: see pages 96-97 of the Raipur District Gazetteer. The author of the District Gazetteer of Saugor, a District where Ahirs are numerous, writing of Dauwa Ahirs, states at page 64 that they are the offspring of a Bundela father and Ahir mother. Such unions are still frequent, and their offspring become Dauwa Ahirs and form a separate sub-caste. The plaintiffs here call themselves Dauwa Nandvansis. Such authorities as we have been able to find unquestionably place the Ahirs among the Sudras. Nesfield in his "Sketch of the Caste System of the North West Provinces and Oudh" places the pastoral caste just above the Kahars, Khewats, Dhimars and others; and Sherring at page 334 of the 1st Volume of his Hindu Tribes and Castes states that "commonly the Ahirs are regarded as Sudras." In Volume XIII of the Report of the Census of India for 1901, page 160, six castes are included among the proper twice-born, namely Brahman, Rajput, Khatri, Kayastha and Parbhu, Kuran Mahanti and Bania. Below these castes is said to be the Ahir; see page 166. The sacred thread is a distinction of the twice-born. It is admitted that Dauwa Ahirs do not wear it. We can find nothing in the books to show that Ahirs are Vaishyas. In Dalip v. Gimpal (1) it was taken for granted that they are Sudras. From the defence evidence we are of opinion that it has been established that Ahirs, whether of the Nandvansi or any other sub-caste, are Sudras and that the Dauwa Ahirs are a lower caste than the pure Ahirs.

It is now necessary for us to examine the evidence to see whether churi forms of marriage are allowed in the Nandvansi sub-caste, whether the family in suit have from long residence in Chhattisgarh adopted the churi form if they did not follow it in their own country, whether Hironi was a Kurmi, whether she married Bhaiyalal in the churi form and whether that marriage is legal.

As far as we know, all Sudra castes allow re-marriage by the Pat or churi form. The evidence on record is insufficient to warrant any finding whether re-marriages or churi marriages are allowed in the Nandvansi caste in Bundelkhand. The evidence on the question is partisan but tends to point to the fact that such marriages are not in vogue. On the other hand it is clear, in fact not denied, that among the Ahirs of Chhattisgarh churi marriage is allowed and is common. There is little doubt that the family, when they migrated to Ohhattisgarh, followed the customs of the Ahir castes found in that part of the country. There is evidence to show that these Dauwa Ahirs, an illegitimate branch from the parent stem, finding no brides from their own part of the country in Chhattisgarh, married women who were residents of their new domicile. Domarsingh's recent marriage in Bundelkhand seems to have been entered into with the object of affecting the decision in this suit. There is some evidence to show that Jodhasingh, the original emigrant, married a Rajputin: see the statements of Nanki (D. W. No. 1), Majbutsingh (D. W. No. 6), Ujirsingh (D. W. No. 7) and of the defendant Hirondebai herself. Jalamsingh was the offspring of that union. It is admitted now, in view of the ample evidence there is on record to prove it, that Hirondebai was a Kurmi. Her husband has been examined. He seems to have been a minor when his wife eloped with Bhaiyalal and his father arranged the divorce for him. On a criminal complaint being lodged Bhaiyalal had to pay Rs. 300 to the injured husband. P. W. No. 1 Kulanjan, Musammât Hirondebai's former husband, states:—

(1) 8 A. 397; A. W. N. (1886, 136.

DOMARSINGH v. HIRONDIBAI.

"The three hundred rupees were spent in giving a caste feast.

"The feast is called Martijiti. It was given to show that henceforth my wife was dead to me. In such cases the woman is at liberty to marry again as well as the man. I mean when the Martijiti feast is given, the wife is divorced and she is at liberty to remarry in churi form."

We see no reason to doubt this statement, and Musammât Hirondebai was a free woman according to the customs of her caste when she entered into an alliance with Bhaiyalal. That Bhaiyalal married her in the churi form is amply proved.

D. W. No. 1 Nanki was present at the wedding. D. W. No. 2 Mahomed Inamulla, a Sub-Assistant Surgeon, states that Bhaiyalal told him that Hirondebai was his churi wife. D. W. No. 3 Halka speaks to the same fact, D. W. No. 5 Kodu was present at the wedding. D. W. No. 9 Birajoo was also present at the wedding as was Sadubai D. W. No. 12 and Paramy-bai D. W. No. 13. D. W. No. 19 Abdul Rahim, a Sub-Inspector of Police, says that the deceased Bhaiyalal used to say that Hirondebai was his churi wife, and Hirondebai herself speaks to being married by that ceremony. There is much evidence to show that the two lived together as husband and wife. We find it proved that Bhaiyalal married Hirondebai in the churi form. There are other instances given of such marriages in the same caste, though plaintiffs' witnesses speak to marriages in the churi form being forbidden. D. W. No. 4 Thakurram, a member of the caste, was himself married in the churi form. D. W. No. 32 Biharilal Bhairoprashad states that re-marriages are allowed as does D. W. No. 33 Vijailal Bania, though these witnesses are contradicted by Gayaprasad D. W. No. 34. D. W. No. 35 Dauwa Lalla admits that widow marriages are allowed, but states that the members of the caste cannot marry a Kurmi and D. W. No. 36 Dauwa Sitaram says the same thing. D. W. No. 11 Behari says that marriages outside the caste are allowed. His sister was married to a Ahir, whose mother is a Rajputin and that man's daughter has again married a Ahir. D. W. No. 28 Rajaram, who is married to Domarsing's sister's daughter, speaks to churi marriages being permissible. He states that one Gumanabai, a relative of Domarsing, married in this form Ganesh Ahir of Amraoti. Behari's sister Mainabai has been married in churi form to Kodu Ahir. D. W. No. 30 Ramsewak says that Rukhmabai, the widow of his elder brother Chotelal, married in the churi form Rai Bahadur, one of the plaintiffs, and this statement is corroborated by that of D. W. No. 31 Panchebai, who also speaks to Mainabai's churi marriage. That there is some truth in the allegations as regards Rai Bahadur is apparent from the way in which witnesses for the plaintiffs fenced with the question. The father of a girl to Rukhmabai, it is admitted by the Mukaddam Sher Khan P. W. No. 28, was shown in the Kotwal's book as Rai Bahadur, though the witness attempts to show that this is a false report. There is little doubt that Rai Bahadur did marry Rukhmabai by the churi form. D. W. No. 31 Panchobai also speaks to two other marriages in this form, one Nilkanth having married a Raoutin by name Kanchar, and speaks to a relative Ramdhan marrying a Brahmin widow.

We are satisfied that the churi form is in vogue among the caste to which the parties belong.

It is argued that in Exhibit D-2 Bhaiyalal described Hirondebai as his wife, but he mentioned therein his heirs and by his heirs he must have meant his brothers. We are not pressed by this argument. By the expression "heirs" he doubtless meant his reversioners.

It is conceded that if the parties are Sudras then the weight of authority as regards the mixed marriage is against the appellants. It has been held in Upoma Kuchain v. Bholaram Dhubi (2) that there is nothing in Hindu Law prohibiting marriages between persons belonging to different sections or subdivisions of the Sudra caste. A Kurmi is admittedly a Sudra. The same principle was enunciated in Mahantava Irappa v. Gangava Mallappa (3), Muthusami Mudaliar v. Masilamani (4) and by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Inderun Valungypooly Taver v. Ramasawmy Pandia Talaver (5).

The fact that plaintiffs and other members of the caste were present at the 2nd defendant's wedding and that Bhagwatibai married a man of her own caste points to the union between Bhaiyalal and Hirondebai being valid. If, as attempted to be made out by the evidence for the plaintiffs, Bhagwatibai was a result of adulterous intercourse, she would not have obtained a husband in the caste. There is little doubt that this branch of the Dauwa Ahirs, on settling in Chhattisgarh, married women of castes equal or superior to their own and adopted, whether the practice was in vogue in their country of origin or not, the churi form of marriage prevailing in Chhattisgarh. Possibly until quite recently these Ahirs were considered out of caste by their fellows in Bundelkhand owing to their adoption of Chhattisgarhi customs. But that these mixed marriages were looked on by themselves as valid is clearly established. By her marriage Hirondebai was looked on as a member of her husband's caste. It is proved that in the family and by outsiders the marriage was looked on as perfectly valid and the offspring of the marriage married into the caste. There is no legal objection under the Hindu Law to such a union.

The finding as to the Wills is not attacked and the last ground of the memorandum of appeal has not been argued.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The "year" referred to in section 13 (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act is a "calendar year." Consequently, where a tenant was ejected on the 21st August 1913 and was re-admitted on the 1st July 1914, he was held to have been re-admitted within one year from the date of his ejection, within the meaning of section 13 (b) of the Agra Tenancy Act. respondent was ejected on 21st August 1913, i.e., early in 1321 Fasli (not 1322 as accidentally written by Commissioner) and re-admitted at the beginning of 1322, i.e., on 1st July 1914.

He was thus re-admitted within one calendar year from the date of his ejection, and no authority is shown me for holding that the year referred to in section 13 (b), Tenancy Act, is not to be construed as a calendar year, the usual significance of the word. This is the view which the Board, as far as I recollect, have taken in previous cases.

A reference to rule 61 (IV), B.C. 1-VI does not really help the appellant if it be closely examined. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Declaration that defendant is not son of particular person, suit for—Limitation, commencement of.

A suit to obtain a declaration that a person set up as the son and heir of a deceased is not the rightful heir must be brought within the period prescribed by Article 120 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act, and such period begins to run from the time when, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, the title of son and heir to the deceased is set up [p. 302, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Second Additional District Judge, West Berar, Akola, in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1913, dated the 29th July 1918.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. D. W. Kathale, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. R. Jaikar, D. S. Warde, M. Bhowanishankar and V. K. Rajwadi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—At Deolgaon Raja in the Buldana District in Berar is situated the ancient Sansthan of Shri Balaji, said to have been held for some generations by the well-known Maratha family, Jadho. One Ramdas and others sued in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1905 on the file of the First Additional District Judge, Buldana, disputing the right of Raja Bajirao II to hold the Sansthan temple and property belonging thereto as his own. Raja Bajirao II was the defendant in that case, but died on the 6th of January 1906 before it was disposed of. His widow Rani Yemunabai then came on the record as his legal representative and one Anandrao, said to be the posthumous son of Raja Bajirao, was also brought on record on the 8th December 1903.

The present plaintiff Raja Dattajirao Krishnarao applied on the 19th November 1909 for being added as a defendant, but his application was dismissed in default on the 4th January 1910. He has filed the present suit, claiming in the plaint to be the member of an undivided family with Bajirao and entitled as such to the ownership of all property belonging to the Jadho family. It was denied that Rani Yemunabai was pregnant at the time of her husband Bajirao's death and Anandrao, the defendant in suit, is described as a false and spurious heir, no son of Bajirao's but a boy foisted on the family by Rani Yemunabai and Rani Ahilyabai, the grandmother of Bajirao, in a wicked attempt to defeat the claims of the plaintiff. His prayer in the plaint has been translated as follows:—

“(a) That it may be declared that the defendant in suit is no son at all born of the loins of the late Raja Bajirao Mansingrao, that he is not the true heir, that he has been put up falsely as heir, and that he has no right at all to remain on the record of the Civil Suit No. 3 of 1905 on the file of this Court.

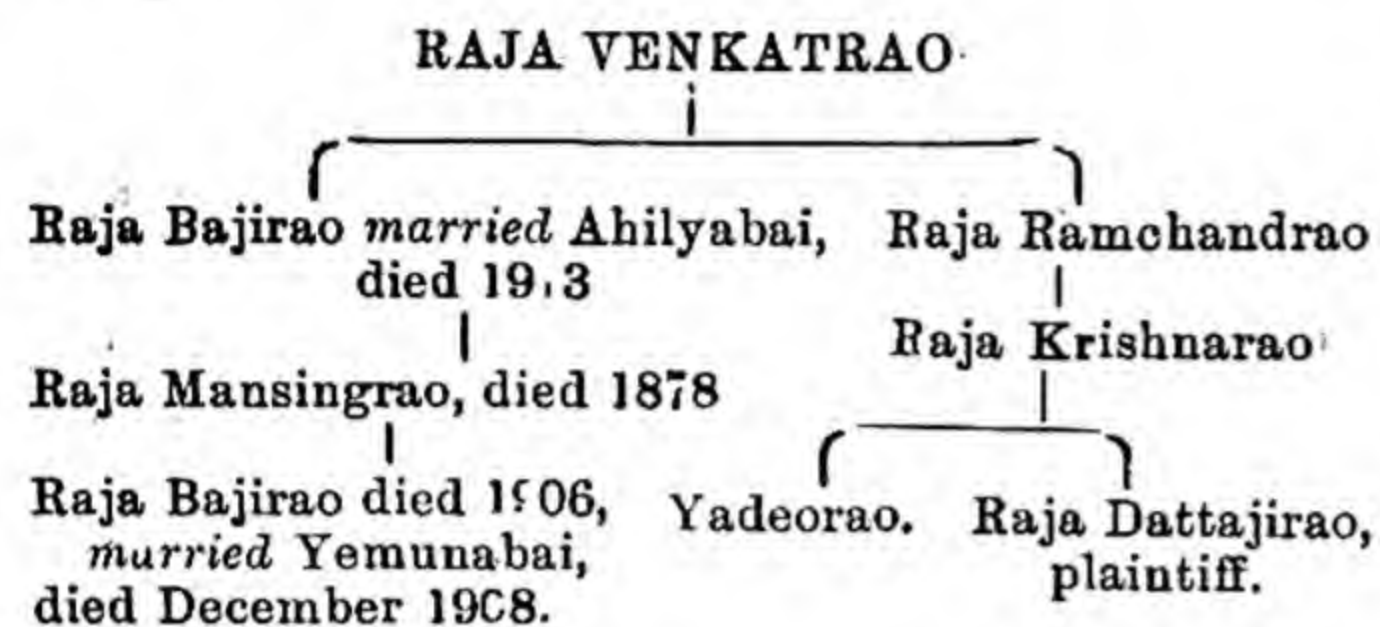

(b) That it may be declared that plaintiff is the true heir of Raja Bajirao Mansingrao and that after him he is entitled to have his name entered in Suit No. 3 of 1905 on the file of this Court as defendant in his capacity as the true heir and legal representative of the late Raja Bajirao Mansingrao.

(c) Defendant may be ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs in the suit.

PRATAP Singh v. RAJA DATTAJI RAO.

(d) The plaintiff may be granted such other and further relief as the Court may deem proper."

The following genealogical tree which has been admitted shows the relationship between the present plaintiff and Bajirao II:—

The following dates of deaths are important:—

Raja Bajirao II, 6th January 1906, Rani Yemunabai, December 1908, and Rani Ahilyabai, 1913.

Rani Nihalkuar, the step-mother of Raja Bajirao, died during the pendency of the suit.

For the defendant it was contended that Raja Anandrao was the true son of Raja Bajirao. Various other pleas were raised which it is unnecessary now to enter into, for we intend to decide this appeal on the question of limitation. It is sufficient to state that the decision of the Trial Court was embodied in the following decree:—

"It is ordered and declared that the defendant Anandrao is not a son born of the loins of the late Raja Bajirao and that the plaintiff is the heir to him."

Against that decision the present appeal has been filed.

The question for decision is whether the suit is within time. The plaintiff says that the cause of action arose on the 4th January 1910, when the Court in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1905 dismissed the plaintiff's application to be brought on the record of that suit as the legal representative of the late Raja Bajirao. The relief that this Court is to declare the plaintiff as the legal representative of Raja Bajirao for the purposes of Suit No. 3 of 1905 is misconceived. In any case the plaintiff having been subsequently made a party to Suit No. 3 of 1905, no such declaration in respect of this suit should now be granted. The basis upon which this relief is asked is that the plaintiff is the real heir of the said Raja. In the plaint the case made out was one of succession by survivorship in regard to joint property. This position is no longer maintained. The defendant filed an application dated the 2nd April 1918, in which he asked further pleadings and issues to be framed. Upon this the plaintiff admitted that Rani Nihalkuar, the step-mother of Raja Bajirao, was alive when the statement was recorded on the 22nd April. The plaintiff pleaded that she has no status as a preferential heir and that the plaintiff is also entitled to maintain the suit as the next reversioner, and for that purpose he prayed that he may be allowed to amend the pleadings. The Court passed an order disallowing the defendant's application, and with that the plaintiff's prayer for amendment was presumably also disallowed.

According to the defendant-appellant the right to sue for a declaration accrued on the 29th January 1907, when Rani Yemunabai prayed in her petition to the Talukdar of Aurangabad (vide Exhibit P-10) that after due enquiry a certificate of heirship be prepared in the name of her son, the defendant Raja Anandrao. The defendant further contends that time began to run against the plaintiff at least from the 14th March 1907, when he filed his counter-petition (Exhibit D 21) in the inquiry started upon Rani Yemunabai's petition. The suit was instituted on the 11th July 1913, that is, more than six years after the plaintiff came to know of a definite assertion of title on behalf of the defendant.

The suit cannot be regarded as one for possession, upon a ten rupee stamp, by reason of the property being in custodia legis. It may be noted that there was a Receiver appointed of the temple properties since 1904 in the lifetime of Raja Bajirao. To such a suit for possession Musammatt Nihalkuar would have been made a party, and the fact that she was alive when the suit was filed would have been a good ground of defence. We do not understand the plaintiff's learned Counsel to argue that the suit should be regarded as in substance one for possession though in form one of declaration. In answer to the defendant's plea that the plaintiff cannot bring this suit simply for a declaration without asking for consequential relief, the plaintiff has stated that by reason of the property being under attachment in the Hyderabad territory, no consequential relief can be asked for. Similarly, in reply to a plea on the part of the defendant that he is in possession, it has been pointed out that the property in suit is in the custody of a Receiver. But all the same the suit is nowhere described as one substantially for possession.

If the suit could have been regarded as one for possession, then it would not be barred by limitation, as such a suit would be governed by Article 141, the cause of action accruing upon the death of Rani Yemunabai and Ahilyabai. But such a suit would be premature if the step-mother of the deceased, as we are inclined to think, is a nearer heir than the plaintiff under the Bombay School of Hindu Law, which applies to Berar.

The suit must be regarded as one for a declaration, to which Article 120 of the Limitation Act applies. In our opinion, the right to sue for the declaration accrued at least at the time when to the plaintiff's knowledge the defendant was set up as the son and heir of Raja Bajirao. This admittedly took place more than six years ago. It must be noted that in the revenue proceedings in Hyderabad both Rani Yemunabai and Rani Ahilyabai were supporting the claim of Raja Anandrao.

An attempt was made to bring the case under section 13 of the Limitation Act as applied to Berar, but this is a new plea which involves inquiry into facts, and the plaintiff is not entitled to have a remand for this purpose. The fact that the defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the lower Court, amounts only to an admission that he was not living in Berar at the date of the institution of the suit and nothing more, there being no admission that the defendant was absent for a definite period of time.

It is urged that as in her petition (Exhibit P-10) Rani Yemunabai asked for an inquiry, time did not run until the inquiry terminated in a final order. If this view be correct, then the suit would not be barred. An examination of the Limitation Act, however, shows that where the starting point of limitation is an order, it is expressly so stated, as in Articles 11, 11 (a) and 13. In all these cases a short period of limitation has been fixed and it is necessary to have the order set aside. An order for mutation by the Revenue Authorities is not an order which has to be set aside. We know of no authority for holding, in a case where there is no express provision of the Limitation Act to that effect, that time does not begin to run till after an inquiry an order has been passed.

The respondent relies upon the following passage in the judgment of Ghosh, J., in Chukkun Lal Roy v. Lolit Mohan Roy (1):—

"Now, it seems to me that, except in the few cases especially provided for in the Limitation Act (e.g., a suit to obtain a declaration that an adoption is invalid, or that an alienation by a widow is not binding on a reversioner), a suit for a declaratory relief of this nature cannot be held to be barred, so long as the right to the property, in respect of which the declaration is sought, is a subsisting right. So long as the widow was alive, the plaintiffs' right as reversionary heirs was a subsisting right. And I am disposed to think that the right to bring a suit to construe the Will and codicil, and for a declaration of the plaintiffs' right, is a continuing right, and may be claimed within the statutory period (whether it be twelve years, or six years under Article 120) from the time when the plaintiffs become entitled to possession or other consequential relief. This suit having been instituted within six years from the time of Rajeshury's death is, therefore, amply within time."

This case is not on all fours with the present and this view, moreover, has not been followed in other cases: see Peria Aiyar Ambalam v. Shunmugasundaram (2).

By reason of the attitude of the two

MUBARIK FATIMA v. MUHAMMAD QULI KHAN.

Ranis the plaintiff could have instituted this suit for a declaration in March 1907. The right to sue is, in our opinion, not a continuing right. If Anandrao's claim had been withdrawn, the case might have been different, but the claim has been persistently asserted.

The case of Ravji Mahadu Patil v. Sakuji Kaloji (3) relied on by the plaintiff-respondent is distinguishable. There it was held that the plaintiff's right to sue for the particular declaration asked for did not accrue until the death of the widow. The declaration related to the plaintiff's right to be entered in the patelki vatan register in the place of the defendant. No further relief apparently could have been asked in the Civil Court, such further relief being only enforceable in the Revenue Department. Such a suit would be governed by Article 141 of the Limitation Act. The Subordinate Judge no doubt relied upon Article 120, but all that Scott, C. J., held was that the right to sue for a declaration did not arise till after the death of the widow. It was in that case unnecessary to decide whether Article 121 or Article 141 applied.

The cases under Article 118 and Article 119, if anything, support the defendant-appellant's contention that the right to sue for a mere declaration in the present instance accrued, as we have already stated, when the defendant was set up as the heir of Raja Bajirao.

Musammatt Nihalkur died at some time before the termination of the suit. If the plaintiff is entitled to possession, then his suit for possession would not be barred by limitation. But the present suit, which must be regarded as one solely for a declaration, is, in our opinion, barred by time. In this view it is unnecessary to go into the merits of the case.

The result is that the appeal succeeds and the suit is dismissed on the ground that the suit regarded as one for a declaration is barred by limitation, and it is, therefore, dismissed with costs. The plaintiff will pay the defendant's costs in both Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Third appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 19th October 1918, in the case of correction of khewat.

JUDGMENT. This is a third appeal under section 213, Land Revenue Act. It is, therefore, to be seen whether the Commissioner's decision is contrary to some specified law or usage having the force of law. Defendant-appellant is Musammatt Mubarak Fatima. Plaintiff-respondent is Muhammad Quli Khan alias Amir Husan Khan. The latter applied for correction of khewat to the effect that one-sixth of 3 biswas odd in this village Mundia Jagir be recorded in the name of Musammatt Mubarak Fatima, defendant-appellant, and the rest in his own name. All the three Courts below have accepted this. Grounds Nos. 3 and 4 of this third appeal are to the effect that the Courts below have not complied with section 40 (1), Land Revenue Act, which lays down that mutation cases should be decided on the basis of possession, and have not considered the effect of a certain profits case. Nothing was said in the grounds of appeal to the Commissioner about physical possession. One ground alluded to the result of a profits suit but it was not pursued then, and appellant's Counsel drops the matter on hearing from the respondent that the said profits suit has been recently decided in respondent's favour by the High Court. The argument before me has been entirely as in the lower Courts, on the question of superior title under section 40 (2), Land Revenue Act. It is common ground that Musammāt Rahimunissa, ancestress of the parties, left 7 biswas in this village. In 1915 Musammāt Fatima, defendant-appellant, applied for partition of her share. Plaintiff-respondent claimed the whole and was referred to the Civil Court. He sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge and in paragraph 9 of plaint he claimed to be the sole owner of the property specified at 3 biswas odd. The final decision of the District Judge, dated 26th January 1916, (in appeal from the Subordinate Judge's order of 10th August 1915) was that Musammāt Mubarak Fatima, the defendant-respondent before him, was entitled to one-sixth of the property left by Rahimunissa; he did not, however, mention exactly the extent of that property. On receipt of his decision in the partition Court the partition officer and the Collector in first appeal, dated 14th February 1917, concurrently decided that the Judge's decision should be construed as giving Musammāt Mubarak Fatima one-sixth of the subject-matter of the civil cases, which was 3 biswas odd only. This is clear from the Collector's appellate order of 14th February 1917 of which copy is on the file before me, though copy of the partition officer's order has not been filed.

It was open to Musammāt Mubarak Fatima to appeal further. She might have done so against the concurrent decisions, as the correct interpretation of a document, which includes a judgment, is by settled law a question of law. She did not, however, take this course, but withdrew the partition case and filed a suit in the Civil Court to have her right declared. No doubt what she wanted was to have a more specific finding than that of the District Judge of 26th January 1917. Her case was thrown out by the Mansif on 16th August 1917 and by the District Judge in appeal on 17th December 1917, on the ground that the matter was res judicata by the judgment of 26th January 1917. Appeal to the High Court under Letters Patent is pending.

The present case for correction of records was instituted by plaintiff-respondent, Quli Khan, in order to have the revenue records brought into accordance with the judgment of the District Judge of 26th January 1917, as interpreted by the Assistant Collector and Collector in the partition case. The Courts have all decided that the interpretation of the judgment in the partition case, against which as I have said Musammāt Mubarak Fatima might have appealed but did not, stands as res judicata. The question is whether it does or not. I am of opinion that it undoubtedly does. The Assistant Collector, who decided the point in the partition case, was competent to try the present case, the parties were the same and the subject-matter the same. I am inclined to think, as did the Judge in his appellate order of 17th December 1917, that the interpretation which the Courts in the partition proceeding put on the District Judge's decree of 26th January 1917 was incorrectly narrow, but under the law that interpretation must be accepted as res judicata unless a different course becomes possible as a result of Musammāt Mubarak Fatima's appeal, which is pending in the High Court. I do not feel justified in acting under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, while that appeal is pending in the High Court.

I cannot accept appellant's contention that because the decisions constituting res judicata were passed in a partition case which was not ultimately carried through they lose their force as res judicata.

The decision of the Commissioner now under 3rd appeal being a correct interpretation of the law of res judicata cannot be interfered with by me under section 213, Land Revenue Act. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and Rs. 20 Pleader's fee.

Appeal dismissed.

As a general rule, where no objection is made by the landlord to the occupation of the abadi site by the transferee of a house standing thereon, it must be presumed that such transferee had permission to occupy it on the same terms as his transferor. [p. 306, col. 1.]

The sinking of a well on premises in the abadi occupied by an agriculturist is not necessarily inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was granted, especially where there is no indication of any injury to the interests of the landlord. [p. 306, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Saugor, in Civil Appeal No. 68 of 1918, dated the 31st August 1918, arising out of Civil Suit No. 217 of 1916, in the Court of the 2nd Munsif, Saugor, decided on the 6th March 1918.

JUDGMENT.—The village of Rajawa is divided into three pattis, two of 4 annas and one of 8 annas. The plaintiff owns one of the 4 annas pattis, while the defendant with one Bhau owns the third patti and is also a tenant of land in the plaintiff's patti. Bhau and his brothers had occupancy land in the village and in connection therewith had a house and compound which is now in the plaintiff's patti of the abadi. On the 21st January 1887 Bhau and his brothers sold the occupancy holding and the premises in the abadi to Gajadhar Tiwari and his brother Kesho Pershad for a consideration of Rs. 2,000, the document being Exhibit D-1 of the trial Judge's record. The defendant is the widow of Kesho Pershad and it is now common ground that in 1911 she constructed a dahlan at the eastern end of Bhau's premises and in 1916 began to dig a well about 30 feet from the southern end of the dahlan and within the area in which Bhau's house had stood: the house itself fell down in 1904. Exhibit D 1 gives the boundaries of Bhau's premises as follows:

- (1) On the north.....a public road;
- (2) On the east and south....the premises of Gajadhar Tiwari;
- (3) On the west.....Bansidhar Misar's premises.

The defendant now occupies Gajadhar's premises and those of Bansidhar Misar are occupied by his brother Ganesh. The position will be clear from the plan prepared by the Amin on the 20th November 1918 for the purposes of this case. In that plan the area admitted by the plaintiff to correspond with Bhau's premises is coloured red. There is no evidence to indicate that the portion left uncoloured was ever occupied by any one but Bhau before the sale of 1887, and it would seem that if the boundaries given in Exhibit D-1 are correct, the portion coloured red in the Amin's plan is considerably too small. It suffices, however, for the purposes of this appeal to note that the site of the well is undoubtedly within the area once occupied by Bhau.

In the plaint the land in dispute was described as a square plot 10 or 12 cubits in length and 10 or 12 cubits in breadth belonging to the plaintiff, and possession of this plot was claimed.

The defendant claimed to have been in adverse possession of all the land sold to her husband and his brother by Bhau for over 12 years and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on this ground. The plaintiff appealed and the decree of the trial Judge was set aside, the trial Judge being directed to ascertain whether the defendant had used Bhau's premises with the plaintiff's knowledge in the way she had alleged and what the precise position and extent of Bhau's premises were. The plaintiff was also allowed to press a new point, namely, that even if the defendant is regarded as the licensee of the premises in succession to Bhau, she exceeded her rights by sinking a well and is liable to ejectment on that ground.

Further pleadings and issues were recorded and the successor of the first trial Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for possession of the site of the well as given in the Amin's plan. He found that the defendant was in possession of Bhau's premises from 1887 to 1904 and that the plaintiff then had possession and allowed the defendant to construct the dahlan in return for a payment of Rs. 5. No evidence was given as to the terms of the license under which Bhau held,

RAMDAYAL V. JAGRANI.

The defendant appealed and the lower Appellate Court, following Narain v. Behari (1), has held that the defendant as successor-in title of Bhan's transferees must be regarded as the licensee of the landlord subject to the terms of the wajib-ul-arz till 1904, when Bhan's house fell down. It disbelieved the evidence adduced to prove that the dahlan on the east side of Bhan's premises was built on obtaining a fresh permission from the plaintiff and on payment of some money and presumed that the defendant retained possession of the premises right up to the time (November 1916) when she began to construct a well. The evidence regarding other acts of possession put forward by the plaintiff was like that regarding permission to construct the dahlan rejected as untrue. The contention that the defendant had forfeited her privilege as licensee by sinking a well was overruled on the ground that such an act adds to the amenities of an Indian house, especially in a village where there is no pipe supply. The trial Judge's second decree was, therefore, set aside and the plaintiff's claim was again dismissed.

In second appeal it is contended on the plaintiff's behalf that as soon as Bhan's house fell down the plaintiff's possession began, he being a proprietor of the land and Bhan having parted with his right. No authority is cited in support of this contention, which appears to be opposed to the general rule laid down in Narain v. Behari (1), the case relied upon by the lower Appellate Court, namely that the transferee of a house standing on an abadi site, whose occupancy of the site is not objected to by the landlord, must be presumed to have been permitted to occupy it on the same terms as his transferor. The plaintiff-appellant evidently realised when the defence was put in that the construction of the dahlan in 1911 negatived the existence of an intention on the part of the defendant to abandon the premises and he endeavoured to meet this fact by alleging that his permission was obtained and that he himself raised crops of makka in the rest of the plot. His attempt to prove his allegation has failed, and his claim to recover possession of a small area admittedly within the premises once occupied by Bhan, on the ground that a well has been commenced on it, cannot be granted without producing the absurdity that he would have no access to that area without trespassing on the land properly in the defendant's possession.

It is next urged that the sinking of a well on premises in the abadi occupied by an agriculturist is an act inconsistent with the conditions on which such a license is ordinarily granted. In this connection, too, no authority is cited for the appellant. On the other hand it was held by Chamier, J., in Bhagwan Das v. Muhammad Yahia (2) that the construction of a well in the abadi was not necessarily inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was granted and that as a well is one of the amenities or conveniences of an Indian house, the grant of land for building purposes carries with it the right of making a well for the convenience of the occupiers. In that case the Zemindar was the plaintiff and the defendants were shopkeepers, who had been in occupation of the premises for generations without paying any rent. The general status of Bhan as an absolute occupancy tenant and that of the defendant as a resident Malguzar are doubtless different from that of a shopkeeper, but so far as the advantages which accrue to the occupier of premises in the abadi from sinking a well are concerned, no difference whatever is apparent. It is stated on behalf of the respondent, and not denied for the appellant, that water has in Rajawa to be brought from a considerable distance. There exists, therefore, a special need for wells in the village. On the other hand, the appellant vouchsafes no indication of any injury to his interest which can arise from the construction of a well. It may be that in a properly constituted suit the plaintiff can recover the entire area once occupied by Bhan, but this relief he does not even ask for in this Court and as already stated, to pass a decree for possession of the area in which the well is being sunk would serve no useful purpose. A suitable form of relief would be a mandatory injunction forbidding the defendant from proceeding with the construction of the well, but I am not asked to grant this, though the plaintiff contemplated the issue of such an injunction, and for the reasons already given I am not satisfied that the plaintiff is entitled to any relief of this kind.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. In the Courts below costs will be paid as already ordered.

Appeal dismissed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1133

RESPONDENT.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I of 1886), s. 12—Rules framed by Chief Commissioner under s. 12, r. 57—Settlement of land—Previous settlement holder, rights of—Collector, power of, to exclude previous holder—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to see whether rule has been complied with—Civil Court, whether has power to pronounce on sufficiency of reasons for exclusion.

Under rule 57 of the rules made by the Chief Commissioner of Assam under section 12 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, a Collector has power to settle land with any person whom he thinks fit, but preference should ordinarily be given to the previous settlement holder. [p. 308, col. 2, p. 309, col. 1.]

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to decide whether there has been a compliance with the provisions of the foregoing rule, and if, in a case coming under the third paragraph of that rule, it finds that there was no compliance therewith, it may pass a decree as between the parties to the suit. It is not open, in such cases, to the Civil Court to go into the correctness or sufficiency of the reasons for excluding the previous holder and if it appears that the Revenue Authorities took into consideration the fact that preference should be given to the settlement holder, they have a discretion in the matter. [p. 09, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated the 18th February 1916, reversing the decree of the Munsif, Sibsagar, dated the 4th May 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff for a declaration that he had a right to obtain settlement of the lands in suit. The lands were at first jungly lands. The plaintiff cleared the jungles and made them fit for cultivation and he was the first settlement holder. The lease was at first for a year only. Both the plaintiff and the defendant applied for the lease. The plaintiff first got the settlement. But subsequently the Collector cancelled the lease and settled with the defendant. The plaintiff then instituted a suit. The Munsif decreed the suit. But on appeal the lower Appellate Court reversed the decree under section 154, clause (a), of the Assam Land Revenue Regulation, holding that Civil Courts had no jurisdiction to go into the case.

I submit the lower Appellate Court was wrong there. It did not go into the facts of the case. The only question here is whether the Civil Court has jurisdiction or not. I submit the Civil Court has jurisdiction. I refer to the case reported as Madhub Nath Surma v Myarani Medhi (1) in support of my contention. There is another case, Patan Maria v. Bhabiram Dutt Barna (2). I also refer to the case reported as Nasir Mea v. Arman Ali Mea (3). I reclaimed the waste lands and claimed settlement. But I was not given the settlement. I refer to two cases, one reported as Hedlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (4) and the other in Maksud Mahi (Ananda Kisore Sen) v. Secretary of State (5).

Monlavi Nuruddin Ahmed (with him Mr. A. S. M. Akram), for the Respondent.—The authorities cited by my learned friend do not cover cases like this. The present case is a case of settlement of waste lands. Before discussing I should like to refer to section 11 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. If my submission is correct, then the Civil Court has no jurisdiction and the lower Appellate Court was right. But it is a case of a land-holder and I refer to section 8 of the Regulation. The Regulation makes it incumbent for the Settlement Officer to give settlement to the land-holder. I submit the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to question the discretion exercised by the Revenue Authorities. The rule specifically provides for settlement of waste lands. I refer to section 47 of the said Regulation. As regards the case of Patan Maria v. Bhabiram Dutt Barna (2) it has been proved that the plaintiff had an ancestral holding. The case is within the provision of section 32 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. The case in Patan Maria v. Bhabiram Dutt Barna (2) is quite on a different footing. I refer to Hedlot Khasia v. Karan Khasiani (4).

(1) 17 C. 819.

(2) 24 C. 239; 1 C. W. N. 94.

(3) 18 Ind. Cas. 745; 17 C. L. J. 118.

[CHATTERJEA, J.—Where are the rules made by the Chief Commissioner?]

Rule 57.

CHATTERJEA, J.—Does the rule 57, clause 3, apply?]

Yes; the learned Subordinate Judge says so.

If section 57 applies, then it is not a case in which the Civil Court has any jurisdiction. In that case section 154 applies. Section 154 would operate as a bar, unless section 39 gives a right to the parties. I refer to Askar Mian v. Sahedali Bara Bhuyian (6). Here the question of the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was discussed. Section 154 would not operate as a bar because it is controlled by section 39. I refer to Nasir Mea v. Arman Ali Mea (3). My submission is that none of the cases cited by my learned friend could be held as authorities.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose, in reply.—Rule 57 does give me a right. The Civil Court must give the declaration that I am entitled to settlement. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court cannot be ousted, unless it is shown that there is something out of the ordinary in the case.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff has a right to obtain a settlement of the lands in suit.

It appears that the lands were waste lands which were cleared of jungle and made fit for cultivation by the plaintiff. The plaintiff obtained settlement for one year at a time for two consecutive years. After the expiry of the period of settlement, both the plaintiff and the defendant applied for settlement. The plaintiff alleges that the settlement was at first made with him, but subsequently the Collector set aside that settlement and it was made with the defendant.

The Court of first instance found the facts in favour of the plaintiff and gave a decree in his favour. The lower Appellate Court did not go into the facts of the case, but reversed the decree of the Court of first instance on the ground that the Civil Court had no power to go into the question.

The case is governed by the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation.

The Regulation makes a distinction between the rights of a landholder which are stated in section 9, and those of a settlement holder who is not a landholder. Section 11 lays down that a settlement holder, who is not a landholder, shall have no rights in the land held by him beyond such as are expressed in his settlement lease. Section 32 lays down:—(1) The Settlement Officer shall offer the settlement to such persons (if any) as he finds to be in possession of the estate and to have a permanent, heritable and transferable right of use and occupancy in the same, or to be in possession as mortgagees of persons having such a right.

(2) If the Settlement Officer finds no person in possession as aforesaid, it shall be in his discretion, subject to such rules as the Chief Commissioner may make under section 12, to offer the settlement to any person he thinks fit.

Rule 57 of the rules made by the Chief Commissioner of Assam lays down:—

"In effecting re-settlements of land previously held under leases, the term of which has expired, the Settlement Officer shall proceed according to section 32 of the Land and Revenue Regulation.

If the person in possession is a landholder in respect of the land, settlement shall be offered to such person.

If the person in possession is not a landholder, the settlement may, subject to the provisions of rule 63, be offered to any person whom the Settlement Officer thinks fit but he shall ordinarily give preference to the previous settlement holder. If no one is found in possession immediately under Government, the settlement may, subject to the provisions of rule 63, be offered to the actual cultivator."

(6) 31 Ind. Cas. 424; 22 C. L. J. 328; 23 C. W. N. 540

As the plaintiff was not a landholder, paragraph 3 of the rule applies to this case, and the words "he shall ordinarily give preference to the previous settlement holder" in that paragraph indicate that if there be reasons to take it out of the ordinary rule, the Revenue Authorities have a discretion to settle the land with a person who is not a previous settlement holder.

The learned Munsif in the present case has found as follows:—"As the plaintiff has been held to be in possession of the land in suit since his application for the same, the settlement was first given to him and two Pattas Exhibit 1 and Exhibit 2 were rightly issued in his name. But the subsequent order of the Collector dated 26th March 1913 cancelling the Patta issued in the name of the plaintiff cannot be justified on the provisions of section 41 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation I of 1886".

The learned Subordinate Judge, as stated before, has not gone into the facts of the case. He was of opinion that the Civil Court had no power to decide whether the discretion of the Collector had been rightly exercised. No doubt the Collector has, under rule 57, the power to settle the land with any person whom he thinks fit, but the same rule lays down that preference should ordinarily be given to the previous settlement holder and the question for decision, therefore, is, whether the Revenue Authorities found anything in the case which would take it out of rule 57 of the rules. Neither of the Courts below has gone into the question whether the Collector has found anything for excluding the plaintiff from the settlement. We think that the Civil Court has power to decide whether there was compliance with the provisions of rule 57 of the rules framed by the Chief Commissioner of Assam under section 12 of the Regulation.

The only thing, however, which we think the Civil Court can see in a case coming under paragraph 3 of rule 57 is whether the rule has been complied with, and if there was no compliance with the rule the Court may pass a decree in such cases between the parties to the suit. It is not open to the Civil Court in such cases to go into the correctness or sufficiency of the reasons, and once it appears that the Revenue Authorities took into their consideration the fact that preference should ordinarily be given to the settlement holder, they have a discretion in the matter. The reasons, moreover, for excluding the plaintiff might appear not only in the order, but in the office report or even in the petitions of the parties or other settlement papers.

As, however, the question has not been gone into by either of the Courts below, we think that the decrees of both the Courts below should be set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance so that the question may be inquired into and the suit decided according to law.

Costs to abide the result.

*Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (5), 11—
Occupancy rights, accrual of—Ejectment of tenant—Lease to third person for one year—Ejected tenant continuing in occupation and paying rent—Occupation, whether continuous.*

A landholder ejected a tenant in due course of law and immediately gave a lease of the land to a caste-fellow of the latter for one year only; the ejected tenant, however, continued in occupation, paid the rent due and was re-admitted on expiry of the lease:

Held, per Ferard, S. M.—That as the person liable for the rent under the definition of section 4 (5) of the Agra Tenancy Act was the tenant, and as the tenant in this case was the person in whose favour the lease had been executed, there was not a continuous occupation by the ejected tenant as a tenant for the purpose of section 11 of the Act. [p. 310, col. 2.]

Per Hopkins, J. M.—That there was a continuous occupation by the original tenant. [p. 311, col. 1.]

MUHAMMAD NABI v. UMEDI.

The letting of land to a person who does not cultivate, and allowing the original tenant to remain in cultivating possession, does not constitute the former a legal tenant under the definition in section 4 (5) of the Agra Tenancy Act. A tenant is a person by whom rent is payable, and rent is what is paid by a tenant for land held by him. [p. 311, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the order of the Commissioner, Rohilkhand Division, dated the 21st October 1918, in the case of ejectment.

JUDGMENT.—The position is given in the Commissioner's judgment.

FERRARD, S. M.—(March 27, 1919.)—In 1312, the appellant landholder, not desiring that the respondent should acquire occupancy right, sued him for ejectment, obtained decree, and had it executed under section 71, Tenancy Act.

He then gave a lease of it to a caste-fellow (Dhimar) of the respondent for one year. The latter's name, Harjas, is recorded for 1313 and the lease to him is proved. In 1314, the appellant's name appears again, and he has held up to date. The Commissioner, differing from the Assistant Collector, holds that there was no break in appellant's tenancy in 1313, that in fact appellant was re-admitted after his ejectment in 1312.

I am unable to agree. When a landlord carries ejectment proceedings right through, the onus of proving re-admission lies very strongly on the tenant and the respondent has not proved that he paid the rent to the landlord for the year 1313 for this holding. He paid certain small sums according to the receipts, but he has another holding. The Commissioner has decided entirely on the probability that Harjas, another Dhimar, would not have taken over such a large holding for one year only. It is, however, still more improbable that the landlord would at once "re-admit" the old tenant whom he had taken pains to eject in order to break occupancy right. It is very likely that Harjas let the appellant cultivate the land in 1313, it is very likely that the landlord knew that Harjas was going to do this, it is very likely also that whether directly or via Harjas the landlord got the 1313 rent from the appellant, but all the same, in my opinion, Harjas was the landlord's tenant in 1313, the person liable for the rent under the definition of section 4 (5), Tenancy Act. Though the appellant may have, as the Commissioner thinks, actually held the land in 1313, I would hold that he did not do so as a tenant and that his present occupation can count from 1314 only, and he is liable to ejectment. Continuous occupation for the purpose of section 11, Tenancy Act, must be occupation as a tenant. The case resembles instance (iii) which Mr. Agarwala gives in his note 9 on sections 15-17, Tenancy Act, at page 102 of the 5th edition of his commentary. His view is, of course, not authoritative, but I agree with it. Too much partiality to tenants is often shown in this common class of cases. Landlords have legal power to prevent accrual of occupancy rights and after ejectment, it is for the ejected tenant to prove that within a year under section 13 (b) he was re-admitted to the legal status of a tenant. The Courts often assume too much in his favour and that I find to be the case here. I would allow the appeal and restore the order of the Assistant Collector decreeing ejectment.

This governs the precisely similar appeal for the 15 biswas mahal—the case there is even stronger as the new tenant, Harjas's brother Jhao, appeared in the papers in 1313 and 1314, and the appellant's name did not re-appear as tenant again till 1315.

Costs to the appellant throughout.

HOPKINS, J. M.—(March 12, 1919.)—The change in the law introduced by section 13 of the Tenancy Act was intended to remove the landholder's power to prevent the accrual of occupancy rights by nominal ejectment. The landholder has power to prevent the accrual of occupancy rights in two ways—

- (1) by actually and effectively getting rid of the tenant, or
- (2) by granting him a lease for seven years.

The landholder may wish to retain the tenant or to get rid of him. If he wishes to retain him, he must either allow him to count the period of his retention towards the acquisition of occupancy rights or give him a 7 years' lease. He cannot, however, retain him as a tenant-at-will. The test imposed by the law to show that the landholder wishes to get rid of the tenant is that he must keep him out of the holding (or its equivalent) for at least a year with, of course, the risk of losing him altogether.

If a new tenant is put in for a year and the old tenant is then re-admitted, the intermediate letting of the land must be a genuine and bona fide transaction. It is not enough to give a paper lease to a person who does not cultivate and to allow the original tenant to remain in cultivating possession. I am unable to agree that a dummy tenant of this sort is the legal tenant under the definition in section 4 (5) of the Tenancy Act. A tenant is a person by whom 'rent' is payable, and 'rent' is what is paid by a tenant for land held by him: section 4 (3). In the case supposed, the lessee does not hold land at all. He holds a piece of paper. The setting up of a dummy tenant of this kind is, in my opinion, a colourable transaction intended to defeat the provisions of the law, and effect should not be given to it by the Courts.

It is, of course, possible that the colourable transaction may be not on the side of the landholder, but of the tenant. The landholder may make a bona fide letting to a new tenant in a genuinely different interest. The former tenant may seek to show a real sub-tenancy as a colourable tenancy-in-chief. These are questions of fact to be determined on the evidence in each particular case.

In the present case, the conclusion come to by the Commissioner on the facts is that the leases to the intermediate tenant were executed without any idea that they would really be brought into force, but simply with the intention of making a break in the ejected tenant's tenure. He believed that the occupation of the latter had been continuous. My colleague is prepared to admit as much, but in any case the Commissioner's findings of fact are binding on this Court unless it can be shown that there is no evidence at all to support them.

I regret that I am unable to concur in the order proposed.

BY THE COURT.—FERARD, S. M.—As members differ, the appeal stands dismissed with costs. There is a good deal to be said for the point of view taken in my colleague's dissenting note.

Appeal dismissed.

Where documents containing depositions of witnesses in a suit, having some bearing on the subject-matter of the suit in which they are produced, are tendered by the plaintiff after the filing of the plaint, but before any of the witnesses are examined, he is entitled to cross-examine witnesses on the basis of the documents, even though the witnesses may have been cited on his behalf. The expression "defendant's witnesses" in rule 18 (2) of Order VII of the Civil Procedure Code includes witnesses who have turned hostile to the plaintiff, and may be treated as the adversary's witnesses. [p. 312, col. 2.]

A guardian appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act cannot ratify the unauthorised acts of a former guardian; this can be done by the minor alone on attaining majority. [p. 312, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case need not be stated at length in this judgment, as I have come to the conclusion that the case must go back for a fresh decision. The plaintiff-appellant sued upon a mortgage executed on behalf of the minor defendant Govinda by his step mother Abalia as guardian and also by Dhrupadi (defendant No. 2). The main questions for decision are whether there was legal necessity for borrowing the money secured by the mortgage, and whether Dhrupadi's husband and his brother were separate.

Certain documents were tendered, admittedly at a late stage of the case, in the first Court and were rejected. In the opinion of both the Courts below, sufficient cause has not been shown for their non-production at the proper time. I may mention that the documents seem to have been produced before any of the witnesses were examined in the case, and some of the documents are public documents containing depositions of witnesses examined in an objection case having some bearing on the present litigation. They were again tendered when Ahalia and Maroti (plaintiff's witnesses Nos. 2 and 3) were examined, and on each occasion the Subordinate Judge refused to allow the plaintiff to cross-examine the witnesses with reference to the statements contained in their former depositions. A similar attempt was not made when Dhrupadi was examined as a witness, obviously in deference to the ruling of the Subordinate Judge already given on two occasions. I think the plaintiff was entitled to cross-examine witnesses on the basis of these documents.

Order VII, rule 18, sub-clause (1), lays down that documents not entered in the list attached to the plaint shall not, without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. Sub-clause (2) says: "Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory."

There was no section which expressly excepted such documents under Act VIII of 1859. But in Ramji v. Rangayya (1) Scotland, C. J., held that a document given to a witness to refresh his memory did not come within the prohibition laid down by section 39 [Order VII, rule 18 (1)], and section 128 [Order XIII, rule 2]. The saving clause was introduced, it would seem, to give effect to this decision, but if this was the intention, its appropriate place would have been in Order XIII, rule 2, and the wording should have been general and not confined to the case of a plaintiff. The reason given by the learned Chief Justice is that these sections relate to documents relied upon as themselves evidence in support of the case of the respective parties. It is difficult to see how cross-examination can be effective if the contents of the document on which it is to be based are known to the adverse party at the first hearing. Unless it is an admission made by a party to the suit, a statement made by a living person is not evidence and hence Order XIII, rule 2, does not apply to it.

The witnesses were no doubt cited on behalf of the plaintiff, but they should have been examined on behalf of the defendants and cross-examined by the plaintiff. Although the words used in the section are "defendant's witnesses", I think they ought to be interpreted to include all witnesses who have turned hostile to the plaintiff, so that he is entitled to cross-examine them under the provisions of section 154 of the Evidence Act. Such witnesses may well be treated as the adversary's witnesses.

The saving clause has been enacted ex cautela majore, as the prohibition only extends to the reception of documents relied on by the parties. Under these circumstances the procedure of the lower Courts in refusing to allow cross-examination of some of the witnesses on the basis of the documents was illegal. As regards all public documents, now that I have to remand the case, they may be admitted in evidence, as I understand the respondents' learned Pleader himself wishes to rely on some of them. Documents which are not public documents, such as mortgages, should not be admitted except with the consent of the respondents' Pleader. I regret that under the provisions of section 145 of the Evidence Act two of the witnesses (Ahalia and one Maroti) will have to be examined again.

It is desirable that I should dispose of certain contentions, which have been raised before me, as they are questions of law. The first point I would notice is the argument that there has been a ratification of the mortgage by the present guardian of Govinda appointed by the District Judge under the Guardians and Wards Act. There can be no ratification by one guardian of the unauthorised acts of a former guardian. It is the minor, and minor alone, who on attaining majority can ratify them. The fact that the guardian has made payments in part satisfaction of the mortgage would be a relevant fact to prove the propriety of the transaction, but the weight to be attached to it depends upon whether he had personal knowledge of the transaction, or whether he made enquiries and had data before him, not available now, on which he was satisfied of the justice of the claim. This is a matter for the lower Appellate Court to decide.

It is urged that the sanction of the arbitrator to whom Suit No. 545 of 1902 was referred was a sufficient sanction within the meaning of section 462 of the Civil Procedure Code. I am unable to agree with this view. The arbitrator did not take upon himself the responsibility of making an award, but he merely sent a report with an application from the plaintiff in that suit, Maroti Kushal, stating that the suit has been compromised out of Court. The mere approval of a compromise arrived at between the parties is not an award, and it is clear that the sanction of the Extra Assistant Commissioner, which was required by law, was never obtained. Under these circumstances, the mortgage is voidable on behalf of the minor. It does not, however, follow that the Court cannot put him on terms when the minor seeks to rescind the mortgage. Under section 64 of the Contract Act, the party rescinding a voidable contract shall, if he have received any benefit thereunder from another party to such contract, restore such benefit, so far as may be, to the person from whom it was received. The Privy Council case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmadas Ghose (2) is distinguishable on the ground that there was no contract, as the minor was himself a party to it. In the present case it was his guardian who entered into the contract. The lower Court has relied upon the judgment of Hallifax, A. J. C., in Husen v. Rajaram (3) and has held that the mortgage by the step mother of the minor is absolutely void, but I must respectfully decline to follow that ruling, in view of the fact that a different view has been subsequently taken by a Bench of two Judges of this Court.

The fact that the arbitrator approved of the compromise is a relevant fact, and it is for the lower Appellate Court to decide what importance should be attached to it. This again depends upon the investigation made by the arbitrator.

The plaintiff in execution of a money decree against Govinda had attached the property in dispute. An objection was filed by Dhrupadi, and some of the property was released from attachment. It is contended that under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the order has become conclusive. Assuming that the plaintiff is not suing now under a different title, and that the order is conclusive as between the plaintiff and Dhrupadi, there is no reason to suppose that it was conclusive against the minor defendant Govinda as he was not a party to the order, nor could any adjudication be made as against him. The party against whom the order was passed is the plaintiff and not the judgment-debtor Govinda, and Govinda was not bound to set aside that order within one year.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for a fresh decision with advertence to the above remarks. There will be no order for refund of Court-fees.

The costs of this appeal will follow the result.

Case remanded.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage effected by Deoki Nandan, the father of the plaintiffs, in favour of Kishun Prasad and Thakur Din on the 22nd November 1894. The amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 400, out of which Rs. 325 were left with the mortgagees for payment to Gopal on account of his prior mortgage of the 18th June 1892. Out of the plots mortgaged with Kishun Prasad and Thakur Din only two plots Nos. 134 and 137 khasra were mortgaged to Gopal.

The mortgagees did not pay the money left with them for payment to Gopal. On the 22nd May 1896, Gopal filed a suit for foreclosure on foot of his mortgage and obtained a decree to which Kishun Prasad and Thakur Din were parties. This decree was made absolute on the 14th August 1897. By virtue of that decree plots Nos. 134 and 137 passed out of the ownership of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs seek to debit the mortgagees with the value of the said plots, which they allege were lost on account of their wrongful default. The Courts below treated the claim as one for compensation for breach of a contract and held that it was barred by time.

On behalf of the plaintiffs reliance is placed on the decision in Shivachidambara Mudeley v. Kamakshi Ammal (1). But in that case the mortgaged property was lost on account of the failure of the mortgagee to pay the Government revenue assessed on the land, and it was held that a claim for compensation could be maintained under section 76 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) at the time of redemption. Here there was no breach on the part of the mortgagees of a contractual or statutory obligation arising out of the mortgage or annexed to the relationship of the mortgagor and mortgagee created by the transaction. There was only a partial failure of the consideration payable for the mortgage and if any loss was occasioned in consequence of that failure, that loss could not be recovered except by a separate suit. In other words, by taking charge of a portion of the consideration money for the purpose of paying up the prior mortgage, the mortgagees constituted themselves agents or trustees of the mortgagor as much in their own benefit as in that of his; and if they failed to carry out the terms of the agency or the trust, they could not be held responsible for any loss occasioned thereby at the time of redemption. Had the mortgagees paid the money left with them to the prior mortgagee, they would have got possession of the said plots and would have been entitled to recover the entire mortgage-money. Not having done so, they are entitled to recover only what they paid and to claim no compensation for any loss which might have been caused by their own laches. The duty of the mortgagee to restore at the time of the redemption of the mortgage the mortgaged property to the mortgagor does not arise where possession over that property was not delivered to him at the time of the mortgage or at any time thereafter.

In Naubat Singh v. Indar Singh (2) it was held that a suit by a mortgagor to enforce the payment of the consideration due on a registered mortgage-deed together with damages for non-payment was governed by Article 116 of the Indian Limitation Act and the time from which the limitation ran was, in the absence of any special provision to the contrary, the date of the execution of the mortgage deed. In Raghubar Rai v. Jai Rai (3) it was held in somewhat similar circumstances that the cause of action arose when the breach took place, unless there were successive breaches within the meaning of Article 116 or a continuing breach within the meaning of section 23 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908). In Rani Reghubans Kuar v. Rānak Ali (4) a suit was brought by the mortgagee to recover the money due on his mortgage. It was found that the mortgagee had not paid a portion of the mortgage money to a prior mortgagee as stipulated in the deed of mortgage. The mortgagor resisted the claim on the ground that he was not bound to carry out his part of the contract because the mortgagee had not carried out his part. It was held that the amount claimed for compensation for the loss occasioned by the failure of the mortgagee to carry out his part of the contract could be recovered by a suit, and not by a set-off against the mortgage money. In Partab Singh v. Balwant Singh (5) it was held that where a portion of the mortgage consideration was left with the mortgagee to redeem certain prior mortgages existing on the property and no particular time was specified in the deed for such redemption, it was the duty of the mortgagee to redeem those prior mortgages within a reasonable time and if the mortgagee failed to do so, the mortgagor was entitled to recover from the mortgagee damages sustained by him in consequence of it. The mortgagor was, moreover, a party to the suit for foreclosure. After that suit Rs. 100 were paid by the mortgagees out of the consideration left with them in satisfaction of another mortgage due by the mortgagor to save the property from foreclosure. There is no reason, therefore, for interfering with the decree passed by the Court below. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Application for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Yeotmal.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and V. V. Chitale, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The defendant in execution of a decree against one Ramdheen attached certain beads, 19 tolas in weight, and had them put up for sale as gold beads, which the plaintiff purchased for Rs. 306 (three hundred and six). Immediately after the auction sale the plaintiff complained to the Court that the beads were of brass, though the sale proclamation described them as gold beads. The Court refused to set aside the sale. Hence the plaintiff has brought this suit to recover Rs. 306.

The plaintiff alleges that the defendant knew that the beads were brass. The lower Court, however, has found that there was no fraud, and that the defendant was misled by the description given in another attachment proceeding at the instance of a third party. But if the decree-holder had made the slightest inquiry, he would have found out the reason why there were no bidders on the previous occasion. However, I accept the lower Court's finding that there was no fraud or fraudulent misrepresentation. The lower Court is so far right that an action for deceit would not lie.

There was such misrepresentation, though not fraudulent, as would have entitled a buyer to rescind a contract and recover the money paid from the seller. But the sale was an execution sale and under Order XXI, rule 78, "No irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of moveable property shall vitiate the sale; but any person sustaining any injury by reason of such irregularity at the hand of any other person may institute a suit against him for compensation."

The lower Court cites a number of rulings which show that in an execution sale of immoveable property there is no warranty of title. No such question arises in this case. The judgment-debtor had title to the beads, whether gold or brass.

The plaintiff relies upon section 113 of the Indian Contract Act to show that there was an implied warranty. That section lays down:—"Where goods are sold as being of a certain denomination, there is an implied warranty that they are such goods as are commercially known by that denomination." I do not think the section would apply to the case even if there had been a contract between the parties. Gold bead is not a commercial denomination like English Bar Gold, National Bank Bar Gold, or 22 Carat Gold.

I think an action for money had and received lies, as there has been a total failure of consideration. The specific goods were no doubt produced at the auction sale, but the purchaser had no opportunity of inspecting and testing the accuracy of the description given, whereas the decree-holder had ample means of ascertaining whether the articles were of gold or not. Fortunately for the plaintiff, there is no question of the quality of the gold here, it being admitted before me that the beads were of brass.

In Benjamin on Sale, fifth edition, is quoted the following passage from the judgment of Lord Abinger in Chanter v. Hopkins (1):—

"A good deal of confusion has arisen in many of the cases on this subject, from the unfortunate use made of the word 'warranty.' Two things have been confounded together. A warranty is an express or implied statement of something which a party undertakes shall be part of a contract, and though part of the contract, yet collateral to the express object of it. But in many of the cases, the circumstance of a party selling a particular thing by its proper description, has been called a warranty; and the breach of such a contract, a breach of warranty, but it would be better to distinguish such cases as a non-compliance with a contract which a party has engaged to fulfil; as, if a man offers to buy peas of another, and he sends him beans, he does not perform his contract; but that is not a warranty; there is no warranty that he should sell him peas; the contract is to sell peas, and if he sends him anything else in their stead, it is a non-performance of it."

The Editor adds:—

"There can be no doubt of the correctness of the distinction here pointed out. If the sale is of a described article, the tender of an article answering the description is a condition precedent to the purchaser's liability, and if this condition be not performed, the purchaser is entitled to reject the article, or if he has paid for it, to recover the price as money had and received for his use."

Every circumstance points to the buyer having contracted for the specific goods produced as described. To use the words of Blackburn, J., in Kennedy v. Panama Mail Co. (2) "there is a complete difference in substance between what was supposed to be and what was taken; so as to constitute a failure of consideration." The plaintiff's claim can, therefore, be supported as an action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use, and this would apply whether the sale was an execution sale or a sale by a private contract between the plaintiff and defendant, for as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Dorab Ally Khan v. Executors of Khajah Mohecodeen (3), the defendant is to be treated as a principal in the transaction, having applied to the Court for an order of JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case relates to a portion of the area of patti shamilat of the village Pindaria.

It appears that the village was divided into three pattis exclusive of the shamilat land. One of the pattis was called Patti Kalidin and contained 431 bighas 17 biswas 9 biswansis of land at the time of the first regular settlement, which was reduced to 365 bighas 18 biswas 13 biswansis at the last settlement. Another patti was called Patti Gurbakhsh Singh. It contained 157 bighas 18 biswas 13 biswansis of land at the first settlement, which was increased to 158 bighas 11 biswas 6 biswansis at the last settlement. The third patti was called Patti Sheogulam Singh. It contained 126 bighas 10 biswas 19 biswansis of land at the first settlement, which was enhanced to 137 bighas 6 biswas 6 biswansis at the last settlement. The shamilat patti comprised 569 bighas 15 biswas 11 biswansis of land appertaining to Pattis Gurbakhsh Singh and Sheogulam Singh at the first settlement. Its area was enlarged so as to comprise 624 bighas 6 biswas 7 biswansis at the last settlement.

No order of the Settlement Officer has been filed to explain how these alterations in the areas were effected. The explanation offered by the defendants-appellants is that by reason of the accrual of the jethansi right the owners of Pattis Gurbakhsh Singh and Sheogulam Singh became entitled to more land than they would otherwise have possessed and that the alterations in question were effected in recognition of that right; but the Courts below found that there was no proof that such a jethansi custom was in force or that if it was in force, any such right had accrued to the defendants-appellants. The plaintiff is the sole owner of Patti Kalidin. His ancestors held a mortgage of Patti Gurbakhsh Singh and Patti Sheogulam Singh from the other co sharers of the village. The defendants-appellants redeemed half of Patti Gurbakhsh Singh from the plaintiff by virtue of a decree dated the 10th December 1914. They applied for the partition of that half share, making the other co sharers of the village parties to the partition proceeding. The plaintiff disputed the right of the defendants-appellants to claim a partition of half the area mentioned by them. The partition officer referred him to the Civil Court. In the present suit he claimed a declaration that certain plots measuring 74 bighas 3 biswas 9 biswansis and forming part of patti shamilat really belonged to Patti Kalidin and were in his possession. The Courts below decreed the claim.

The first contention urged on behalf of the defendants-appellants is that the Court below had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit inasmuch as the reference made by the Revenue Court was ultra vires. It does not appear whether the objections of the plaintiff-respondent were filed on the date fixed by the proclamation issued by the partition officer or on a subsequent date. The date originally fixed may, as pointed out in Amirul Rahman v. Dhan Kumar Das (1) and Sheoratan Singh v. Rohan Singh (2), from time to time be extended either on account of non-service of the notices or at the request of any of the parties. The jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to direct a party to get his title determined within a certain period is not ousted so long as an objection is filed within such extended period and no order is passed by the partition officer determining the shares of the parties and directing the method in which the partition is to be effected. No such objection was, moreover, taken in the Court of first instance. The order referring the plaintiff-respondent to the Civil Court cannot, therefore, be regarded as illegal.

It is next argued that the claim was barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was not brought within 12 years from the date when the settlement khewat was verified by Chandidat, the agent of the plaintiff. But as the Courts below found that the plaintiff continued in possession of the disputed plots in spite of the entry made in the khewat excluding him from Patti Kalidin, no question of limitation or adverse possession can arise. As pointed out in Jevanand v. Beni Madho (3) and Allah Jilai v. Umrao Husain (4), every invasion of the title gives rise to a fresh cause of action so long as the person whose title is disputed remains in possession or his possession is not disturbed. It is open to a person in possession to treat a denial of his title by another with indifference, if that denial does not interfere with his possession or enjoyment. If it does, he is bound to take some action to protect his title or possession within the time allowed by law. In this case there was no invasion beyond certain entries, the precise nature of which was not brought home to the plaintiff-respondent or his predecessor-in-interest till the application for partition was made. The possession of the plaintiff-respondent, too, was not disturbed. The suit is not, therefore, barred by time.

The finding of the Courts below that the alleged custom of jethansi was not established was based on a consideration of the evidence adduced including the wajib-ul-arzes filed, and there is no sufficient reason for questioning its propriety. The Courts below further found that the defendants-appellants did not establish that they belonged to the senior branch. The other co-sharers of the village are not necessary parties to the suit, because they were not interested in denying the title of the plaintiff-respondent.

The appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

An acknowledgment of liability by the manager of a joint Hindu family will not, save under special circumstances, bind the other adult co-parceners who are also parties to the original contract. [p. 320, col. 2.] Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar, 25 M. 220 at p. 234, followed.

Where part of the consideration for a mortgage deed executed by the father and written and attested by the son is payment towards a prior promissory note executed by both father and son, and the mortgagee pays the amount to the obligee of the promissory note, the son must be deemed to have authorised the father to make the payment and time is extended against the son [p. 319, col. 2.]

Payment by an agent through his servant or friend is payment on behalf of the principal within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act. [p. 320, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Original Suit No. 9 of 1918 (Original Suit No. 45 of 1917, on the file of the Subordinate Judge's Court, Tinnevely).

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Bashyam Iyengar, for the Appellants.—The suit is barred as against the 2nd defendant, the son. The acknowledgment or payment by the father will not bind the son. The mortgage-deed was executed by the father and the son was no party to it.

Again the payment was not made by the 1st defendant. It was made by the mortgagee's man. It is not such a payment as comes within section 20 of the Limitation Act.

Lastly, the debt under the promissory note had become merged in the mortgage, Exhibit E, and the liability under the original contract has ceased.

Messrs. K. R. Guruswamy Aiyar, T. V. Muttukrishna Aiyar and A. Subrama Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The mortgage-deed was signed and attested by the son. One of the items of consideration was a payment towards the pro-note, Exhibit A. The son must be deemed to have authorised the father to make the payment. The case comes within the exception to the rule in section 21 of the Limitation Act and time is saved against the son.

The payment having been made by 1st defendant's agent binds the 1st defendant.

The substituted agreement, the mortgage, having become infructuous, there was no novation under section 62 of the Contract

Act. The liability under the original contract continues.

JUDGMENT.

ABDUR RAHIM, J.—The short point regarding limitation which is raised with reference to the liability of the 2nd defendant, the son of the 1st defendant, is this. Both the father and the son executed a promissory note, Exhibit A, in renewal of certain other promissory notes executed by the father alone. Exhibit A is dated 27th April 1914 and the suit is instituted on 10th September 1917. Limitation is sought to be saved by a payment of Rs. 740 made on 6th November 1914 towards principal and interest due on Exhibit A. The payment was actually made by one Khadir Moideen Taraganar on behalf of Aiyaswami Pillai. This Aiyaswami Pillai had obtained a mortgage on the family property of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the 28th October 1914 and one item of consideration for it was the sum of Rs. 740, which he undertook to pay to Krishnaiar, the person in whose favour Exhibit A was executed. The mortgage Exhibit M was written by the 2nd defendant, who also attested it. The respondent's contention is that the 2nd defendant must be taken to have authorised his father to make the payment of Rs. 740 towards principal and interest due under Exhibit A. We think that is the proper interpretation to be put on what took place. He must have known, having written the document, that Rs. 740 was to be paid towards Exhibit A, and it follows, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, that he must have authorised his father to make this payment. If this view of the matter is correct, then it is brought within the exception to the rule laid down in section 21 of the Limitation Act as interpreted in Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (1). There the learned Judges of the Full Bench lay down: "But it seems clear that, when a creditor deals, not with the managing member only of a family, but with all the members of the undivided family as co-obligors and on that footing enters into a transaction, thereby avoiding any question as to whether the transaction was really for the benefit of the family, he cannot rely upon an acknowledgment of the liability, made by one of them, as an acknowledgment duly made on behalf of all the co-obligors, by reason only that the person acknowledging is in fact the managing member of the family consisting of the co-obligors." Then they add "it may well be, however, that, in particular cases, this circumstance, coupled with the conduct of the joint contractors, may warrant a conclusion that as a matter of fact he was duly authorised to make the acknowledgment on behalf of all." This ruling has been followed by the Calcutta High Court in Baikunta Gui v. Lal Chand Samanta (2). Our attention was drawn to an observation in Indar Pal Singh v. Mewa Lal (3) to the effect that an acknowledgment by the manager of a Hindu joint family, whether other members joined in it or not, would bind the other members also notwithstanding section 21 of the Limitation Act. But Indar Pal Singh v. Mewa Lal, (3) and Saroda Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram Dey Sinha (4), also relied on by the learned District Judge, are not cases within clause (2) of section 21 of the Limitation Act. We are, however, bound by the ruling of this Court in Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (1) and the present case comes within the exception enunciated therein.

(1) 25 M. 220 at 234.

Then it was argued that the payment not being made by the 1st defendant himself does not come within the meaning of section 20 of the Limitation Act. The section says that payment must be either by the debtor or by his agent duly authorized in that behalf, but we do not think that the Legislature could have intended that, if the agent made the payment through the hands of a servant or friend, that would not be payment by the agent on behalf of the principal within the meaning of section 20. We hold that the suit is not barred against the 2nd defendant so far as his liability under Exhibit A is concerned.

As regards his liability under Exhibit C that was not disputed before us.

The second point urged before us was that there had been a novation of the contract under Exhibits A and C or that these contracts became merged in a mortgage, Exhibit E, which was executed on 22nd

March 1915. But the mortgage proved infructuous, inasmuch as the plaintiff sought after execution to introduce some additional property as security. The contemplated mortgage having failed, I am clearly of opinion that there was no novation or merger. Section 62 of the Contract Act deals with the question of substitution of one contract for another and it is clear that this depends upon the intention of the parties. If the contemplated substituted security itself failed, prima facie the parties could not be taken to have intended that the liability of the debtor under the original contract would also cease. In this connection it is enough to refer to the rulings in Abdul Kayam v. Bahadur Vithoba (5) and Kiam-ud-din v. Rajjo (6) in support of this view.

The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Through some mistakes or oversight the decree of the lower Court does not provide for the payment of interest on the principal amount. The decree will, therefore, be amended by providing for interest at the rates mentioned in Exhibits A and C from the date of those documents to the date of decree and thereafter at 6 per cent. on the aggregate sum. The appellant will pay the costs of the memorandum of objections to the respondent.

SPENCER, J.—In my opinion the cases quoted by the learned District Judge, Indar Pal Singh v. Mewa Lal (3) and Saroda Charan Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram Dey Sinha (4), are not sufficient authority for extending the prescribed period of limitation in consequence of an acknowledgment made by the manager of a Hindu joint family on behalf of the adult members of the family who are also parties to the original contract. Section 21, clause (2), of the Indian Limitation Act of 1908 makes it clear that an acknowledgment by one of several co-contractors will not render the other contractors liable in cases where they are capable of contracting for themselves. Clause (1) of this section includes guardians and managers of minors under the expression 'agent duly authorized in this behalf' in sections 19 and 20. Saroja Chaman Chuckerbutty v. Durga Ram Dey Sinha (4) was a case of a manager of a Hindu family making a payment of interest on behalf of himself and his minor brothers, and minors being persons under disability from contracting, the case fell naturally under section 21, clause (1). In Indarpal Singh v. Mewa Lal (3) it is not clear whether the defendants, on behalf of whom the acknowledgment was made, were minors or adults. The acknowledgment was contained in a written statement filed in a prior suit. The learned Judges simply observed, without discussing the point, that the acknowledgment having been made by the manager of the joint Hindu family was, in their opinion, binding on the other members. This case is, therefore, hardly an authority for the proposition that a manager can bind adult members of a joint Hindu family by his acknowledgment without being duly authorised to make an acknowledgment on their behalf. The decision in Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (1) dealt with the case of a family of co-obligors on behalf of whom the managing member made an acknowledgment, and the learned Judges who heard the appeal observed that there was no authority for saying that the manager of an undivided Hindu family could, by his acknowledgment, keep a debt alive against other members of the family of which he happened to be manager, the debt having originally been contracted by all the members jointly. But they qualified this expression of opinion by saying that in particular cases the conduct of the joint contractors, coupled with the managing member's acknowledgment might warrant the conclusion that the manager was duly authorised to make the acknowledgment on behalf of all. That was a case under the old Limitation Act of 1877, in which there was no provision like section 21, clause (1), of the Act of 1908. But the principle of treating the managers of joint Hindu families as agents for the purpose of acknowledging valid debts on behalf of members of such families was recognised so long ago as Ohinnya Nayudu v. Gurunatham Chetti (7), and the subsequent legislation simply embodies that principle in clause (1) of section 21 subject to the qualification contained in clause (2) which already existed in the former Act. The law has not altered since Narayana Aiyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (1) was decided.

Applying it to the facts of the present case, I agree with my learned brother that the conduct of the 2nd defendant, Subramania Aiyar, in writing and attesting Exhibit M was conduct from which the Court might well infer that he acquiesced in the acknowledgment made by his father Duraiswami Aiyar in that document of their liability under the two suit promissory notes (Exhibits A and C), which were signed by both of them.

On the other questions argued before us I agree with my learned brother and I have nothing to add.

An executor who has obtained Probate has absolute authority under section 269 of the Succession Act to mortgage the testator's assets, and his authority is in no way fettered by reason of a stipulation in the Will that he is not to sell or mortgage the property, and he would be acting within that authority if he renewed a mortgage effected by the testator to satisfy the debt created by that mortgage. TWAKKUL HUSSAIN v. AJODHYA BANK, LTD., FYZABAD.

Pandit Jagmohan Nath Chak, for Respondent No. 1.

Babu Jiban Krishna Banerjee, for Respondent No. 3.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal questions the validity of a decree granted to the Ajodhya Bank, Ltd., in the following circumstances:—

C. S. Paschaud owned a shop and residential quarters in Fyzabad. He mortgaged the same to the Ajodhya Bank on the 15th April 1895. He made a Will in 1903, under the terms of which his brother G. F. Paschaud was declared his executor and his brother's daughter Emma, now Mrs. Nixon, was made sole legatee. Under this Will Mrs. Nixon inherited the whole property. There was a clause in the Will to the effect that the executor had no authority to sell or mortgage the property. C. S. Paschaud died in the same year that he made the Will. G. F. Paschaud took out Probate under the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) which had application, and also under the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) which had no application. He took out Probate on 19th March 1904. On the 6th April 1907, just before the period during which the Bank could have instituted a suit on the basis of the mortgage of 15th April 1895 expired, G. F. Paschaud executed a mortgage of the same property in favour of the Ajodhya Bank to pay off the amount due on the former mortgage. In 1914 Mrs. Nixon sold the shop and the residential quarters to Khan Bahadur Saiyad Tawakkul Husain. Subsequently the Bank sued on the deed of the 6th April 1907 in the Court of the Munsif of Fyzabad. The learned Munsif dismissed the suit. The learned District Judge decreed it. Khan Bahadur Saiyad Tawakkul Husain appeals. The decree is for a small sum of Rs. 334 13 6 to be recovered by sale of the mortgaged property. The mortgage was for a considerably greater sum. The amount due was reduced by certain payments. Some of the payments at any rate, if not all, were made by G. F. Paschaud.

The power of an executor to mortgage the testator's assets has been recognised under the English law by an unbroken series of decisions, and this principle of the English law has been introduced into section 269, Act X of 1865, which is the Act applicable to European Christians. It is true that the authority of an executor in this respect is qualified under the provisions of Act V of 1881. But that Act does not govern the present case. The question then arises whether the stipulation in the Will, that the executor was not to sell or mortgage the property, can be of effect in view of the circumstances that the law gives the executor absolute power to mortgage the testator's assets. I am of opinion that this attempt to fetter the authority of the executor can be of no avail.

The next point to consider is whether G. F. Paschaud was, at the time that he executed the mortgage, administering the estate. There can be no doubt as to the fact that at the time that the mortgage of 1907 was executed G. F. Paschaud was administering the estate. No other conclusion is possible. He had to wind up the estate completely. I am not in a position to know whether he had or had not filed the necessary accounts which the Act requires an executor to file. But whether he had done so or not, he clearly had authority to satisfy the debt due from the testator's estate created by the execution of the mortgage of 1895 by renewing that mortgage. He did nothing more. On these two points alone the appeal would fail. But even if the Bank's case had not been as strong as it is, if for example G. F. Paschaud had not had authority to renew the mortgage, I consider that the Bank would nevertheless succeed on the ground that Mrs. Nixon, having taken advantage of the satisfaction of the debt due from her uncle's estate by the renewal of 1907, was legally estopped from questioning the validity of the mortgage. This estoppel would also bind the present appellant, who on the evidence was aware at the time that he purchased the property that the mortgage of 1907 was in existence.

For the above reasons I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Suit No. 183 of 1911, dated the 17th July 1916.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Appellants.

Sir Bepin Krishna Bose and Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on a mortgage. The preliminary decree of the first Court was passed on 23rd February 1912 and the date fixed for re-payment was 23rd August 1912. The mortgagor appealed to this Court and the Judicial Commissioner dismissed his appeal on 17th June 1913 in First Appeal No. 35 of 1912 without fixing a fresh date for payment. Meanwhile on 8th February 1913 the decree-holders purchased a portion of the mortgaged property. This Court in First Appeal No. 75 of 1914, disposed of on 28th January 1915, decided that the mortgaged property purchased by the decree-holders was as subject to the mortgage as the rest of the property, and that there must be an apportionment of the mortgage money due by the mortgagor in proportion to the value of the property still held by him, and that such money could be recovered by the sale of the property still with the mortgagor. On 6th October 1915 the decree holders made an application for the preliminary decree to be made final and the whole history of the case was set out in the application. The Additional District Judge has now made a final decree in which the sum of Rs. 4,386 6 9 is given as the sum to be recovered by sale of the property still with the mortgagor. The mortgagor appeals to this Court. In the first Court the mortgagor pleaded that the application to make the decree final was barred by time, but this plea was rejected in an order dated 23rd December 1915. The 1st ground of appeal is that the lower Court is wrong in holding the application to be in time. The learned Advocate for the respondent does not support the grounds on which the lower Court held the application to be in time, but he urges that the decree which had to be made final was not the original preliminary decree of the lower Court dated 23rd February 1912, but the appellate decree of this Court dated 17th June 1913. He admits that Article 181 of the Limitation Schedule is applicable and says that the time began to run from the date of this Court's decree. The right to apply to make the decree final could not, it is argued, accrue until this Court affirmed by its decree the preliminary decree of the first Court. There is an unanimous course of decisions to the effect that where a decree of a lower Court is affirmed by the Appellate Court, the lower Court's decree is dead and gone by, being merged in the decree of the superior Court, which takes its place to all intents and purposes, and both the decrees cannot exist simultaneously. It is sufficient to mention the cases reported as Chandra Kanta v. Lakshman Chandra (1) and Muhammad Sulaiman Khan v. Muhammad Yar Khan (2). The principle was recognised by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Narain v. Tejbal Bikram Bahadur (3) with reference to a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit. None of the cases cited by the learned Advocate for the respondents is one of making final a preliminary decree. But I see no reason differentiating a preliminary decree in a mortgage suit from other decrees to which the principle has been applied. The learned Pleader for the appellant cites a case in his favour which is exactly to the point, Madho Ram v. Nihal Singh (4), in which it was held that the right to make an application for making a preliminary decree final accrues on the day when the time limited by the preliminary decree expires, even when there has been a decree on appeal, unless such time has been extended by the Court of appeal. With due respect I am unable to hold that the law has been correctly laid down in the above case. The learned Judges give no reason for their decision except a reference to another case reported as Gaya Din v. Jhuman Lal (5), which they say is analogous. The case they rely on however, appears to me to have no bearing whatever on an application of the present nature. The learned Judges do not refer to the question of the decree of the first Court being merged in the decree of the Appellate Court. It may be the case that there is nothing to prevent the holder of a preliminary decree for sale applying to have the decree made final pending the disposal of an appeal, and if the appeal is dismissed, it may be that the proceedings on his application might rightly be continued. But they would be so continued as having reference to the decree of the Appellate Court. The application is no doubt barred by time considered as an application based on the preliminary decree of the first Court, but when it was made, the decree of this Court had superseded the original decree. At the date of the application the only decree which could be made final was the decree of this Court, and time cannot be said to have begun to run before that decree was passed. I, therefore, hold that the application to make the decree final was not barred by time.

I now come to the merits of the case. The 2nd ground of the appeal is to the effect that the burden of proof that the value of the property held by the mortgagor bore a higher proportion to the value of the property held by the decree-holders than was admitted by the mortgagor, lay on the decree-holders. This is undoubtedly the case; but the burden was so laid, and the case has been decided on the evidence brought by both sides and not on any consideration of burden of proof. There is no force in this ground of appeal. The 3rd ground of appeal urges that while the decree-holders stated that the value of the property held by the mortgagor was Rs. 3,500, the Court has held that the property so held is worth Rs. 9,005: thus a value has been found for the mortgagor's property in excess of that alleged by the decree-holders. It is not urged that the decree-holders are estopped, but it is argued that the evidence proving the property to be worth more than that pleaded by the decree-holders is worthless and should be disregarded. This argument, however, is of no value in the circumstances of the case. The decree-holders pleaded that the total value of all the property was Rs. 4,200, held by the decree holders and the judgment-debtor respectively in the proportion of 1 to 5. The judgment-debtor pleaded that the total value of the whole property was Rs. 9,005, held respectively in the proportions of 7 to 2. The Court has held that the total value of the property is Rs. 14,005, of which property worth Rs. 5,000 is held by the decree-holders and property worth Rs. 9,005 is held by the judgment debtor, the proportionate values being thus 5 and 9. The estimate of the total value of the property made by both parties was very wide of the mark. There is no dispute in respect of what property is held by the parties. The sole dispute is as to the relative values of the portions held by each. The Court had to find what was the total value of the property, and having found that, was bound to apportion the value between the two sides irrespective of what the parties pleaded. He could not possibly on any pleadings of the parties hold that the value of the two portions was less than the total value. Moreover, the pleas of the parties refer rather to the proportion than to the actual values of the properties. There is, therefore, no force in this ground of appeal. The grounds Nos 4 to 7 call in question the valuation made by the lower Court. It is first urged that the property with the decree-holders should have been valued at Rs. 7,000 instead of Rs. 5,000. The only evidence on the subject is that of the appellant's first two witnesses. This evidence is perfectly worthless and the witnesses give no ground for their opinions. The Judge has relied on admissions of the witnesses for the decree-holders to the effect that land is worth about Rs. 50 an acre, and has adopted that rate approximately; there are no grounds whatever for taking a different view. As regards the property with the appellants, the finding of the lower Court is challenged only in respect of the value of 4 annas share of Ramnagar. The lower Court, relying on the evidence of appellant's witnesses Nos. 11 and 10, has found the value to be Rs. 6,500. The witness No. 11 sold a 10-anna $\frac{1}{2}$ pie share of the village together with 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of home farm land for Rs. 2,000. He alleges that Rs. 500 was the value of the fields and Rs. 1,500 was the value of the share. The Judge has accepted this statement without any question. It appears to me, however, that in the absence of any circumstances to corroborate the witness, the value of the fields should be taken to be the Rs. 50 an acre adopted by the Judge for other fields in the village, and the value of the Malguzari share should be calculated accordingly, and would be Rs. 875 out of Rs. 1,500. On the same basis of calculation the defendant's 4 annas share would be worth Rs. 4,000. If we treat the evidence of the 10th witness in the same way, including his statement that the fields were worth Rs. 1,000, the value of the defendant's share would be Rs. 6,000. It seems fair to take an average between the two, and I, therefore, adopt Rs. 5,000 as the value of the Malguzari share instead of Rs. 6,500 the value adopted by the Judge. The total value of the defendant's share is, therefore, Rs. 1,500, less than that adopted by the Judge. The result is that the total value of the decree holders' share is Rs. 5,000 and that of the defendant's share is Rs. 7,505, in the proportion of 2 and 3.

The 8th ground of appeal has no meaning, since the figure Rs. 5,377 is an imaginary figure given by the plaintiff and is not referred to by the Judge at all in his calculations. The 9th ground of appeal is explained as meaning that the lower Court has wrongly charged compound interest since the date of the suit. This error will be avoided in framing the decree of this Court.

The result is as follows. The figure Rs. 4,386.6.6 in the decree of the lower Court should have been Rs. 3,969; the appellant has, therefore, succeeded to the extent of Rs. 417 and the costs in this Court will be calculated accordingly. The amount, calculated upto the present day, due by the appellant is Rs. 4,161 and this figure will be entered in the decree as the amount due this day from the defendant. Costs, as already observed, will be in proportion in this Court, the appellant having succeeded in respect of Rs. 417 and failed as regards the rest of the amount in respect of which he filed his appeal. Costs in the lower Court will be borne by the parties incurring them, as already directed by the lower Court. The amount due by the appellant as costs will be added to the above amount and future interest on the whole amount will be awarded at 8 annas per cent. per mensem until realisation.

Order accordingly.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 5th March 1918.

Messrs. N. N. Sinha and N. P. Singh, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Babu Ishri Frasad, for Appellant No. 1.

Mr. A. P. Sen, the Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Babu Mohun Lal, R. B., Mir Amjad Ali, K. B., and Mr. H. K. Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Khan Sah, the ancestor of the parties in this case, had three sons Umrao Singh, Bachan Singh and Ujagar Singh. Umrao Singh had two sons both of whom died childless. Bachan Singh had three sons Lalta Bakhsh, Jiwan Singh, and Bhuja Singh, and Ujagar Singh had one son Ganga Bakhsh Singh. Lalta Bakhsh had two sons Nirmal Singh defendant No. 1 and Anand Bakhsh who was defendant No. 5. Ganga Bakhsh, the son of Ujagar Singh, had no children but he adopted Anand Bakhsh, who is the father of the three plaintiffs in the present suit. The defendants in the suit are Nirmal Singh and his sons and other descendants of Bachan Singh.

The suit was brought for a declaration that the plaintiffs were owners of half of certain property mentioned in list A attached to their plaint. The plaintiffs alleged that all the property entered in that list was the joint ancestral property of the parties and that, therefore, they with their father Anand Bakhsh were entitled to a half share in it. They alleged that they with the other members of the family were in possession of their share in the property and on this ground a suit for a declaration only was brought. The cause of action for the suit is given in paragraphs 4, 5 and 6 of the plaint. In these paragraphs it is alleged that Hardeo Bakhsh Singh, a grandson of Bhuja Singh, brought a suit on the 30th of March 1914 against the other members of the family for partition of the family property, that the plaintiffs were no parties to that suit and that certain properties which are now alleged to be joint family properties were not included in that suit.

It was further stated that the parties to that suit entered into a compromise under which it was held that Anand Bakhsh was entitled to one-half of the property while Nirmal Singh defendant No. 1 in the present suit was entitled to a one-sixth share only; but owing to influence exercised on Anand Bakhsh by Nirmal Singh defendant No. 1, it was also entered in the compromise that Anand Bakhsh and Nirmal Singh should pool their shares and that the total should be divided equally between them, that is, that instead of getting one-half and one sixth respectively they should each get one-third as their share. This compromise was effected on the 4th of October 1914, and the plaintiffs give that date as the date of the accrual of the cause of action for the present suit. They allege that Anand Bakhsh had no power to enter into such an agreement and that the agreement has no effect as against them not only because they were not parties to the suit but because the agreement, even if obtained without undue influence, was unregistered and without consideration.

The suit was defended on various grounds. The defendant No. 1 Nirmal Singh alleged that the property in suit was included in the Raigain Taluqa and that according to a custom obtaining in the family it was an impartible estate and always held by a single owner, and that he (Nirmal Singh) was the present holder, that none of the other members of the family was entitled to a share in it but merely to maintenance; nor was any one entitled to claim partition of the estate. It was further pleaded that the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1 were not members of a joint family, that the property in suit was not joint or ancestral, that the plaintiffs were not in possession of any share either in the immoveable or moveable property with regard to which a declaration was claimed and that, therefore, the suit was barred under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It was also pleaded that Anand Bakhsh was not the adopted son of Ganga Bakhsh, but the lower Court found that he had been adopted by Ganga Bakhsh and the learned Advocate for the defendants-respondents has not seriously attacked that finding. It was further alleged that Nirmal Singh defendant No. 1 owing to physical infirmities was under the influence of Anand Bakhsh who had been entrusted with the management of his affairs and that Anand Bakhsh, taking advantage of his position, entered into the compromise in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit for a division of the Raigain estate and that the compromise was agreed to by Nirmal Singh, defendant No. 1, while suffering from fever and acting under the influence of Anand Bakhsh without understanding its terms. It was, however, further pleaded that as the compromise had been entered into by Anand Bakhsh, the plaintiffs were bound by it and in any case it could not be set aside in part only.

The learned Subordinate Judge fixed an issue No. 7:—

"Whether the plaintiffs are in possession of their share of the property in suit jointly with other co-sharers and is, therefore, the suit as laid maintainable?"

Two other issues were framed with regard to the form of the suit, namely issues Nos. 18 and 19:—

"Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaratory decree sued for and can their share be determined in this suit as brought?"

"Should not the Court exercise its discretion in granting a declaratory decree under the circumstances of the case?"

The learned Subordinate Judge did not come to a separate finding on issue No. 7 but on issues Nos. 18 and 19 he has found, after somewhat uncertain arguments, that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain a suit for a declaratory decree and, had the compromise in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit not been binding on the plaintiffs, the Court should have granted such a decree.

It is clear from a perusal of the plaint that the only cause of action mentioned by the plaintiffs is the agreement arrived at in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit. In the present suit admittedly a number of properties which were not included in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit have been entered in list A attached to the plaint. So far as such properties are concerned, the plaint discloses no cause of action and the learned Pleader for the appellants has to admit that he cannot support the claim for a declaration with regard to any property which was not included in the suit brought by Hardeo Bakhsh. It is also clear that so far as the moveable property included in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit is concerned, the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain their suit for a declaration. Under the compromise in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit the different parties were to remain in possession of the moveable property mentioned in that suit which they respectively held and no party was to have any claim against any other party with regard to any moveable property in his hands. It is clear, therefore, that from the date of the decision of that suit, that is the 16th of February 1915, the different parties have been in separate possession of the moveable property which was then in their hands, and there is no evidence whatsoever that the appellants at the time of the institution of the present suit or indeed at any time were in possession of any portion of this moveable property. The suit, therefore, for a mere declaration with regard to such moveable property is barred under the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

In the view which we take of the case it is unnecessary to consider in any great detail the accuracy of the findings at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived on most of the issues which he framed. We may, however, remark that we are not disposed to attach as much value as the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have attached to the entries in the various wajib-ul-arzes, khewats and assessment statements as proof of the existence of the alleged custom of gaddinashini; nor do we think that the admission by Anand Bakhsh, the father of the plaintiffs, in the written statement which he filed jointly with Nirmal Singh in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit can be taken as any evidence against the plaintiffs of the existence of the alleged custom. The plaintiffs are attacking the whole conduct of their father Anand Bakhsh in the proceedings in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit and clearly any admission made by Anand Bakhsh in those proceedings which would be against their interests could not be used as evidence against them. Taking the most favourable view of the case for the plaintiffs-appellants, namely, that there was no custom of gaddinashini in the family, that Anand Bakhsh was the adopted son of Ganga Bakhsh and that the property was ancestral joint family property in which Anand Bakhsh and the appellants would have been entitled to a half share on partition, we are of opinion that in all the circumstances of the case the appellants are bound by the compromise which was entered into between Anand Bakhsh and the other parties to Hardeo Bakhsh's suit. That compromise was entered into between members of the family with regard to property alleged to be joint family property and was, in our opinion, in the nature of a family settlement. It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that for the purposes of the suit, which was a suit for partition of the family property, all that was necessary was to declare that separate share to which each of the parties to the suit was entitled, as was done in the first portion of the decree and that the latter portion of the decree, in which it is stated that Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh agreed to join their shares and divide them equally between themselves, is an agreement altogether outside the scope of the suit. With this view we cannot agree. The decree must be read as a whole. The suit being one for partition, it was necessary to determine and make a declaration of the shares of every one of the parties interested in the property (see rule 18 of Order XX of the Code of Civil Procedure). It would not have been sufficient for the purposes of the suit to have declared Hardeo Bakhsh entitled to a one twelfth share of the property. The shares of all the other persons interested in the property had also to be determined, and the declaration as to the extent of those shares is as binding between the co-defendants themselves as between the defendants and the plaintiffs. Parsotam Rao Tantia v. Rudha Bai (1). These shares were settled by compromise and the decree was passed in terms of the compromise. Under that compromise the shares to which, according to the genealogical tree, each one would prima facie have been entitled were set out, and it was agreed that while the shares of the other parties to the suit should be in accordance with the shajra, the shares of Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh on partition should be each one third though according to the shajra, Nirmal Singh would have received only one sixth and Anand Bakhsh would have received one-half. It is clear from the evidence of the arbitrator that Nirmal Singh would not have consented to the compromise unless he had been given an equal share with Anand Bakhsh. The joint written statement filed by Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh shows that the whole property was held by Lalta Bakhsh by right of gaddinashini and later on was divided half and half by a mutual pact between Lalta Bakhsh and Anand Bakhsh; and Nirmal Singh was certainly not prepared to allow Hardeo Bakhsh and the other members of the family to get their shares out of the half claimed by him and leave Anand Bakhsh in undisputed possession and ownership of the other half. It may also be noted that Hardeo Bakhsh had included a large amount of moveable property in his suit for partition and that not only Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh but all the parties to the compromise agreed that the moveable property should not be divided in accordance with the shajra, but that each party should continue in possession of whatever moveable property he held and that no party should have any claim against any other party with regard to the moveable property. This condition with regard to the moveable property finds place both in the compromise and the decree after the condition with regard to the equal division of two-thirds of the immovable property between Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh and is an essential condition of the compromise, without which Nirmal Singh at least would never have been willing to agree to the compromise as the greater portion of the moveable property was in his hands.

These considerations also dispose of the plea taken by the appellants that the compromise having gone beyond the scope of the suit is bad for want of registration. The compromise, in our opinion, has in no way gone beyond the scope of the suit. The award of the arbitrator was given in accordance with the compromise and the award was made a decree of Court, and under clause (vi) of sub-section 2 of section 17 of the Registration Act, registration was not necessary. Franal Anni v. Lakshmi Anni (2) and Oharu Chandra Mitra v. Sambhu Nath Pandey (3).

Looking as we do upon this compromise which was embodied in the decree as in the nature of a family settlement, we are of opinion that although the plaintiffs-appellants were no parties to the suit, yet they are bound by the compromise entered into by their father Anand Bakhsh. It is clear that although Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh filed a joint written statement in the suit, yet the decision of the suit and the determination of the shares of every one of the parties interested in the property involved a conflict of claims between Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh as well as between them and the plaintiff Hardeo Bakhsh. We have already referred to the evidence of the arbitrator, which shows that there was a discussion as to the shares which should be allotted to Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh, and we have stated that Nirmal Singh would never have agreed to the compromise unless he had been allowed a share equal to that given to Anand Bakhsh and also been allowed to retain the moveable property in his hands. In their plaint the plaintiffs alleged that Anand Bakhsh had been induced by undue influence to accept the compromise, but this plea was abandoned by the learned Pleader for the appellants in arguing the appeal. It has, however, been urged that presuming that the property was ancestral in which the plaintiffs had an interest, their father Anand Bakhsh was not justified in entering into a compromise so obviously opposed to their interest. It may be observed that this is not a case of a sale or a mortgage of ancestral property made by a Hindu father, where his interest may be opposed to the interest of his sons. In the present case the interests of Anand Bakhsh and the plaintiffs were identical and there is no reason to suppose that Anand Bakhsh would deliberately enter into a compromise with the knowledge that it was detrimental to his own interest. If Anand Bakhsh had good reason to suppose that his title to a half share of the property was doubtful (and we shall show that he had ample reasons for doing so),* we are of opinion that in the absence of fraud or undue influence or other like reason, none of which has been shown in the present case, the compromise entered into by him is binding upon his sons, the plaintiffs-appellants. Even though he might have been mistaken as to his legal position and acting under that mistake given up the property to which he was entitled, that would be no ground for holding that the compromise was not binding on his sons. In Kerr on Fraud at page 335 the following proposition of law has been stated and this passage has been quoted with approval in the case of Ram Nirunjun Singh v. Prayag Singh (4) —

"Mistake in law is not a ground for setting aside a compromise, if the parties to the transaction were in difficulty and doubt and wished to put an end to disputes and to terminate or avoid litigation. If one or more parties having, or supposing they have, claims upon a given subject-matter, or claims against each other, agree to compromise these claims and the knowledge, or means of knowledge, of each of them with respect to the mode in which, and the circumstances under which, his claim arises, stand upon an equal footing, and there is an absence of fraud or misrepresentation, the transaction is binding, although the conclusion at which the parties may have arrived is not that which a Court of justice would have arrived at had its decision been sought. The real consideration which each party receives under a compromise being, not the sacrifice of the right but the settlement of the dispute, and the abandonment of the claim, it is no objection to the validity of the transaction that the right was really in one of the parties only and that the others had no right whatever. If, for instance, two parties claim adversely to each other the inheritance of a deceased person, and, in order to avoid litigation agree to divide the inheritance, it is no ground for setting aside the agreement that only one was heir, and that the other gave up the right which he really possessed. The fact that the one may have had no claim is immaterial, if he was honestly mistaken as to his claim. It is enough if, at the time of the compromise, he may have believed he had a claim and that the parties have, by the transaction, avoided the necessity of going to law. To render valid the compromise of a litigation, it is not even necessary that the question in dispute should really be doubtful, if the parties bona fide consider it to be so. It is enough to render a compromise valid, that there is a question to be decided between them. A compromise of doubtful rights will not be set aside on any other ground than fraud.

"The principles which apply to the case of ordinary compromise between strangers, do not equally apply to the case of compromises in the nature of family arrangements. Family arrangements are governed by special equity peculiar to themselves, and will be enforced if honestly made, although they have not been meant as a compromise, but have proceeded from an error of all parties, originating in mistake or ignorance of fact as to what their rights actually are, or of the points on which their rights actually depend."

In the case of Stapilton v. Stapilton (5) it was held that the compromise of a doubtful right is a sufficient foundation of an agreement. In the case of Pitam Singh v. Ujagar Singh (6), which is in many respects very similar to the case before us, it was held that a compromise entered into by a father with regard to ancestral property for the purpose of avoiding litigation was in the absence of fraud or collusion binding on his sons.

Even if there were no actual dispute at the time of Hardeo Bakhsh's suit between Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh with regard to their respective interests in the property, we are of opinion that if Anand Bakhsh had good reason for believing that such a dispute might arise and that his title to a half share in the estate was not free from doubt, he was justified in entering into the compromise and the plaintiffs-appellants are bound by its terms. We have already stated that the compromise in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit is in the nature of a family settlement. In order to validate a family settlement it is not necessary that there should be an existing dispute. It is sufficient that there should be the possibility of a future dispute which might result in litigation, and the avoidance of possible litigation and the consequent preservation of the family property is sufficient consideration for a family settlement. In the present case Anand Bakhsh had the very strongest reasons for holding that his title to a half or indeed to any share in the bulk of the family property was open to doubt. It was at least a matter of uncertainty whether the custom of gaddinashini, by which the family property devolved upon a single owner who had complete power of transfer, existed in the family. It is unnecessary for the purposes of this judgment to state in any great detail the various facts which might have led Anand Bakhsh to believe that such a custom existed. It is a fact admitted by both parties that the property was originally held by Khan Sah, the great-grandfather of Nirmal Singh and Anand Bakhsh, that afterwards it was held by Bachan Singh alone and then by Ujagar Singh alone, who were respectively the second and third sons of Khan Sah. The first summary settlement was made with Lalta Bakhsh alone and it would follow, on the assumption that Anand Bakhsh had been adopted by Ganga Bakhsh, that Nirmal Singh was the most likely person to succeed to the whole property if the custom of gaddinashini were established. Anand Bakhsh must have been aware that the wajib-ul arzes of all the main villages showed that the property was in the name of Lalta Bakhsh alone and recorded a custom of gaddinashini, and that he could produce no evidence to show that the existence of such a custom had been denied by any member of the family at the time of settlement. Anand Bakhsh had also before him the fact that at the first regular settlement Lalta Bakhsh was recorded as the sole owner of most of the villages of the estate and that both in Rai Hazari Lal's settlement of 1883-84 and the last settlement of 1897 Nirmal Singh was recorded as the sole owner in most of the villages. He had also before him the fact that in Rai Hazari Lal's settlement Ganga Bakhsh, his adoptive father was shown in most of the settlement khewats not as having a share but merely as guardian and manager on behalf of the owner Nirmal Singh. Of the

RAMA RAO v. KOTTIPI THIMMA REDDI.

31 villages included in Hardeo Bakhsh's suit Ganga Bakhsh was recorded as having a share in only two, while all the other villages were entered either in the name of Lalta Bakhsh alone or in the name of Lalta Bakhsh and the other descendants of Bachan Singh. Furthermore Anand Bakhsh had before him the facts that, after the Mutiny, the settlement was made with Lalta Bakhsh who was the son of Bachan Singh and not with Ganga Bakhsh the son of Ujagar Singh, the last holder, and that Lalta Bakhsh asserted his title as the sole owner of most of the property; and in a statement made as far back as 1883, which is printed at page 171 of respondents' book, Ganga Bakhsh had admitted that he was acting as sarbarahkar on behalf of Nirmal Singh. There is also the fact that on the death of Lalta Bakhsh Ganga Bakhsh did not assert his title to any share in the estate, but allowed mutation to be effected in the name of Nirmal Singh with himself as guardian and sarbarahkar. All these facts must have led Anand Bakhsh to entertain a reasonable doubt whether, even assuming that he could prove that he had been validly adopted by Ganga Bakhsh, he could successfully contest Nirmal Singh's claim to the bulk of the estate and indeed it will be noted that the learned Subordinate Judge, after considering all the evidence before him, has in fact come to the conclusion that the custom of gadrinashini has been established. Furthermore Anand Bakhsh might well have doubted whether he could have proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he had been validly adopted by Ganga Bakhsh. Hardeo Bakhsh had in his suit denied that any such adoption had taken place and an issue had been framed on the question of adoption. No deed of adoption was produced in that suit, nor has any such deed been produced in the present suit. Anand Bakhsh has in many documents declared himself to be the son not of Ganga Bakhsh but of Lalta Bakhsh, and one of those documents was executed only a few days before the institution of Hardeo Bakhsh's suit. The facts which we have above stated were, in our opinion, ample to justify Anand Bakhsh in believing that his title to a half share in the estate was open to doubt. It follows that even assuming that the property was joint ancestral property, Anand Bakhsh was justified in entering into the compromise and the plaintiffs appellants are bound by its terms.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 11—Grant of land revenue, whether pension.

A grant of land revenue is not a pension for the purposes of section 11 of the Pensions Act, and is liable to attachment in execution of a decree. [p. 332, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Bellary, in Interlocutory Application No. 474 of 1917, in Original Suit No. 24 of 1917.

FACTS.—There was an application praying that, for the reasons mentioned in the affidavit, the amount with the Receiver in Original Suit No. 3 of 1915 to the credit of the defendant may be attached before judgment and paid to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded that the order could not be made as his Jaghir was one to which section 4 of the Pensions Act applied. The lower Court passed the following order:—

"The defendant's Jaghir has been held in Rama v. Subba (1) to be one to which section 4 of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871, applies; but that section deals not only with pensions but also with grants of money or land revenue, and it appears that it was held to apply to this Jaghir because of that Jaghir being by way of a grant of land revenue. It is now a case of applying section 11, in the scope of which grants of land revenue are not includ-

(1) 12 M. 98.

JUDGMENT.—On the 21st of March 1916 the plaintiffs executed a sale-deed of certain property for Rs. 21,000 in favour of Sant Bakhsh Singh, defendant No. 1, but the whole of the consideration was left in the hands of Sant Bakhsh Singh for payment of the plaintiffs' creditors. It was provided that the creditors should be paid in the presence of the plaintiffs, that if any sum remained over after payment of the creditors it should be handed over to the plaintiffs, while if Sant Bakhsh Singh had to pay more than Rs. 21,000 the plaintiffs would make the difference good. Sant Bakhsh Singh paid Rs. 7,875 to certain creditors of the plaintiffs and mortgaged the property purchased from the plaintiffs with other property to Jagannath defendant No. 2 for the sum of Rs. 13,500 in payment of certain mortgages held by Jagannath against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs brought this suit, alleging that Sant Bakhsh had overpaid Jagannath on the mortgages, that the sum properly payable was Rs. 10,534 3-10 and that, therefore, they were entitled to the sum of Rs. 2,590 12-2, the balance left out of the Rs. 21,000, with interest thereon. The plaintiffs claimed this sum from defendant No. 1 alone and they admitted that they had no claim against the defendant No. 2; and on this admission the name of the defendant No. 2 was struck off the record by an order of the 5th of March 1917. Later on, however when the case again came before another Subordinate Judge, defendant No. 2 was again made a party by an order of 3rd

JAGANNATH v. HANUMAN SINGH.

September 1917. He filed a written statement and examined witnesses. The plaintiffs' suit was dismissed, but in appeal the plaintiffs were given a decree by the Court of the District Judge for a sum of Rs. 1,637.2.6 and proportionate costs were awarded against both the defendants. Defendant No. 2 applied under section 162 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the learned District Judge to have the decree amended, on the ground that the decree should have been against Sant Bakhsh alone as there was no contest between the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 2 and no relief was claimed against him and no costs should have been assessed against him. This application was rejected by the learned District Judge.

Defendant No. 2, Jagannath, has now come to this Court in appeal against the decree of the District Judge and in revision against the order of the District Judge rejecting the application for amendment. He claims that the decree should be against Sant Bakhsh Singh defendant No. 1 alone and that no decree should have been passed against him for costs. An objection has also been filed by the plaintiffs under Order XLI, rule 22, of the Code of Civil Procedure, in which they claim interest on the sum decreed in their favour from the date of the institution of the suit till payment.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiffs admits that he did not ask for any relief against Jagannath, defendant No. 2, and that the decree for Rs. 1,637.12.6 should be against Sant Bakhsh defendant No. 1 alone. With regard to the costs, however, he urges that although originally Jagannath was made a defendant, yet on the 5th of March 1915 the plaintiffs stated that they claimed no relief against him and his name was struck off the record, and the plaintiffs made no subsequent application to have his name brought on the record. He also points out that the defendant No. 2 vigorously contested the plaintiffs' claim and examined witnesses in the lower Court. In all the circumstances of the case I think that the defendant No. 2 should pay his own costs throughout and that proportionate costs in both Courts should be allowed as between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 alone.

With regard to the objection filed by the plaintiffs a preliminary point has been taken that as the objection affects Sant Bakhsh Singh, defendant No. 1, alone and he is not an appellant but a co-respondent, no objection can be filed. Reliance is placed on certain rulings of the Calcutta High Court of a date prior to the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908). Section 561 of the old Code of Civil Procedure has been replaced by rule 22 of Order XLI, and it is to be noted that the wording of this rule differs in certain respects from the wording of section 561 of the old Code and the phrase "party who may be affected by such objection" has been substituted for the word "appellant". This alteration clearly indicates that the Legislature wished to set at rest the disputed question, whether one respondent in an appeal could claim relief against a co-respondent by way of a memorandum of cross-objections. I agree with the view taken by the Madras High Court in the Full Bench decision, Munisami Mudaly v. Abbu Reddy (1), and hold that objection can be taken.

It is clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to reasonable interest on the sum which the defendant No. 1 ought to have returned to them from the date on which the money should have been returned. The learned Advocate for the plaintiffs asks for interest only from the date of the institution of the present suit, that is, from the 1st of February 1917, and the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to interest at 6 per cent. from that date. The decree of the lower Court will, therefore, be amended as follows:—

The plaintiffs will be given a decree against the defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,637.12.6 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 1st of February 1917 until realization. The plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 will receive from and pay to each other costs in all Courts in proportion to their success and failure. The defendant No. 2 will pay his own costs in all Courts.

Appeal, Revision and Cross-objection allowed.

RESPONDENTS.Berar Land Revenue Code, s. 96—Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption as to correctness, whether applies to trees standing on land—Suit for setting aside entry, presumption, whether can be relied upon in.

Under section 96 (i) of the Berar Land Revenue Code an entry in the Record of Rights must be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved or a new entry is lawfully substituted therefor, and this presumption arises even in a suit brought to have the entry set aside, and extends to trees standing on land [p. 334, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the 3rd Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Appeal No. 1 of 1916, decided on 7th April 1916, arising out of Civil Suit No. 126 of 1915 in the Court of the Munsif, Basim, dated the 10th November 1915.

Mr. V. R. Pandit, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sued for a declaration that the mango trees in Survey No. 100 belong exclusively to her, though the defendants have fraudulently got their names recorded in the Record of Rights as joint owners of the mango trees. The plaintiff's case was that the field as well as the trees were self-acquired property of her father. The defendants pleaded that they and the plaintiff's father were once members of a joint Hindu family. This much is not denied by the plaintiff. The defendants further said that at a partition made about 30 years ago the field was allotted to the share of the plaintiff's father, whilst the mango trees were kept joint. Both the Courts below are agreed in holding that the oral evidence on the record is unreliable. The first Court decreed the plaintiff's claim on the ground that as the plaintiff was admittedly the owner of the field, in the absence of proof to the contrary, she should be presumed to be the owner of the mango trees. This is a view of the law which is perfectly unexceptionable. The Munsif, however, ignored the entry made in favour of the defendants in the Record of Rights, on the ground that the suit itself has been brought to contest that entry and that there is nothing to support the entry.

The lower Appellate Court has taken a contrary view and has given effect to the entry made in the Record of Rights. Now section 96 (i) of the Berar Land Revenue Code lays down that an entry in the Record of Rights shall be presumed to be true until the contrary is proved or a new entry is lawfully substituted therefor. The view taken by the first Court, that no presumption arises under section 96 (i) in the present case merely because the suit is brought to have the entry set aside, has not been supported before me, nor is there anything in the law to justify such a view. It is, however, argued that the presumption only arises in respect of an entry made regarding land, but not regarding the mango trees on the land. In support of this argument reliance is placed upon the wording of section 96A, which authorises the Chief Commissioner to direct the preparation and maintenance of the Record of Rights in land; but the word 'land' has been defined in section 4, sub-section 3, to include amongst other things trees. Moreover, under section 96B, clause 1, sub-section (d), the Record of Rights shall include such particulars in addition to those specified in the section itself as the Chief Commissioner may prescribe by rules made in this behalf. The record has been directed by the Chief Commissioner to be in certain forms prescribed. In column 9 the name of the occupant or holder of the land is to be entered. In column 10 the nature and origin of title is to be noted. In column 11 the officer in charge of the Record of Rights is to note other rights or encumbrances with the name of the right holder or encumbrancer. It is clear other rights would include the right to trees on the land. The entry, therefore, is one which it was competent for the officer in charge of the Record of Rights to make. Therefore, the presumption under section 96 (i) applies. The lower Appellate Court was, therefore, justified by law in holding that the presumption arising from the entry, which records the land as exclusively belonging to the plaintiff and the mango trees thereon as jointly belonging to the plaintiff and the defendants, has not been rebutted. If as the lower Courts held, neither the plaintiff nor the defendants have been able to prove anything by the oral evidence, then the conclusion arrived at by the lower Appellate Court is correct.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Under section 11, Civil Procedure Code, the competency of the Court to try the subsequent suit has to be judged with reference to the time when the first suit was brought, that is, as if the second suit had been instituted at the time when the first suit was filed. Thus, where the first suit was within the jurisdiction of a Munsif and the subsequent suit by reason of an increase in the value of the property was beyond his jurisdiction and within the jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge, such subsequent suit would nevertheless be barred, inasmuch as if the subsequent suit had been brought at the time when the first suit was brought, the Munsif would have been competent to try it. JUDGMENT.—In 1905 the plaintiff-appellant, Gopal Tiwari, and another person filed a suit against Indardat and Ramnath for a declaration of his title to a one-third share in certain property. That suit was valued at Rs. 450 and was filed in the Court of the Munsif of Akbarpur. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance and the Court of Appeal, but on second appeal it was held by this Court that the evidence of the two witnesses who were called on behalf of the plaintiffs was wholly insufficient to prove their title to the property in face of the admitted fact that the names of the defendants and their father had been recorded in the khewat since 1882. It accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

The present suit has been brought by Gopal Tiwari against Ram Harakh, the son of Indardat, and two other persons, Achaibar Tiwari and Kashi Ram Tiwari, who are the grandsons of Ramnath, for possession by partition of a one-third share in the same property. The suit has now been valued at Rs. 1,100, and the explanation offered is that the market-value of the property which was in dispute in the previous suit has risen since then. The Courts below dismissed the claim, holding that the decision of this Court in the previous suit operated as res judicata and barred a determination of the same matter in the present suit.

Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure prohibits a Court from trying any suit or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title, in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised, and has been heard and finally decided by such Court. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant is that if the market value of the property in dispute mounts up in course of time to a limit exceeding the jurisdiction of the Court which decided the previous suit, the decision in the previous suit becomes nugatory and the entire matter can be re-opened in a Court which has jurisdiction to decide it at the time when the second suit is instituted. The logical result of this contention, if accepted, would be that no decision of any suit or issue would be binding, if the amount due to the plaintiff on the original cause of action, which was the basis of the former suit, or the value of the property then in dispute, rises to such an extent in the course of time as to exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court which originally decided it. Such a proposition cannot, however, be entertained, because a rise in value is a recurring incident of most properties due either to fortuitous circumstances or to the lapse of time. It knocks at the bottom of all finality. The competency of the Court to try the subsequent suit has to be judged with reference to the time when the first suit was brought, that is, as if the second suit had been instituted at the time when the first suit was filed.

In Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershad (1) it was held that where the first suit was within the jurisdiction of the Munsif and the subsequent suit by reason of an increase in the value of the property was beyond his jurisdiction, such subsequent suit would nevertheless be barred, inasmuch as if the subsequent suit had been brought at the time when the first suit was brought, the Munsif would have been competent to try it. In Rughunath Paniah v. Issur Ohunder Chowdhry (2) a similar interpretation was placed on the words of section 13 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. In Kunji Amma v. Raman Menon (3) the circumstances were somewhat peculiar. A suit was brought for a declaration of the title of the plaintiffs' tarwad to certain land in the District Court against the Maharaja of Cochin and others, including the trustees of a temple. It appears that the same land had been the subject of a suit instituted in a Subordinate Court earlier, to which the representatives of both the plaintiffs' tarwad and the temple were parties, and that the land was then found to be the property of the temple and a decree was passed accordingly. The contention in that case was that the subsequent claim was not barred by reason of the decree in the previous suit, because under section 443 of Act X of 1877, which came into force during the pendency of that suit, no sovereign prince could be sued in any Court subordinate to the District Court. It was nevertheless held that the Court which passed the decree in the previous suit was competent to try the subsequent suit, because the competency must be referred back to the time when the previous suit was heard and determined.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant relies on the decisions in Misir Baghobardial v. Sheo Baksh Singh (4) and Ran Bahadur Singh v. Lucho Koer (5). But in none of those cases the property in dispute in the previous and subsequent suits was the same. The decision in Jit Singh v. Ram Baksh Singh (6) also does not apply, because in that case the suits related to different properties and the Court in which the earlier suit was instituted was not competent to try the suit in which the later one was filed.

It is also urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that Indardat was a confessing defendant in the previous suit and that no question of res judicata ought to stand in the way of a determination of the claim of the plaintiff as against him. But the share which the plaintiff claims is not in the possession of Indardat or his son. It is in the possession of Ramnath and his successors.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COSSIPORE AND CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY—DEFENDANT

versus

THE CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA

—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Bengal Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1884), s. 101, proviso 3—"Machinery", meaning of—Overhead tank for storage of water, whether machinery.

Held, by a majority (Fletcher, J., dissenting), that an overhead steel tank constructed by a Municipal Corporation for the storage of water during the hours when the demand is comparatively small, and to supplement the supply when the demand is large, is not "machinery" for the purposes of section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and is, therefore, not exempt from assessment as "machinery." [p. 352, col. 1.]

Beachcroft, J.—It cannot be properly said that everything which is connected in a system comes within the description of machinery merely because mechanical contrivances are employed in the working of some parts of that system. The test to be applied with reference to any particular part of the system is whether it is essential to, or assists in the working of, the mechanical contrivance. [p. 349, col. 2.]

Per Greaves, J.—"Machinery" is an apparatus for applying mechanical power, consisting of a number of inter-related parts, each having a definite function, and it is in this sense that the word is used in section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act. [p. 352, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the decree of Mr. Justice Chatterjea, differing in opinion from that of Mr. Justice Walmsley, dated the 12th April 1918, in Appeal from Original Decree No. 204 of 1916, against the decision of the Second Subordinate Judge, Alipore, dated 21st July 1916.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of CHATTERJEA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the Corporation of Calcutta for a declaration that the valuation and assessment made by the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality of a holding owned and occupied by the former at an annual value of Rs. 25,000 is ultra vires and illegal and for other reliefs.

It appears that the Calcutta Corporation owns a holding No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, measuring about 16 bighas 18 cottas and 5 chittaks of land at Talla, within the limits of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality, on which there is an overhead steel tank (or reservoir of water) resting on and supported by steel columns and girders. The tank is constructed in connection with the supply and distribution of filtered water to the town of Calcutta. The pumping house is situated at No. 71, Barrackpore Road, adjoining the said holding, No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane. Before the erection of the tank, the annual value of holding No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, was assessed by the defendant Municipality at Rs. 1,053 and the quarterly rates and taxes amounted to Rs. 46-10-3. After the erection of the tank, the defendant Municipality proceeded to assess the holding in view of the quinquennial assessment to take effect from 1st April 1913. There was a good deal of correspondence between the parties on the point. On the 24th January 1913, the Assessor of the defendant Municipality wrote to the Secretary of the Calcutta Corporation asking for a return of the cost of the "buildings" on the holding, to which the Assistant Engineer of the Corporation replied that there were no buildings on the site with the exception of small out-offices and the large steel tank. The Assessor of the defendant, on the 26th March 1913, wrote to the Assistant Engineer of the plaintiff that "the Commissioners consider the raised reservoir is to be treated as a building within the meaning of section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act. Even if it is not, there is no doubt that its erection has immensely enhanced, the value of the lands, which cannot consequently now be assessed with reference only to the rates of rent of the neighbouring lands. It is, therefore, necessary for the Commissioners to know all the expenses incurred by your Corporation on that land in connection with the construction of the reservoirs." The Assistant Engineer of the Corporation, on the 17th April 1913, wrote in reply that he did not agree that the raised reservoir is to be treated as a building and that he has advised that it was not a building within the meaning of section 101 of the Act to be rated on the basis of construction and without admitting his right to the information about the cost of construction, he said that the raised reservoir with the foundations cost about 20 lacs of rupees. He further said, "as for the erection of the tank enhancing the value of the land I do not quite follow your argument, as it is not clear how the value can be enhanced when no use whatever can now be possibly made of any portion of the land."

The defendant Municipality thereupon valued the holding at one lac and twenty-seven thousand and thirty rupees, and assessed the rates and taxes at Rs. 1,462-5-3 per quarter. Some further correspondence followed, and on the 11th August 1914 the Assessor of the defendant Municipality wrote to the Assistant Engineer of the Corporation that "if you object to treat the Talla raised reservoir as a building within the meaning of section 101 of the Act as you have done in your letter dated 17th April 1913, the only alternative is to assess the new holding on the gross rental at which it may be reasonably expected to let. As Assessor of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality I have now assessed it at a gross annual value of Rs. 30,000, on which basis the quarterly rates payable on it work out to Rs. 1,207-8-0."

After further correspondence, the Assessor of the defendant Municipality on the 3rd December 1914 wrote to the Assessor of the Calcutta Corporation "that after due deliberation the valuation had been reduced from Rs. 1,27,030 (calculated on the cost of construction basis) to Rs. 30,000 (on rental basis), having been fixed at the gross annual rental at which the holding may be reasonably expected to let" and could not further be reduced.

On the 15th December 1914, the Solicitor to the Corporation wrote to the Assessor of the defendant Municipality that the Chairman objected to the valuation as excessive and requesting him to "give us a hearing before asking us to accept the valuation." A separate application was made on the same day on behalf of the Chairman of the Corporation for review of the assessment on the grounds: (i) that the valuation was excessive; (ii) that the fact that the premises are being used for a Municipal purpose for the welfare and benefit of the public had not been taken into account and (iii) that full particulars of the valuation had not been furnished.

There was a proceeding of the Appeal Board of the defendant Municipality on the 16th March 1915 under section 114 of the Act, at which Mr. M. L. Sen, the Solicitor for the Corporation, and Mr. D. P. Roy, Assessor of the Corporation, represented the Calcutta Corporation. The contentions raised by the Solicitor were that the overhead tanks were not assessable, that the structures were not a building and that the holding could not be reasonably expected to let at all. The Board was of opinion that assuming that the structures were not "building," they had power to assess the holding under the first part of section 101, that it could not have been the intention of the law that the land alone was to be taken into consideration, and the finding of the Board was that "all the circumstances connected with the holding in question should be taken into account in assessing its annual value." In conclusion the Board held, "making every allowance in favour of the Calcutta Corporation and giving the benefit of the doubt of the interpretation of the word 'building' to the said Corporation, the Board determined the annual value of the holding at Rs. 25,000, being the amount at which the holding could be reasonably expected to let."

After this decision by the Appeal Board the Chairman of the Corporation, on the 19th April 1915, wrote to the Chairman of the defendant Municipality that the Advocate-General had been consulted in the matter of the assessment, and he was of opinion that the overhead tank is not a building, but a piece of machinery, and requested him to reconsider the matter and to assess the holding on the land value only. On the 1st May 1915, the Chairman of the defendant Municipality in reply referred to the proceedings which had taken place and pointed out that under section 114 of the Act, the decision of the Board was final and that there was no provision in the law under which the Appeal Board could be asked to reconsider its decision.

CHAIRMAN, COSSIPORE & CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

The present suit was thereupon instituted on the 15th June 1915.

The Court below held that the raised reservoir was machinery, that it was not shown by the defendant Municipality that it had not taken the value thereof into consideration and that, therefore, the assessment was ultra vires and illegal and the plaintiff Corporation was under no liability to pay any sum thereunder.

The defendant Municipality has appealed to this Court.

The first question for consideration is whether the raised reservoir or steel tank is a machinery within the meaning of the last proviso to section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

It is to be observed that the valuation of the holding formed the subject matter of correspondence between the two public bodies, as stated above, commencing from the 24th January 1913, and the decision of the Appeal Board was not passed until the 16th March 1915. During this long period of more than two years, no objection was raised on behalf of the Corporation that the raised reservoir was "machinery" and, therefore, could not be taken into account. In the order of the Appeal Board, it was stated that the Solicitor to the Corporation, on being questioned by two members of the Board admitted that the overhead tanks were not machinery and this was repeated in the letter dated the 11th May 1915. The correctness of the statement, however, was denied in the letter of the Chairman of the Corporation dated the 3th May 1915, and as no witnesses have been examined on the point no notice can be taken of the statement. But in the proceedings before the Appeal Board the Corporation was represented by its Solicitor and Assessor and objections were taken to the assessment on specific grounds. Before the question whether the tank is or is not machinery can be decided, the purpose for which the tank was erected and its working have to be considered, but as stated above no objection was taken on the ground that the tank was a machinery. The word "machinery" is not defined in the Act. The ordinary dictionary meaning of the word is "the assemblage of machines," machines or the constituent parts of a machine taken collectively; the mechanism or works of a machine or machines (see Oxford Dictionary), and in the same dictionary a machine is described as "an apparatus for applying mechanical power consisting of a number of inter related parts each having a definite function. In recent use the word tends to be applied especially to an apparatus so devised that the result of its operation is not dependent on the strength or manipulative skill of the workman."

On behalf of the plaintiff Corporation, two witnesses have been examined: one being Mr. MacCabe, the Chief Engineer of the Corporation, other Mr. Williamson, a Sanitary Engineer under the Government of Bengal. They positively say that the tank is a machinery. On the other hand, the defendant Municipality has examined Mr. Firth, the chief structural expert of Messrs. Barn & Co., engineers. He is equally positive that the tank is not machinery though it is a part of the contrivance for distribution of water, and that it is the non-mechanical part of a mechanical contrivance.

The use of the tank is thus described by the two witnesses examined for the Corporation. Mr. MacCabe says: "the tank was designed to meet automatically the demand of water which varies from moment to moment in Calcutta. It effects that purpose in this way; when the demand for water in the town is greater than the output of the pumps, the level of the water in the tank is falling and thus supplementing the supply from the pumps, while on the other hand when the demand for water is less than the output of pumps, the level of the water in the tank is rising and thus storing the surplus from the pumps. The tank and the pumps combined is a mechanical contrivance for putting pressure on the water and for meeting the fluctuating demand." Mr. Williamson says: "the tank is what is known technically a balancing reservoir, that is to say, it forms the purpose of balancing the constantly varying rate of consumption in Calcutta with the rate of pumping which is kept as constant as possible. When water in Calcutta is being consumed at a greater rate than is being pumped, the excess water is drawn from the water stored in the tank. If the rate of consumption in Calcutta becomes less at any time or moment than the rate at which the pumps are working, the surplus water goes into the tank and increases the quantity of water that is stored there. The supply in Calcutta is dependent upon that balancing tank and the pump;" It would appear from the above that the "balancing tank" is a reservoir for storage of water which varies from time to time according to the output of the pumps, and Mr. MacCabe himself admits that he would not call the elevated reservoir a machinery "if it was isolated and unutilisable." He says that the tank and pumps combined were designed as one unit. Mr. Firth also says that "the tank serves in combination with the pumps to distribute the water. The two are together and you cannot separate them," but that the tank does not work, it merely stores water. If, however, the tank or reservoir, which does not work and merely stores water, by itself is not machinery, it is difficult to see how it becomes a machinery merely because it is connected with the pumps. Take the case of an underground reservoir under a pumping machine. They are designed as one unit, they go together, the reservoir is not "isolated nor unutilisable" but that would not make the underground reservoir a machinery. Mr. Williamson says: "there is one main big pipe for taking water from the Tallah Station to the town of Calcutta for the distribution of water in Calcutta. I cannot say offhand whether the underground tank or reservoir at Tallah is a part or parcel of the pumping machinery. I do not consider the big main pipe to be a machinery or a part of any machinery." Further on, he says: "the pumping machinery has got distinct parts of its own and these parts are known by particular names. The pumping machinery does not include the source from which the water has to be brought for pumping." Anything which is connected with a machine, therefore, is not necessarily a 'machinery.' In the case of Chamberlayne v. Collins (1) cited on behalf of the defendant Municipality, the question was whether a switchback railway was 'operative machinery' within the meaning of certain restrictive covenants in a building lease and it was held that it was. Lord Esher, M. R., said: "That the railway is 'machinery' I have no doubt at all. It is something made to have a given effect by means of power applied to it. It is built solely for the purpose of operating upon something, namely on certain carriages in a particular way. Being built on purpose to perform a particular operation, I think that if it carries out the operation as it is intended to, it is operative machinery;" and Davey, L. J., observed:—"There is always great danger in giving definitions, but I think I may say that 'machinery' implies the application of mechanical means to the attainment of some particular end by the help of natural forces, and the addition of the word 'operative' means 'with the potentiality of operating or doing work.' It is clear to my mind that a switchback railway comes within that definition, because it is a thing skilfully built with curves of a particular shape which by their peculiar form supply the motive power which actuates the carriages which run up and down the railway." The switchback railway was held to be a machinery because it "is built solely for the purpose of operating on certain carriages in a particular way" and supplies the "motive power which actuates the carriages which run up and down the railway." The reservoir of water does not operate upon anything nor supply any motive power. The tank helps the pumps as the power of the pumps that would be needed to meet the demand for water in excess of the average output is reduced, but that is only by storing the surplus water. As already stated, it does not work. It is true that there is motion in the water when it is running out of the tank, but that would not make the tank a machinery any more than motion in the water when it is poured out of a glass would make the glass a machinery. Neither does it appear that there is any automatic working of the tank itself, for it appears from the evidence of Mr. Williamson, quoted above, that when water is being consumed at a greater rate than is being pumped, the excess water is drawn from the water stored in the tank, and when the rate of consumption becomes less, the surplus water goes into the tank, and increases the quantity of water that is stored there. It may be said that as the demand for water varies from moment to moment, the drawing of the water from, or the going of the water into the tank must be done by some automatic process and does not depend upon the "manipulative skill of the workman." Mr.

(1) (1894) 70 L. T. (N. S.) 217; 9 R. 311.

CHAIRMAN, COSSIPORE & CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Firth, however, says: "the balancing tanks that I have made had an inlet pipe, overflow pipe and an outlet pipe. The tank in dispute is of the same nature as the tanks I have made, only different in size." If there are three pipes in the Tallah tank as described by him, the drawing of the water from, and going of the water into the tank need not necessarily be due to any automatic working of the tank. The two witnesses examined by the plaintiff do not say anything on that point, but they say that the tank is designed to meet automatically the demand of water, and that the level of the water in the tank varies according to the output of the pumps, though the process is not clearly described. Under these circumstances and upon the evidence as it stands, I agree with Mr. Firth that though the raised reservoir is a part of the pumping scheme or plant it is not part of the machinery, but in the absence of clearer evidence of the working of the tank, I do not wish to rest my decision on that ground.

Assuming, however, that the raised reservoir is a machinery, the point for consideration is whether it could be taken and was taken into account in making the valuation. Section 101, clause (1), lays down that the gross annual rent at which any holding may be reasonably expected to let, shall be deemed to be the annual value thereof. The first two provisos lay down how the annual value of any building that may be on the land is to be determined. The last proviso says that "in estimating the annual value of a holding under the section the value of any machinery that may be on such holding shall not be taken into consideration."

Until the opinion of the Advocate-General was taken, no question was raised that the reservoir is machinery, and the controversy between the parties was whether the building (i.e., the tank and the structures) was assessable or not. In the letter of the defendant dated the 11th August 1914, the Secretary of the Cossipore Municipality stated, "if you object to treat the Tallah raised reservoir as a building within the meaning of section 01 of the Act, as you have done in your letter, the only alternative is to assess the new holding on the gross rental at which it may be reasonably expected to let" and that their Assessor had assessed it at Rs. 30,000. Then again in the proceedings of the Appeal Board, dated the 16th March 1915, it is distinctly stated, "making every allowance in favour of the Calcutta Corporation and giving the benefit of the doubt of the interpretation of the word 'building' to the said Corporation, the Board determined the annual value of the holding at Rs. 25,000, being the amount at which the holding could be reasonably expected to let."

There is no reason to disbelieve what is stated in the proceedings, but the matter does not rest upon the proceedings above. The figures show that the value of the machinery could not have been taken into account. The tank and trestles together with the foundation cost about Rs. 20 lakhs, and calculating the value (as a building) as laid down in the first two provisos together with a reasonable ground rent the annual value would amount to rupees one lakh, twenty-seven thousand and odd, and that was the figure at which the holding was originally assessed. Upon the objection of the Calcutta Corporation that it was not a building, the valuation was reduced to Rs. 30,000, and ultimately to Rs. 25,000.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the Calcutta Corporation, if I understood him rightly, did not contend that the value of the machinery (meaning thereby the capital value) had been taken into consideration. What he contended was, that in raising the valuation to Rs. 25,000, the defendant must have taken into account the existence of the machinery on the premises, and that it could not be done under the last proviso to section 101 of the Act.

There is no doubt that in determining the annual rent at which the holding may be reasonably expected to let, the Calcutta Corporation is to be regarded as one of the possible tenants. The provision in the Bengal Municipal Act, that the annual rent at which the holding may be reasonably expected to let, shall be deemed to be the annual value thereof, corresponds to the provisions of section 1 of 6 and 7 Will. IV, chapter 96, which speaks of the "net annual value of the hereditament, that is to say, of the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year." As pointed out by Lord Herschell, L. C., in London County Council v. Church Wardens (2), "An owner who is in occupation of premises can, of course, never reasonably be expected to take them as tenant from year to year—he cannot become a tenant to himself. Yet it has been held that the rent which, if the property were in other hands, he would be willing to pay, may be taken into account when enquiring what is its annual value: that is, at what sum it might reasonably be expected to let from year to year. If the hypothesis be admissible that the owner might himself be amongst the possible tenants, although, as a matter of fact, he could not be so, it seems to me no more violent hypothesis to conceive him as amongst the possible tenants, even although he may be subject to certain legal restrictions which would prevent his becoming so." That being so, the next question is whether the existence of the machinery on the holding should be left out of consideration in determining the annual value of the holding. In the case of Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee (3) the Lord Chancellor (Lord Halsbury) observed (at pages 182 and 183): "What you are to find out is what a tenant will reasonably give, looking, surely, at all the circumstances of the particular occupation, including therein the business that has been done on the premises," and the nature of the business and the chances of its permanency, the structural value of the buildings, the value of the land and all the surrounding circumstances.

Again in the case of Kirby v. Hunslett Union Assessment Committee (4) it was held that a tenant's machinery placed in a factory and used therewith for the business of the factory, whether it be affixed to the freehold or not, may be taken into consideration so as to increase the amount in assessing the factory to the poor rate. Lord Halsbury, L. C., observed

(at page 48):—"The Overseer has a comparatively simple problem to solve although it is difficult enough sometimes: he sees the place being conducted as a brewery, or an iron foundry, or what not: he looks at the premises, he looks at the furniture which is necessary for carrying on the business as a brewery or foundry: he does not in his own mind analyse, and to my mind he ought not to analyse, what would be likely to be the initial arrangement between the intended brewer and the owner of the freehold, to see who should provide this or that engine, or what not, but he looks at the premises as they are, as they are being occupied, and as they are being used, and he says to himself, 'well, looking at the whole of the place, such and such is the rent which would probably be paid by a tenant from year to year for such an establishment as this,' and in that he does not and ought not to strip the whole of the place of everything but the four walls which contain the whole system of manufacture therein contained and simply value either the ground upon which the building is placed or the four walls and roof which are the containing elements of all the manufacture that goes on in it."

It is contended on behalf of the Corporation that although that is the law in England, the machinery must be left out of consideration under the express terms of the proviso to section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act. But under the English law also, machinery and plant belonging to the tenant are not per se rateable and there cannot be any assessment on account of the value of those things to the tenant. The question, however, still arises under that law whether the hereditament has an enhanced value in consequence of the presence upon it of things which are not per se rateable, and according to the authorities in England "if the machinery in the premises is being so used as that it makes the factory appropriate to the particular industry carried on therein, the machinery itself is not to be disregarded in assessing the value of that thing as it is." The question, therefore, resolves into this, viz., whether the words, "the value of any machinery that may be on such holding shall not be taken into consideration," in section 101, Bengal Municipal Act, mean, not only that the value of the machinery is not to be taken into consideration, but the existence of the machinery is also to be disregarded, in other words, whether the machinery is to be excluded from consideration altogether for all purposes. If the Legislature intended that the presence of the machinery on the premises is also to be excluded from consideration (a question upon which there was a good deal of discussion in the English cases), it would have been the simplest thing to say that in determining the annual value, the presence or existence of the machinery (instead of the value of the machinery) that may be on the premises shall not be taken into consideration; and it seems that the last proviso was enacted to make it clear that under the Indian Act any machinery (itself) which may be on the premises, whether permanently attached to the holding or not, is not liable to assessment and the value thereof is, therefore, not to be taken into consideration in determining the annual value of the holding. It is said that the words "value of machinery" have reference only to the letting value of the machinery and that the taking of the existence of the machinery into account involves the taking of the letting value of the machinery into consideration. But the very same argument might be advanced against the principle (viz., that the existence of the machinery may be taken into account) laid down in the cases decided under the English law, under which also there cannot be any assessment on account of the value of the machinery to the tenant.

But even if the existence of the machinery on the premises cannot be taken into consideration, and assuming that the trestles, the iron and steel columns and girders on which the tank rests are also machinery, I think that the "concrete cement foundation," i. e., the plinth can certainly be taken into consideration in assessing the annual value of the holding. It was argued on behalf of the Corporation that the plinth also cannot be taken into consideration, because it is necessary for supporting the superstructure (the tank, and the trestles, etc., upon which the tank rests), that the tank, the trestles, etc., and the plinth should be taken together, and that, therefore, the plinth is part of the machinery. I am unable to hold that the plinth (the masonry structure) is part of the machinery. If the contention of the respondent is correct, all masonry structures, such as brickbuilt engine houses, etc., in jute, flour and oil mills are machinery because they are constructed for holding or using the machinery. On the same ground it may be said that the earthwork on which rails are placed in a railway is also part of the machinery, because the earthwork is constructed and is necessary for supporting the rails. I am of opinion that the plinth is not any part of the machinery even in the widest sense of the terms.

The plinth alone, we are told, cost more than a lac of rupees. It can be utilised for other purposes (by erecting dwelling-houses or other buildings) by the defendant Municipality or by private persons. It cannot be said that it is a 'building,' in which case the annual value could not exceed $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of the cost of construction. The word "building" is not defined in the Act, but as observed by Lord Esher, M. R., in Moir v. Williams (5), what is ordinarily called a building is "an enclosure of brick or stone work covered in by a roof." It is not the plaintiff's case that it is a building, in fact the plaintiff objected to the assessment on the ground that there were no buildings on the land with the exception of small out-offices.

I am of opinion, therefore, that in any case the plinth can be taken into consideration. The land, it appears from the plaint, was acquired at about one lac and twenty-two thousand rupees, the annual value of the land alone would, therefore, be about Rs. 8,000. The value of the land must have been enhanced by the construction of the plinth which, as stated above, can be utilized for other purposes. The defendant Municipality assessed the holding on the gross rental at which it may be reasonably expected to let, which in their opinion was Rs. 25,000. The Courts have no power to go into the question of the amount at which the annual value is assessed so long as the assessment does not contravene the provision of the Act. The assessment of the holding at Rs. 25,000, therefore, cannot be said to be ultra vires.

As regards the question whether the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to interfere, I am of opinion that if the assessment had been made contrary to the provisions of the Act, the Civil Court would have the power to declare it illegal, but I do not think that the assessment is in contravention of the provisions of the Act.

I would accordingly decree the appeal and dismiss the suit.

WALMSLEY, J.—The appeal is preferred by the Chairman of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality against a decision by the second Subordinate of Alipur in favour of the Corporation of Calcutta.

The circumstances are as follows:—The Corporation of Calcutta acquired a piece of land measuring sixteen bighas odd at No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, a few years ago. On an adjoining plot No. 71, Barrackpore Grand Trunk Road, the Corporation has its pumps and engine house and on the sixteen-bigha plot it erected a large overhead tank for the supply of water to Calcutta. Both holdings are situated within the limits of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality. The holding at No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, was formerly valued at Rs. 1,053 per annum, and the Municipal rates levied on it were Rs. 46 10 3 per quarter. In January 1913 the Secretary of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality wrote to the Calcutta Corporation, saying that a quinquennial assessment to take effect from April 1st, 1913, was being made and asking for information as to the cost of the construction of the buildings on the holding. In March the Assistant Engineer of the Calcutta Corporation replied that there were no buildings on the holding except some small out-offices and the large tank. The Assessor answered that the tank was to be regarded as a building within the meaning of section 101 of the Municipal Act and again asked for information as to the cost of construction; he also remarked that if the tank was not a building, its erection had immensely enhanced the value of the holding. The Assistant Engineer replied that he did not think the tank was a building, but as a matter of courtesy he said the cost of construction was about 20 lacs. Then the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality appears to have submitted a bill for Rs. 1,462-5 3 as the rates to be paid for the holding. There was some correspondence about this bill, and on August 1914 the Assessor wrote to the Assistant Engineer saying that in view of the objection that the tank was not a building he was valuing the holding at Rs. 30,000 per annum, the sum which he considered the gross annual rental at which it might reasonably be expected to let. On this assessment the rates payable amounted to Rs. 1,207 8 0 quarterly. In December 1914 the Assessor addressed the Assessor of the Calcutta Corporation on the subject, pointing out that the annual value had been reduced from Rs. 1,27,030 to Rs. 30,000 and expressing the hope that the valuation would be accepted. The Solicitor to the Calcutta Corporation then dealt with the matter, and made a formal application for review of the assessment, as provided by the Act. The Appeal Board of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality passed orders on this application on March 16th, 1915, and decided that the annual value of the holding was Rs. 25,000, being the amount at which the holding could be reasonably expected to let. On this assessment the appellant Municipality demanded Rs. 1,026-4 0 per quarter as the rates payable by the Calcutta Corporation.

After due notice the Calcutta Corporation instituted a suit, praying that the assessment should be set aside as illegal and made ultra vires and that the defendant Municipality should be restrained from levying rates calculated on that assessment and be directed to make a fresh valuation in accordance with law. The lower Court decreed the suit and the Cossipore Chitpore Municipality has preferred this appeal.

Before setting out the points for decision it will be well to explain how the various sums demanded by the Municipality have been reached.

In the first instance the Assessor made the valuation under the first proviso of section 101. Mr. Jackson on behalf of the appellant was kind enough to show us the mode of calculation. The capital outlay was assumed to be twenty five lakhs, and the annual value was reckoned at five per centum on this sum (instead of the maximum rate allowed by law) and to this was added a ground-rent of six rupees per cotta. The result is Rs. 1,27,030, and it is the second proviso to section 101 that causes the rates payable on this sum to be so little more than the rates payable on Rs. 30,000; the sums of

CHAIRMAN, COSSIPORE & CHITPORE MUNICIPALITY v. CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA.

Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 25,000 are, of course, mere estimates, the reasonableness of which cannot be demonstrated, the fact that the latrine tax is subject to a maximum explains why the rates leviable on these two sums are not proportionate. I have given these figures, because at first sight the bills submitted by the appellant Municipality are not intelligible.

The points which have been urged in appeal may be said to be three. First, it is urged, that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere, secondly, that the Cossipore Chitpore Municipality has not taken the tank into consideration in determining the annual value of the holding and, thirdly, that the tank is not machinery.

It will be convenient to take up the last point first. For the respondents it is urged that the tank and the trestles on which it is supported are not machinery. The proviso to section 101 is as follows:—“Provided further that in estimating the annual value of a holding under this section the value of any machinery that may be on such holding shall not be taken into consideration.” If the tank is not machinery, then the other questions will not arise. Before referring to the evidence, I may deal with the argument based on the statement that the Solicitor to the Corporation declined to adopt the theory that the erection was machinery. The assertion is made in the order of the Appeal Board and repeated in the Chairman's letter. It is denied by the Chairman of the Corporation in his letter of 13th May 1915. No witness had been examined on the point, so I think the argument must be ignored. The Corporation examined Mr. Williams, the Sanitary Engineer, and Mr. McCabe, its own Chief Engineer, and the appellants examined Mr. Firth, an employee of Messrs. Burn and Company, the well-known engineers. These gentlemen have deposed; the former that the tank should be regarded as machinery and the latter that it should not. I have no doubt that they were all speaking in perfect good faith, but their evidence is of more value in explaining the purposes for which the tank was erected. I may remark that Mr. Firth speaks of the tank as a balancing tank; this fact disposes of the suggestion that the word “balancing” was introduced at a late stage in order to import a mechanical idea not to be found in the simple word “tank.” As explained by Mr. Williams, the object of the tank is to reduce the power that would be needed to meet the demand for water in the early hours of the day: on the figures given by him by the aid of the tank the horse power required is one for every 12,000 persons instead of one for every 5,000 persons, and the result is that the initial cost of the installation is reduced as well as the cost of upkeep. It is clear that the entire raison d'être of the tank is to work in combination with the pump. As Mr. Williams says, “the tank is a part and parcel of the pumping machinery,” or as Mr. McCabe puts it, “the tank and the pumps combined were designed as one unit.” Mr. Firth is at one with them on this point; he says “it (the tank) serves in combination with the pumps to distribute the water; the two are together and you cannot separate them.” Now it is conceded that the pumping apparatus is machinery, and the question is whether the word machinery is comprehensive enough to embrace the tank also. Mr. Firth justifies his views by saying that the pump is a mechanical contrivance, while the tank and its trestles are the non-mechanical parts of a mechanical contrivance; his theory is that “mechanical movements, bearings, wheels, belts, valves, etc.,” are essential to the idea of machinery. I agree with him that the word machinery does generally call up a feature of wheels going round and of power being distributed in various directions by means of belts and the like. But I do not think it right to put such a limited construction on the word, and secondly it must be borne in mind that the word in the Act is machinery and not machines. In the Oxford Dictionary a machine is described as “an apparatus for applying mechanical power consisting of a number of inter-related parts each having a definite function.” It is pointed out that in recent use the word tends to be applied especially to an apparatus so devised that the result of its operation is not dependent on the strength or manipulative skill of the workman. This description, I think, disposes of Mr. Firth's idea that the apparatus, instead of being treated as an indivisible whole, may be divided into a mechanical part and a non-mechanical part, and that the word machine is applicable only to the former. As he says, "the tank and the pumps are designed in relation to each other, each has a definite function, and it is the combined effect that forms the purpose for which the apparatus was erected." It is true that the pumps without the tank can accomplish something, and that the tank without the pumps can do nothing, but once they are connected they produce an effect that neither can produce separately and bring the force of gravitation into play; each part becomes complementary to the other in fulfilling the object of the designer.

The other point to which I have referred is this: We are concerned with the words 'machinery,' not 'machine' or 'machines'. Of machinery the Oxford Dictionary says that it means "machines or the constituent parts of a machine taken collectively, the mechanism or works of a machine or machines." Regarding the suffix 'ery,' the same dictionary says that it denotes for the most part a place where an employment is carried on, as in bakery and brewery: that it occasionally denotes classes of goods, as in pottery and that after the analogy of this latter use it is added to some substantives with a general collective sense, equivalent to ware, stuff or the like, as in crockery, machinery and scenery. It is this general collective sense which appears to me to give the word machinery a very comprehensive meaning. Bearing in mind what I have said about the unanimity of the experts on both sides as to the pumps and the tank being parts of one whole, I think it must be held that the word machinery is wide enough to cover the tank so long, of course, as it is connected with the pumps and takes its part in carrying out the scheme for the distribution of the water. As the plaintiff Corporation is seeking to establish that it is not liable to tax on account of the tank, it is entitled to demand that the word machinery should receive as wide an interpretation as may be put upon it. My conclusion, therefore, is that the tank is machinery and in the words of the proviso its value is not to be taken into consideration.

Before passing to the second point I wish to refer to the only English case which has been mentioned before us bearing on the meaning of the word machinery. It is the case of Chamberlayne v. Collins (1). The defendant-appellant by the covenant of a lease bound himself not to erect any operative machinery on certain premises: he erected on the premises a switchback railway upon piles driven into the ground. It was argued on his behalf that the railway, apart from the carriages which run upon it, was not machinery and in the railway there was nothing which moved or worked. The answer was that the railway could not be considered separately from the carriages which run upon it; and that whatever the cause of the motion of the carriages, a railway is a machine, and when the carriages are used it is an operative machine. In delivering judgment Lord Esher, M. R., said: "That the railway is 'machinery,' I have no doubt at all. It is something made to have a given effect by means of power applied to it. It is built solely for the purpose of operating upon something, namely, on certain carriages in a particular way. Being built on purpose to perform a particular operation, I think that, if it carries out the operation as it is intended to, it is operative machinery." Lopes, L. J., entirely agreed. Davey, L. J., said: "This railway is operative machinery. There is always great danger in giving definitions but, I think, I may say that 'machinery' implies the application of mechanical means to the attainment of some particular end by the help of natural forces, and the addition of the word 'operative' means 'with the potentiality of operating or doing work.' It is clear to my mind that a switchback railway comes within that definition, because it is a thing skilfully built with curves of a particular shape which by their peculiar form supply the motive power which actuates the carriages which run up and down the railway." It appears to me that the language used in these judgments may be applied to the present case, and if the track of a switchback railway, apart from the carriages, is machinery, the balancing tank should also be regarded as machinery.

The next question is whether the appellant Municipal Committee has taken the value of the machinery into consideration. On the face of the proceedings, it has not done so, but I think an examination of the correspondence and resolutions shows that it has. In a letter of March 26th, 1913, the Secretary asked the Assistant Engineer to the Corporation for full information as to the expenditure incurred in building the tank, and remarked that the erection of the tank had "immensely enhanced the value of the land which cannot, consequently, now be assessed with reference only to the rates of rent of the neighbouring lands." As I have shown above, it was at first proposed to assess and tax the holding on the method laid down by the first and second provisos of section 101. Subsequently this method was abandoned, and the annual value was fixed at a round sum, first of Rs. 30,000, and afterwards of Rs. 25,000. The concession was very astute, for the reduction of liability was trivial as compared with the apparent reduction on the assessment. The Appeal Board was careful to say that the sum of Rs. 25,000 was fixed as the amount at which the holding could be reasonably expected to let. Now we have it on the record that up to 1913, the holding was assessed at an annual value of Rs. 1,053, the statement in the plaint that the holding was acquired at a cost of Rs. 1,22,000 is not denied and that sum at fifteen years' purchase means that the annual value was about Rs. 8,000. It may well be asked, therefore, why in 1915 it should be supposed that any tenant would be ready to pay Rs. 25,000 for the holding. It seems to me that the only possible answer is that the Appeal Board held that the annual value of the holding had been increased by the erection of the tank. This is what the Secretary had said in 1913: "the erection of the tank had immensely enhanced the value of the land." Further, there is the reference in the order by the Appeal Board, dated 16th March 1915, and in the Chairman's letter dated 11th May 1915, to the fact or alleged fact that the Solicitor to the Corporation did not assert that the erection was machinery. It is clear from these papers that the Commissioners held that the proviso to section 101 did not stand in their way, only because of their view that the erection was not machinery. It appears to me, therefore, that the machinery has been taken into consideration. The proviso directs that the value of machinery shall not be taken into consideration, and for the appellant it is urged that it is not the value but the existence of the machinery that has been taken into consideration. I do not think that there is any force in this argument. Suppose the balancing tank had cost not twenty lakhs of rupees, but only twenty thousand rupees, would the appellants by taking into consideration only its existence have come to the same conclusion as to the annual value of the holding? Assuming that the holding was worth Rs. 8,000 a year on the basis of the cost of acquisition, it seems absurd to suppose that the existence of machinery worth only Rs. 20,000 could have raised the annual value to Rs. 25,000. The Assessor and the Appeal Board must have taken the value of the machinery into consideration.

Then the argument is advanced that the annual value must be taken to be such as a hypothetical tenant would be prepared to pay for the holding. On the English cases the Corporation must be regarded as a hypothetical tenant although it be the only possible tenant. On the date to be found in the record it is no doubt true that if the holding were in the market with the tank erected upon it, the Corporation would gladly pay Rs. 25,000 as rent, for that would be a much smaller sum than the interest payable on the cost of construction. The method, however, cannot be applied here. In England the rating law in regard to machinery is to this effect: "The actual equipment of a hereditament with machinery and plant must not be left out of account, even though the whole or some part of the machinery...is unattached to the freehold, or would not pass upon a demise of the hereditament" (24 Halsbury's Laws of England Rates, section 48). The proviso to section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, on the other hand, lays down that the value of machinery shall not be taken into consideration and it follows that in this case the theory of the hypothetical tenant can be applied only to the bare holding without the machinery. A further argument is that the third proviso is a proviso to the first proviso, that is to say, that the prohibition against taking the value of machinery into consideration applies only when the assessment is calculated on the actual cost of erection as provided by the first proviso. This argument is met by the words of the provisos, which runs "in estimating the annual value of a holding under this section" the proviso must apply to the whole section.

A last argument is that the appellants are at any rate allowed to take into consideration the foundations and plinth on which the trestles of the tank are erected. The idea seems to be that they are bricks and mortar, while the superstructure is of iron and steel, and iron and steel possess the potentiality of being made parts of a machine. The answer to this argument, I think, is that the erection must be regarded as a whole: the foundations are necessary for the superstructure, and they play their part in achieving the result for which the tank was designed. In the same way the piles on which the switchback railway was built were regarded as part and parcel of the railway, the whole of which was held to be machinery. Another idea underlying the argument appears to be that the plinth might be converted to other uses, for example, that with the superstructure removed it could be utilised for dwelling houses and other buildings. I think the same answer may be given.

My conclusion is that the appellants in their zeal for the revenues of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality have taken into consideration the value of machinery erected on the holding.

On this view the third point needs no discussion. The appellants have been guilty of a flagrant violation of an express prohibition. It is well settled that under such circumstances Civil Courts have power to interfere.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs and affirm the decision of the lower Court.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal comes before us under the provisions of clause 15 of the Letters Patent owing to a difference of opinion between Chatterjea, J., and Walmsley, J.

The Corporation of Calcutta instituted the suit for the declaration that the valuation and assessment made by the Cossipore Chitpore Municipality of a holding owned and occupied by the Calcutta Corporation at an annual value of Rs. 25,000 was ultra vires and illegal.

The Calcutta Corporation own a holding No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, containing 16 bighas odd at Tallah within the limits of the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality on which there has been erected an overhead steel tank supported by steel columns and girders. The tank was constructed in connection with the supply and distribution of filtered water to Calcutta.

The pumping house is situate at No. 71, Barrackpore Road, adjoining the holding No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane. Under the terms of the proviso to section 6, sub section 3, the two holdings ought to have been assessed as one holding. Before the erection of the tank the holding No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, was assessed by the Cossipore-Chitpore Municipality at Rs. 1053. The annual value of the holding has now been raised to Rs. 25,000. I have had the opportunity of reading the judgment about to be delivered by Greaves, J. He has in the course of his judgment summarised the evidence as to the purposes for which the tank was erected and I do not intend to repeat it here.

The first question we have to decide is whether the tank is "machinery" within the meaning of section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that it was. Chatterjea, J., thought it was not—Walmsley, J., agreed with the Subordinate Judge. I am of the same opinion as the learned Subordinate Judge. On the evidence I think the overhead tank is a mechanical contrivance used in connection with the pumps for the attainment of a particular end and that it forms an integral part of the machinery for the distribution of the filtered water supply to Calcutta. This, I think, brings the overhead tank within the definition of "machinery" given by Davey, L. J., in Chamberlayne v. Collins (1).

I agree, therefore, with the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the tank is not liable to be taken into consideration for the purpose of valuing the holding.

The second contention was that even if the tank is "machinery" within the meaning of section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act the existence of machinery on the holding should not be left out of consideration. This view was adopted by Chatterjee, J., and in the course of his judgment he has referred to certain English authorities in support of his view. But those cases were decided on a totally different Statute and it is, I think, misleading to refer to those cases for the purpose of the construction of section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act. Section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, I think, excludes machinery from the valuation of the holding for all purposes.

The next question is whether the appellant Municipality has taken the value of the machinery into consideration. I think quite clearly they have. The correspondence and resolutions establish this without doubt, and there can be no other reason for the enormous increase in the valuation.

Lastly it was, faintly suggested that if the valuation was made contrary to the terms of the Act, the Civil Courts had no power to interfere. The authorities show quite clearly that the Civil Court in such circumstances has power to interfere.

In the result I agree with the judgment of Walmsley, J., and the present appeal ought, I think, to be dismissed.

As my learned colleagues are of a different opinion, according to the opinion of the majority of the Bench, the appeal will be allowed with costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

BEACHCROFT, J.—The principal point which we have to decide in this appeal is whether the overhead tank comes within the term "machinery" used in section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

To judge whether it does or not, it is unnecessary to ascertain exactly what part it plays in the scheme for the supply of water to Calcutta. The water is brought from the river to underground reservoirs at the pumping station. There it is pumped up into the main pipe supplying Calcutta. The demand for water is not constant throughout the day in Calcutta and when the water pumped up exceeds the demand, the excess passes into the overhead tank through a valve operated by hand, which is opened to let the water through. When the water pumped up is insufficient to meet the demand, the water in the tank runs out again by the same pipe by which it was pumped into the tank, the valve being opened again to let it out. There is also a valve at the centre of the tank, which is used for shutting off the water from any of the 4 compartments, into which it is divided, for cleaning purposes. The engines are intended to pump up about $2\frac{1}{2}$ million gallons per hour, and a Diesel engine has been added which will pump perhaps $\frac{1}{4}$ million gallons, but as one of the pumps is generally undergoing repair or being cleaned, the amount usually pumped is about 2 million gallons per hour. The demand in the early hours of the day, i. e., from 6 to 10 A. M., is about 4 million gallons and during those hours water is running out of the tank.

It is not suggested that the tank by itself could be called machinery, but it is argued that it answers that description by reason of its connection with the pumps, the two, to use Mr. McCabe's words, being "designed as one unit," and the fact that it is part of the system for supplying water to the city.

It does not seem to me that the tank can be said in any way to answer the definition of machinery suggested by Davey, L. J., in Chamberlayne v. Collins (1). Nor do I think that it can be properly said that everything which is contained in a system comes within the description of machinery merely because mechanical contrivances are employed in the working of some parts of that system. I think the test to be applied with reference to any particular part of the system is whether it is essential to, or assists in the working, of the mechanical contrivance. Does the tank answer that test? It is argued for the plaintiff Corporation that the tank increases the efficiency of the pumps, in that if the tank were not in existence, pumps of higher power would be required to meet the demand at the time of maximum demand and the working of the pumps would be intermittent, as less power would be required when the demand fell off. Now to my mind it is beside the point to consider whether some other system would have been less economical or less efficient. You have to take the system as it is and then apply the test. Mr. Pearce, who was examined before us to explain the working of the tank in connection with the pumps, tells us that the pumping plant could not deal with the maximum demand of 4 million gallons per hour. He says: "the tank enables the pumps to be worked more or less constantly: we don't keep them absolutely constant. It tends to allow us to keep them constant. If we had not the reservoir, we should want more pumps." He does not suggest that the tank actually assists the working of the pumps in any way. It seems to me that the function of the tank is simply this, to store water during those hours when the demand is comparatively small and to supplement the supply given by the pumps when the demand is large. In my opinion, the tank is not "machinery."

In some respects the tank answers the same purposes as a pipe for part of the day, viz, it contains the water during its passage from the pumps to the consumer. We are not concerned with the question whether the pipes carrying the water to the city come within the terms "machinery," but it seems to me that there must be some point at which we must stop short of the tap by the turning of which the house-holder gets his water.

It is conceded that if it be held that the tank is not machinery, no objection can be legally taken to the assessment. And it is obviously so, for the tank, being attached to the earth, is "land" within the definition contained in section 6 (5) of the Act and, as such, liable to assessment.

I would allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs in both Courts.

GREAVES, J.—This appeal comes before us by reason of a difference of opinion between Chatterjea, J., and Walmsley, J. The question that arises for decision is whether the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality have acted ultra vires in assessing the Corporation of Calcutta upon an annual value of

Rs. 25,000) in respect of their holding of 16 bighas 18 cottas and five chittaks, No. 1, Khelat Babu's Lane, at Tallah in the 42 Parganas, situate within the limits of the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality, which has on a portion thereof a one-storied old masonry building measuring 30 feet by 20 feet used as an out-office and an overhead steel tank resting on and supported by steel columns and girders which stand upon a concrete cement foundation or plinth. The question involves deciding whether the steel tank is machinery within the third proviso to section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884 (Act III of 1884), and assuming that it is machinery, whether the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality were entitled to take into account its existence on the holding in arriving at the annual value of the holding under section 101.

Up to 1913 and prior to the erection of the tank the holding was assessed upon an annual value of Rs. 8,000 approximately. There is no evidence on the record that apart altogether from the erection of the tank the holding has so appreciated in value that its annual value is now Rs. 25,000, and consequently I think that the inference is obvious that the tank has been taken into account in arriving at the present annual value of Rs. 25,000.

Chatterjea, J., has held that the tank is not machinery within the third proviso to section 101 and that even assuming it is machinery, its existence upon the holding has been rightly taken into account in arriving at the annual value of the holding under section 101. Walmsley, J., has held that the tank is machinery and that the third proviso is an absolute prohibition against taking the tank into account in arriving at the annual value.

We thought it necessary to take additional evidence upon the hearing of the appeal and accordingly Mr. Arthur Pearce, a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers and the Executive Engineer of the Waterworks of the Calcutta Corporation, who has been in the service of the Corporation for 22 years, was called and explained to us the working of the tank in connection with the rest of the waterworks undertaking and produced five plans, Exhibits X-1-5. It appears from his evidence that the steel tank is 330 feet from the engine house, that it is connected with the pumps by a steel pipe, which is 5 feet in diameter extending from valve A in the tank as shown on X-1 to the valve marked B on X-1, and that after that the pipe is 6 feet in diameter, at which diameter it is shown as conveying the water to Calcutta.

It appears that the water for the use of Calcutta is conveyed by two pipes, shown by dotted lines on X-1, from Falta to the underground reservoir shown on X-1 and that from this reservoir it is pumped into the 6 feet pipe or main, the engine house connecting with the pipe between valves B and C shown on X-1.

Mr. Pearce stated that the works at Tallah were the main station for distributing water throughout Calcutta, that prior to the erection of the steel tank there was a distributing station at Tallah and three sub stations in the town of Calcutta with underground reservoirs at Bhowanipur, Wellington Square and Halliday Streets, that the water received from Falta went into the main Tallah reservoir and that from thence part was pumped direct into the town and part into the three underground reservoirs mentioned above, the distribution to the town being completed from these sub-stations, that under this system the town supply was given daily from 6 A. M. to 10 A. M. and from 3 P. M. to 6 P. M. the pumps at Tallah working more or less constantly and some all the time, more pumping, however, being done in the day time than at night, the sub-stations pumping only in the day time. He stated that after the steel tank was built and the new system instituted, the sub-stations in the town were done away with altogether, that some of the old pumps at Tallah were done away with and replaced by others, but that some of the old pumps were retained, that the new system was devised to give a constant supply to Calcutta, the idea of the scheme being to increase the supply of water and give a constant supply to Calcutta and maintain a constant pressure by pumping from the underground reservoir and by using a raised reservoir, which would automatically govern the pressure to the town by keeping it constant. He stated that the steel tank was called a balancing tank, as it balanced inequality between supply and demand, as the demand varied and the supply from Falta was continuous, and that the pumps and the tank constituted one unit. He told us that 36 million gallons a day were received from Falta, $1\frac{1}{2}$ million gallons flowing into the reservoir in one hour, that the demand in Calcutta from 6 A. M. to 10 A. M. was 4 million gallons an hour, that the pumps could not raise so much, as the engines were not powerful enough and were only intended to pump $2\frac{1}{2}$ million gallons an hour and usually pumped about 2 million gallons an hour, the difference between this amount and the 4 million gallons demand between 6 A. M. and 10 A. M. being obtained from the steel tank. He added that the pumps were connected with the steel tank as stated above and that when the demand was less than the 2 million gallons pumped, the excess was put into the steel tank from which it was drawn when the demand was greater than the pumps could supply. He stated that the working of the pumps was not necessarily constant or continuous but that they worked at a more or less constant rate, the system tending to allow the working of the pumps to be kept constant. In cross-examination he stated that valves A, B and C on X-1 were worked by hand and that they did not work automatically and that the height of the tank was to get the pressure and that during part of the day, that is from 10—3 and during the night, the tank was purely a reservoir as there was no need of the pressure. He stated that the pumps did not draw water from the tank and that the tank would serve its purpose equally well if it was some miles away.

In the lower Court three witnesses were called, two on behalf of the Calcutta Corporation, namely, Mr. G. B. Williams and Mr. W. S. McCabe, and one Mr. Henry Firth on behalf of the Cossipore and Chitpur Municipality.

Mr. Williams is a Sanitary Engineer under the Government of Bengal and a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers and of the Institute of Mechanical Engineers, and he stated that he had carried out a number of schemes of waterworks in India. He stated that he considered the tank to be a part and parcel of the pumping machinery and that the tank must be called machinery, and that it was as much a part of the machinery as the boiler and that it could not be designed or constructed without the pumps and that it helped the pumps.

Mr. MacCabe is a Civil Engineer of 28 years' standing and a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers and was formerly Chief Engineer of the Calcutta Corporation. He stated that as Chief Engineer he supervised the water supply of Calcutta and designed the scheme for supplying water in Calcutta by means of a balancing tank and that the tank and the pumps combined were designed as one unit, the tank being designed to meet automatically the demand of water which varied from moment to moment in Calcutta, the tank and pumps combined being a mechanical contrivance for putting pressure on the water and for meeting the fluctuating demand, and he stated that he called the tank a part of the machinery for the supply of water in the town and that it was so designed. In cross-examination he stated that he could not dissociate the pumps from the tank any more than he could dissociate the boiler from the pumps.

Mr. Firth stated that he was in the employ of Messrs. Burn and Company of Howrah one of the principal firms of structural engineers in India, that he was a practical engineer and had designed tanks on trestles. He stated that he did not consider the tank machinery, which he would define and describe as a combination of complicated mechanical parts causing motion; in cross examination he stated that he knew that the tank and pumps were designed in relation to each other, but that the pumps could work independently of the tanks but could not alone perform the same function as the combination of the two which served combined to distribute the water, that they were together and could not be separated. He further described the tank and the trestles as the non-mechanical parts of a mechanical contrivance, which with the pipes he described as plant, and he stated that the tank did no work at all but stored water, which was not work. This is all the evidence.

The Bengal Municipal Act contains no definition of machinery, but the dictionary definition of machinery as appearing in Murray's New English Dictionary, Volume VI. published by the Clarendon Press at Oxford in 1908, is as follows: "machines or the constituent parts of a machine taken collectively; the mechanism or works of a machine or machine," and in the same dictionary a machine is defined as "(1) a structure of any kind, material or immaterial; a fabric or erection," although this meaning is said to be now rare, and (4) in a narrower sense, "an apparatus for applying mechanical power, consisting of a number of inter-related parts, each having a definite function," and I think that it is in this sense that the word is used in section 101 of the Bengal Municipal Act.

In Chamberlayne v. Collins (1) we find this definition, "machinery implies the application of mechanical means to the attainment of some particular end by the help of natural forces."

And Nutley and Finn, In re (6), on a contract for the sale of a freehold brewery which provided that its fixed plant and machinery should be paid for by valuation, Kekewich, J., held that speaking generally machinery included everything which by its action produced or assisted in production and that plant might be regarded as that without which production could not go on and included such things as brewer's pipes, vats and the like.

I am not unmindful that we are in the present case called on to construe the meaning of "machinery" in a clause in a Statute imposing a rate and to construe the word in respect of an exemption from liability in respect of the rate imposed, but even so I am not prepared to hold that the steel tank falls within the meaning of machinery in the third proviso to section 101. Upon the evidence it appears to me that the tank in question is nothing more than a building for the storage of water, the water so stored being used when the need arises to supplement the amount of water pumped into the mains from the underground reservoir. It, no doubt, forms part of the system for supplying Calcutta with water and is filled from the same pumps which pump the supply of water into the mains but that, in my opinion, does not make it machinery within the third proviso to section 101. Prima facie the tank is not a machine and I do not see that it becomes a machine by reason of its connection with the pumps and engine by means of the steel pipe.

In this view the other question, namely, whether if the tank is machinery it should be taken into account in arriving at a valuation of the holding, does not arise but assuming that I am wrong in the conclusion at which I have arrived, and that the tank is machinery, then I do not think that the Cossipore and Chitpore Municipality were justified in taking its existence into account in valuing the holding. The third proviso to section 101 expressly prohibits the taking into consideration of the value of any machinery in estimating the annual value of a holding under section 10. It is said, however, in reliance upon the English cases of Kirby v Hunslet Union Assessment Committee (4) and Mersey Docks and Harbour Board v. Birkenhead Assessment Committee (3), to which we were referred, that although the tank may not be rateable per se, yet in valuing the holding its existence thereon must be taken into account in arriving at the annual value for the purposes of section 101. I do not think that this is so. The third proviso is express in its terms and if the tank is considered at all, it seems to me that this must involve taking into consideration its value in some form, which is what the third proviso forbids and which I think in effect means that it must be taken as non-existent for the purpose of arriving at the annual value under section 101. The English cases, to my mind, have no application, for our decision must rest upon the construction of the third proviso to section 101.

But for the reasons already given I think the appeal should succeed upon the other ground.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 103, O. XX, r. 4—Judgment, contents of—Court of first instance, duty of—Evidence, consideration of—Documentary evidence, failure of Court to mention, effect of—Appeal—Appellate Court, consideration of evidence by—Appeal, second—High Court, power of, to determine issue of fact.

A Court of first hearing is bound to consider all the evidence adduced before it, but the mere fact that that Court omits to mention a document in its judgment is no sufficient proof that it failed to take the document into consideration, especially where the document is of obviously no importance or weight. Where, however, the document is of obvious weight or importance, it is incumbent on the Court to mention the document in its judgment and its omission to do so may be regarded by a Court of Appeal as sufficient proof that the document was not taken into consideration. [p. 355, col 1]

A party is not entitled to have a document considered by an Appellate Court, unless the attention of the Court is drawn to it, or it is impliedly relied on. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it may be presumed that a respondent relies on the judgment of the lower Court in his favour, and that any document, treated as a document of importance by that Court, has been impliedly brought to the notice of the Appellate Court [p. 355, col. 1.]

Where an Appellate Court has determined an issue of fact without a proper consideration of the evidence, it is within the power of the High Court, under section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, to determine that issue, if there is sufficient evidence on the record for its determination. [p. 357, col. 1.]

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

ASHWORTH, A. J. C.—23rd June 1919.—The substance of this appeal is that the lower Appellate Court failed to take into consideration certain documentary evidence filed by the appellants. The appellants' Counsel has specified this this documentary evidence as consisting of Exhibits 2, 7, 10, 12 and 13. To prove that the lower Appellate Court has not taken them into consideration, he refers me to the judgment which fails to mention these documents. To prove that the lower Appellate Court is bound to take into consideration all documents filed in the case and admitted by the Court of hearing, he refers to Sheodharshan Lal v. Assesar Singh (1). The failure of a Court to mention a document specifically in its judgment is no proof that it has not considered the document. Nor again, in my opinion, can an Appellate Court be required to consider any document unless that document is brought to its attention either by the judgment of the Court from which it is hearing the appeal or by the Pleader who is prosecuting the appeal. Order XLI, rule 10, provides for an appellant being heard in support of and the respondent being heard against the appeal. There is no provision requiring the Court to travel outside the arguments and pleadings of the parties to the appeal. In the case referred to I find that Mr. Lindsay stated that it appeared to him that no attention had been paid to the documentary evidence in the case. This remark does not appear to me to justify the headnote—"A finding of fact can be questioned in second appeal, if it is found that the lower Appellate Court failed to consider the entire evidence on the record relating to that fact." The correct view of the law appears to me to be that an Appellate Court is only bound to take into consideration documentary evidence relied on by the parties in the argument of the appeal, but that it may be inferred that one side or other in appeal relied on the documents specifically mentioned in the lower Court's judgment. In the case of other documents an affidavit ought to be filed by the Counsel who appeared in the lower Appellate Court that he brought the documents to the attention of the Judge. Again it can only be presumed from failure of a Subordinate Court to mention any document in its judgment that it failed to take it into consideration, if the document is one of obvious importance.

The appeal is admitted, but I desire it to come before a Bench as a ruling is necessary on the matter mentioned.

(1) 46 Ind. Cas. 52; 5 O. L. J. 179.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of the title of the plaintiffs along with defendant No. 4 to certain property. The suit was bound to fail if the defendants No. 2 Prithipal and No. 3 Surajpal were proved to be the legitimate sons of one Kunj Behari. The learned Munsif found that they were not the legitimate sons of Kunj Behari. On first appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki reversed the finding of the Munsif and held that they were proved to be the legitimate sons of Kunj Behari. In second appeal to this Court it is urged that the lower Appellate Court failed to take into consideration some of the documentary evidence filed by the plaintiffs. It is also urged that it wrongly refused to treat as substantive evidence a certain Exhibit 9. The case originally came before a single Judge of this Court under Order XLI, rule 11. In the course of argument on the first question mentioned above the appellants' Counsel maintained that the absence in the judgment of any mention of documents was proof that the Judge had not considered those documents. He also maintained that a lower Appellate Court is bound to take into consideration all documents filed in the case and admitted by the Court of hearing. In support of this he quoted various rulings of this Court. It appeared to the Judge of this Court before whom the case originally came that this contention, in view of the rulings on the matter, should be considered by a Bench. Accordingly this case has now been argued before this Bench.

The questions that arise in this appeal are:—

(1) Can it be presumed from the absence of mention by a Judge in his judgment of any documents that he has failed to take these documents into consideration?

(2) Is a lower Appellate Court bound to take into consideration all the documents which have been admitted by the Court of first hearing?

(3) Did the lower Appellate Court in this case fail to take into consideration any documents and did its failure to do so constitute a substantial error or defect in procedure within the meaning of section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure?

(4) Was the lower Court in error in refusing to treat Exhibit 9 as substantive evidence in this case?

As to questions Nos. 1 and 2 we have no hesitation in saying that the mere failure of a Court to mention a document in its judgment is no sufficient proof that the Court failed to consider it. The parties to a case are entitled to have their evidence considered by the Court of first hearing from the point of view of the particular purpose for which that evidence is adduced. Where any document is obviously of no importance or weight, it is not incumbent on a Court to mention the document in its judgment. If, however, the document is of obvious weight and importance, the omission of the Court of first hearing to mention it in its judgment may be regarded by a Court of Appeal as sufficient proof that it failed to take the document into consideration, because the probability of a Court passing over in silence a document of obvious importance which it has considered is less than the probability of its omitting to consider it by some oversight. The case is, however, somewhat different where mention of a document is omitted in the judgment of a first Appellate Court. Before an Appellate Court a party is not entitled to have a document considered unless his Counsel draws the attention of the Court to it, or impliedly relies on it. This appears to us to follow from the provisions of Order XLI, rule 16, which describes the procedure on hearing an appeal and states that the appellant and respondent shall be heard. It may, however, be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that a respondent relies on the judgment of the lower Court in his favour and that any document treated as a document of importance by the Court of first hearing has been impliedly brought to the notice of the first Appellate Court.

As to question No. 3, the appellants' Counsel showed considerable uncertainty as to what documents he referred to in this connection. We ultimately understood from him that the documents which he maintained the first Appellate Court had not considered were Exhibits 2, 7, 10, 12 and 13. The Counsel for the respondents has attempted to show that these documents or the greater number of them were mentioned by the learned Subordinate Judge. It is clear, however, that before we can hold that they were taken into consideration by the Subordinate Judge for the purpose for which they were cited or relied on, we must find them treated by the Subordinate Judge under the issue in respect of which they were relied on, that is to say in this case the issue as to the legitimacy of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The Subordinate Judge's appellate judgment on this issue does not mention any of the exhibits in question. There is no proof, however, that any of these exhibits were cited by the appellants' Counsel before the Subordinate Judge in his argument. It remains then to see whether they were such documents as the lower Appellate Court was bound to consider by reason of their having been relied on by the Court of first hearing as documents of importance. Exhibit 2 is mentioned by the Court of first hearing twice over. In one place it is said to be the copy of a Sessions Judge's judgment which the Court of first hearing regarded as of no importance, and in the other place it appears to be the copy of a judgment of a Munsif. It is this latter Exhibit 2 to which reference is made by appellants' Counsel. The Munsif said that this Exhibit 2 as well as Exhibit 7 were relevant to show that the appellants were not questioning the legitimacy of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the first time. These exhibits cannot be said to have been considered as of importance by the Court of first hearing and we, therefore, hold that the first Appellate Court may well have considered them without having mentioned them in its judgment. Exhibit 13 is not mentioned in the judgment of the Court of first hearing at all. Exhibits 10 and 12 are mentioned and treated as of importance. Exhibit 10 is an order in a criminal case showing that the defendant Prithipal and one Musammatt Ramdei (or Musammatt Gulbasa) were prosecuted together in a certain case under section 323 and other sections. Exhibit 12 shows that Prithipal called this Musammatt Gulbasa his mother. These two documents were undoubtedly of importance to prove that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were not legitimate, and for the following reasons,

RAM UDIT v. EISHESHWAR.

The plaintiffs' case was that the mother of the defendants was one Musammatt Gulbasa who had been the wife of one Mahabir and afterwards formed a liaison with Kunj Behari, the result of which was the birth of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The case of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was that their mother was Musammatt Ramdei and that she was never known by the name of Gulbasa and had never been the wife of Mahabir. Now Exhibit 12, read with Exhibit 10, clearly constitutes an admission by Prithipal that he and his brother were the children of Musammatt Gulbasa. On the contention, therefore, that Musammatt Ramdei was quite a different person from Musammatt Gulbasa, this admission, if considered conclusive, would entirely destroy the case of the defendants. The course of the pleadings shows that it was not the contention of the defendants that their mother was Musammatt Gulbasa while married to Mahabir and that subsequently she was lawfully married to Kunj Behari and became Musammatt Ramdei. We consider it proved, therefore, that the lower Appellate Court failed to take into consideration Exhibits 10 and 12 by reason of its failure to mention them in its judgment.

As to question No. 4, Exhibit 9 was the statement of Musammatt Gulbasa just referred to in the criminal case under section 323. In this statement that Musammatt Gulbasa clearly implied that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were her children. Read with Exhibits 10 and 12 her statement clearly amounted to an expression by conduct of a belief that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were her children. Exhibit 9 is, therefore, relevant under section 50 of the Evidence Act as substantive evidence. The lower Appellate Court, assuming that Musammatt Ramdei and Musammatt Gulbasa were one and the same persons (which was contrary to the case of the defendants), held that Musammatt Ramdei's evidence in this case could be rebutted by the evidence of Musammatt Gulbasa in the criminal case under section 323, but held that the latter evidence was not admissible as substantive evidence. For the reasons stated, we hold that this was incorrect.

The question now arises whether we should send this case back to the first

Appellate Court for consideration of Exhibits 10 and 12 and for consideration of Exhibit 9 as substantive evidence or should dispose of the case ourselves. The lower Appellate Court decided in favour of the legitimacy of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the basis of their oral evidence, especially on the evidence of the witness Ramanand. We are of the opinion that this oral evidence cannot prevail against the evidence afforded by Prithipal's admission that Gulbasa was his mother and the conduct of Musammatt Gulbasa in the 323 case showing that she regarded defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as her children. This admission of the defendant No. 2 and this conduct of Musammatt Gulbasa is absolutely destructive of the defendants' contention that their mother is Musammatt Ramdei who had nothing to do with Musammatt Gulbasa. If, however, we allow the variation in the defendants' case, which the two lower Courts appear to have impliedly allowed, namely that Musammatt Ramdei was the same as Musammatt Gulbasa, then it would be necessary to have reliable evidence that Musammatt Gulbasa could never have been the married wife of Kunj Behari. The plaintiffs' witnesses all depose to this fact, because they describe Gulbasa as running away from her first husband Mahabir and living with Kunj Behari in circumstances negative of the possibility of a second marriage with Kunj Behari. This evidence may be believed, if for no other reason, for the reason that the defendants never attempted to meet that evidence otherwise than by denying the identity of Musammatt Ramdei with Musammatt Gulbasa. This denial of the identity is rebutted by the fact that Prithipal clearly admitted Gulbasa to be his mother. Even then if we allow the variation we must hold that the legitimacy of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 is disproved. It has been argued that there is a presumption of law in favour of legitimacy under section 114 of the Evidence Act. Be this as it may, no presumption could prevail against the evidence and inference to the contrary which appear in this case.

It has been urged by the respondents' Counsel that we are not entitled to decide a question of fact in second appeal, and he relies on the case of Appa Kalga Naik v. Mallu (2) as authority for the proposition that the case must be remanded to the lower Appellate Court. This ruling was passed before the present Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 came into force. Under section 103 of the present Code of Civil Procedure in second appeal a High Court may, if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower Appellate Court. We hold that this provision also applies to an issue of fact determined by the lower Appellate Court without proper consideration of the evidence. An issue so determined cannot be regarded as determined within the meaning of this section. In any case it would be absurd to hold that this Court may determine an issue not determined by the lower Appellate Court while it may not determine an issue of which the determination is vitiated by the proper exclusion of evidence.

We, therefore, allow this appeal and restore the decree of the learned Munsif with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

Hindu Law Widow, alienation by—Reversioner, next male, right of, to question alienation—Female reversioners, presence of, effect of—Necessity, proof of—Transferee, failure of, to make enquiry, effect of—Marriage, contemplated, of daughter, whether necessity.

A male reversioner, between whom and the estate there are only female heirs, is entitled to sue for a declaration that a transfer made by the widow of the last male holder is invalid. [p. 358, col. 2.]

Where the necessity for an alienation by a Hindu widow is alleged to be the contemplated marriage of a daughter, but it appears that there was no negotiation for the marriage at the time the money was advanced and that the transferee made no enquiries as to the necessity before making the advance, the alienation cannot be upheld as being justified by legal necessity [p. 351, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 21st February 1918, affirming that of the Additional Munsif, Buxar, dated the 19th July 1917.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal by some of the defendants in the suit against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad dated the 21st February 1918. The plaintiff was the cousin of Ram Lakhan deceased, being the son of a brother of Ram Lakhan's father. Ram Lakhan died leaving a widow and two daughters. There was no nearer male heir to his estate than the present plaintiff, who undoubtedly would be the reversioner to his estate after the death of his widow and his two daughters. After the death of her husband the widow, Basmuti Kuer, who is the 1st defendant in the suit, executed a usufructuary mortgage in favour of the remaining defendants. That was on the 5th February 1916. Shortly afterwards, viz., on the 30th March 1916, the plaintiff as reversionary heir brought this suit for a declaration that the mortgage deed executed on the 5th February by the widow in favour of the other defendants was forged, fraudulent and without consideration and that the defendant No. 1 had no right to transfer the property left by her deceased husband without any valid necessity.

No fraud was proved at the trial, but the learned Munsif determined that the advance in respect to which the usufructuary mortgage was granted was not entirely for legal necessity but that to the extent of Rs. 300 out of Rs. 800 advanced the mortgage was for legal necessity. The Rs. 300 were advanced to the widow to meet the expenses of the marriage of a younger daughter which, according to her, was at that time under contemplation.

On appeal to the Subordinate Judge he found as a fact that at the time when the money was advanced there had been no negotiations at all with respect to the marriage, that there was no evidence to show that the mortgagee had made any enquiry about the existence of any legal necessity on the part of the widow for executing the mortgage or as to her ability or otherwise to meet the expenses of the contemplated marriage out of the income of the property left to her by her husband, and further he came to the conclusion that even conceding for the sake of argument that there was some negotiation for the marriage at the time, the widow was not justified in contracting debts of this nature for that purpose until the marriage was finally settled, and it appeared at the trial that the daughter for whose contemplated marriage this money was borrowed had not in fact been married at all.

From that decision there is no appeal by the widow, but the mortgagees and others who were joint with him in estate have preferred this appeal and their contention is that the plaintiff, not being the immediate reversioner, is not entitled to maintain a suit for a declaration of this sort, and reliance is placed for that contention on the case of Venkata Narayana Pillay v. Subbammal (1). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a claim by a reversioner between whom and the last male owner other male lives existed, and it was laid down there that in such circumstances the plaintiff was not entitled to sue. In the present case it is admitted that there is no male life between the plaintiff and the last male owner, and whether a reversioner in such circumstances is entitled to sue or not has been the subject of judicial decisions on many previous occasions in the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, and in all these High Courts it has been laid down that only immediate reversioners can bring a suit of this nature either, unless the immediate reversioners are themselves fraudulently colluding with the female heir so that her protection of the estate for the reversioner is gone, or unless the immediate reversioner is herself only the holder of a life estate. In the present case the only lives between the plaintiff and this estate are the lives of the widow and her two daughters and in each of these cases these ladies only take a life-estate. This very question was raised and decided in a carefully considered judgment of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Balgobind v. Ram Kumar (2). The learned Judges in that case, after considering the effect of the decision laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case which I have already referred to, came to the conclusion that the ruling laid down there had no application when the owner dies leaving between himself and the plaintiff only female relations who succeed to his estate taking a life-interest only, and that it was still open in such a case for the next male reversioner to bring a suit of this sort because he was the nearest male reversioner to the full ownership of the estate. Decisions to a similar effect are to be found in Kandasami v. Akkummal (3); Abinash Chandra Mazumdar v. Harinath Shaha (4); and although there is a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Madari v. Malki (5) which decides that a reversioner is not entitled to sue to set aside an alienation made by a Hindu widow when there stand between him and the property other female lives besides that of the widow; still that decision has been dissented from in a later case of the same High Court. That was the case of Raja Dei v. Umei Singh (6).

It would appear, therefore, that there is practically a consensus of opinion in the different High Courts that a reversioner who is not the immediate reversioner, but who is the immediate male reversioner, is entitled to sue for a declaration declaring the invalidity of transfers made by the widow, notwithstanding that there may be other female lives between him and the estate. This was practically the only question raised in this appeal, although it was contended that in the exercise of its discretion the Court ought not in such a case as this to grant the declaration asked for. It seems to me that there is nothing in that contention and once it is admitted that the transfer was not valid as against the reversioner, I think that this was a very proper case in which to make a declaration.

NARAIN SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER PARTABGARH.

Perhaps, I ought to mention that although we were told at the outset that those I have mentioned were the only questions for determination in this appeal, the learned Vakil for the appellants did towards the end of his argument ask us to say that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that an advance made to a Hindu widow for the contemplated marriage of her daughter was not an advance justified by legal necessity. I have already stated what the facts found were, viz., that there was no negotiation for the marriage at the time the advance was made and that certainly no enquiries were made by the mortgagee as to the necessity or otherwise for this advance before the advance was made. It seems to me quite clear that merely because you have a daughter who may, and in all probability will, at some future time be married, that is no reason why the mother should mortgage or alienate the family property merely to raise funds for that marriage, which may or may not—because the child may die or many things may happen—take place at some future date. I am quite satisfied that the learned Judge was quite right as a matter of law in deciding that there was no legal necessity for such a loan. This appeal, in my opinion, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

FOSTER, J.—I agree.

By virtue of certain deeds defendant became entitled to receive an annuity generation after generation out of the profits of certain specified villages from the person in possession of the estate. The holder of the estate subsequently gifted certain other villages to the defendant in consideration of the latter relinquishing his right to the said annuity, on condition that if the gifted villages passed at any time out of the hands of the defendant, he would be entitled to have his right to the annuity restored to him. A subsequent holder of the estate sought to oust the defendant from the gifted villages:

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Tahsil Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, dated the 20th May 1916.

The Hon'ble Syed Wazir Hasan and Syed Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Rai Nagendro Nath Ghoshal Bahadur, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to the villages Latifpur and Baulia, which originally formed part of the Rampur estate and belonged to Raja Hanwant Singh. On the 2nd April 1859 Raja Hanwant Singh executed a deed of gift in respect of his estate, with the exception of certain villages, in favour of his grandson, Raja Rampal Singh. Subsequent to the execution of the said deed of gift certain disputes arose between Raja Hanwant Singh and Raja Rampal Singh which led the former to institute a suit against the latter for the cancellation of the deed of gift. On the 1st September 1871 the two entered into a compromise, the effect of which was that the deed of gift aforesaid was cancelled and the estate was split up into two portions, Kala Kankar and Dharapur; the former was allowed to Raja Hanwant Singh for life without any power of alienation and the latter to Raja Rampal Singh for life in similar terms. The provision made by the compromise was that the former was to go to Raja Rampal Singh on the death of Raja Hanwant Singh for his life in case he survived him, with the remainder to Lachhman Singh and his heirs; and the latter to

NARAIN SINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIONER, PARTABGARH.

Musammat Dirgaj Kunwar on the death of Raja Rampal Singh, in case she survived him, with the remainder to Raja Hanwant Singh, if he survived both of them, or else to Lachhman Singh and his heirs. A decree was passed in terms of the compromise. As a result of the compromise the two villages in question, Latifpur and Baulia, and the three other villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi went to Raja Hanwant Singh and the village Agai went to Raja Rampal Singh.

Subsequently in consideration of some money due by Raja Rampal Singh to Raja Hanwant Singh, Raja Rampal Singh agreed to transfer the village Agai to Raja Hanwant Singh and to allow him full proprietary rights in the three villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi already in his possession. This arrangement was confirmed by an award of Major Hastings dated the 17th March 1873 (Exhibit 115). In pursuance of the award Raja Rampal Singh executed an agreement transferring the village Agai, forming part of the Dharupur sub division, to Raja Hanwant Singh, and allowing him full proprietary rights in the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi, forming part of the Kala Kankar estate, already in his possession (Exhibit A3).

On the 30th August 1873 Raja Hanwant Singh transferred the four villages Agai, Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi by way of gift to his grandsons, Lal Ram Prasad Singh and Narain Singh, sons of Lachhman Singh, subject to the condition that out of the net profits, Rs. 5,000 per year were to go towards the payment of certain annuities, Rs. 810 per year were to be appropriated by the donees for their expenses in a certain fixed proportion, and the remainder was to be spent in the improvement of certain wagf property, which had been previously dedicated. The deed of gift expressly stated that neither of the donees shall have any power to transfer the gifted property (Exhibit 170). On the 18th December 1874 he supplemented the same by executing an agreement, declaring that out of the donees whoever shall be the owner of the Rampur estate shall have a personal right by virtue of that deed in the gifted villages (Exhibit A 17.). The agreement went on to say:—"As a matter of fact he who shall be the heir or representative or adoptee or the owner and representative of the Rampur estate shall be the representative of this property also and the donees or their representatives shall be allowed a deduction out of the income of the gifted property in respect of Court expenses, expenses relating to the visitors of the village and village expenses, e. g., pay of the Zildars and Sipahis appointed." It further said:—"The amount payable annually to Babu Lachhman Singh, Lal Ram Prasad Singh and Babu Narain Singh under the deed executed and registered on the 3rd August 1873 shall be given to all the three persons and their heirs, generation after generation."

Raja Hanwant Singh died in 1831, and was succeeded by Raja Rampal Singh who held the entire estate till his death in 1909. The father of Raja Rampal Singh had been killed in the lifetime of Raja Hanwant Singh. Raja Hanwant Singh had another son, Lachhman Singh, who died in 1888, leaving two sons, Lal Ram Prasad Singh and Narain Singh, in whose favour the deed of gift above mentioned was executed. On the 5th January 1882 Raja Rampal Singh made a gift of the villages Latifpur and Baulia, to which he had succeeded on the death of Raja Hanwant Singh, in favour of Narain Singh in consideration of the latter giving up his share in the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi which were transferred to him by Raja Hanwant Singh on the 30th August 1873 (Exhibit A-180). In these villages Raja Rampal Singh had, however, only a life interest under the compromise of the 1st September 1871. The deed of gift accordingly provided that if for any reason the said villages passed out of the possession of Narain Singh either during the lifetime of the donor or after his death, the former shall be at liberty to take back into his possession the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi in terms of the deed of gift dated the 30th August 1873 executed by Raja Hanwant Singh. A corresponding deed of relinquishment was executed by Narain Singh in favour of Raja Rampal Singh on the 5th January 1882 in respect of the rights held by the former in the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi (Exhibit A-179). Raja Rampal Singh took a similar deed of relinquishment from Lal Ram Prasad Singh in respect of his rights in Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi (Exhibit 216), giving him the villages Andhripur and Raja Kashipur in return (Exhibit A181).

Lal Ram Prasad Singh died in 1901, leaving three sons, the eldest of whom Ramesh Singh died in 1910. He left a son, Audesh Singh, who is in the present possession of the estate. The Court of Wards is in charge of the estate on his behalf. It seeks to oust Narain Singh from the villages Latifpur and Baulia, given to him by Raja Rampal Singh, without returning to him his interest in the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi which he gave in exchange.

The Court below decreed the claim and the only point for consideration is whether the Court of Wards is estopped from impugning the arrangement entered into by Raja Rampal Singh which had the effect of benefiting the estate, and if not, can the arrangement be set aside without the Court of Wards being compelled to restore to the defendant-appellant the benefit which the estate had received from him in exchange.

We do not consider that any question of estoppel arises in this case, because Raja Rampal Singh could not have conferred by the exchange greater rights than he himself possessed. He did not possess more than a life-interest in the villages Latifpur and Baulia. Raja Audesh Singh, whose estate is in charge of the Court of Wards, does not derive his title from Raja Rampal Singh or through him. He claims a title which was conferred on his grandfather, Lachhman Singh, by the compromise.

He cannot, however, be allowed to impugn the arrangement made by Raja Rampal Singh and claim back what the defendant-appellant got by the arrangement without restoring to him what he gave in return. It is necessary, therefore, to enquire what rights the defendant appellant possessed by virtue of the deed of gift executed by Raja Hanwant Singh. The deed was described as a conditional deed and conferred no power on the donees to transfer the whole or any portion of the gifted property. It allowed Lal Ram Prasad Singh, one of the donees, to take Rs. 450 per year and Narain Singh, the other donee, to take Rs. 360 per year for their expenses out of the profits of the property given and required both of them to devote the entire remaining income of the property to the payment of certain annuities and to the improvement of certain property which had been previously dedicated by the donor. In other words, the donees were not given any control over the corpus of the property. They were only allowed to appropriate a fixed portion of its income in consideration of certain obligations and to apply the rest of the income in the manner prescribed by the deed. It may be said that the restraint on alienation imposed by the deed of gift was void by reason of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1922), but it is very doubtful whether the donees carried out the obligations imposed on them and if they did not, the donor had the power to revoke the gift and deal with the property in any other manner he liked.

In fact he executed another deed on the 18th December 1874, in which he recited that he was writing that deed by way of a settlement with the consent of the donees and declared that out of the donees whoever shall be the owner of the Rampur estate shall have a personal right by virtue of that deed in the gifted villages and shall hold those villages subject to a liability to pay to Lachhman Singh, Lal Ram Prasad Singh and Narain Singh and their heirs the amounts assured to them under the deed of the 3rd August 1873, generation after generation. The plaintiff, being the present owner of the Rampur estate and also the representative of one of the donees, is entitled to retain the villages in his possession and management, subject to the right of the defendant-appellant and his heirs, generation after generation, to receive Rs. 360 per year out of the income derivable from those villages. If those villages have been included in any valid trust, the defendant-appellant can receive that amount from the trustees.

The deed of relinquishment executed by the defendant-appellant was unconditional and absolute. The deed of gift executed by Raja Rampal Singh undoubtedly provided that if for any reason the defendant appellant lost possession of the villages Latifpur and Baulia, he shall be at liberty to take back into his possession the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi as before, according to the terms of the deed of gift executed by Raja Hanwant Singh on the 30th August 1873.

PIYARE LAL v. CHAKAR.

But that deed of gift read with the supplementary deed of the 18th December 1874, does not, as shown above, confer on the defendant-appellant, in case the estate passes to the other donee or his heirs, any higher right than that of receiving Rs. 363 per annum generation after generation from the person in possession of the three villages aforesaid. By his consent the defendant-appellant had waived every other right.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff respondent has referred us to our decision in Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh v. Kishan Doyal (1). But in that case the consideration for the grant of a perpetual lease was the relinquishment by the lessees of their office as trustees, which carried certain emoluments. The office was not hereditary; and no question of the restoration of the trusteeship or of the allowances attached thereto could, therefore, arise. In the present case the allowance of Rs. 360 per year was the measure of the benefit, which the defendant-appellant annually received from the profits of the villages. That allowance was hereditary. The supplementary deed extinguished his right to the joint possession of the villages with the other donee, if the other donee became the owner and representative of the Rampur estate. The only benefit which the defendant-appellant is thus entitled to have restored to him is the amount of the said hereditary allowance.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed in so far that the decree passed by the Court below for the possession of the villages Latifpur and Baulia will be subject to the condition that the defendant-appellant will be entitled to the restoration of the hereditary allowance amounting to Rs. 360 per year, to be paid out of the profits of the villages Reoli, Janwaman and Natohi from the date on which the plaintiff takes possession of the villages Latifpur and Baulia. As the plaintiff was not entitled to an unconditional decree, no mesne profits will be allowed to him for the period antecedent to the date of his getting possession. The parties will in the circumstances bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal partly allowed.

The Hon'ble Rai Bahadur Pandit Sheo Narain and Dewan Mahesh Das for the Appellant.

Lala Warir Chand and Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—By deed of the 3rd June 1893 Mubarik, Bakar and Fazil sold some 1,627 kanals of land for Rs. 1,500 to the defendants, Piare Lal and Amir Chand. The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted in April 1914 by the sons of Mubarik and Bakar. No allegations were made by the plaintiffs against the character of the vendors, nor was it suggested that they had effected this sale with the intention of prejudicing the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs contented themselves with a plea that the sale was made without necessity and consideration and that the alienors had no power to alienate. The trial Court has held that the sale of the land, so far as it was effected by Fazil, cannot now be disturbed inasmuch as that sale by Fazil was acquiesced in by Mubarik and Bakar, whose acquiescence binds their sons, the present plaintiffs.

With regard to the sale so far as it affects the shares of Mubarik and Bakar, the lower Court has held that one item of Rs. 300, which appears under the description of earnest money paid in cash and cattle, was never paid and it has given the plaintiffs a decree in respect of two-thirds of the land in dispute, directing that they shall take possession of that area, being the shares sold by Mubarik and Bakar, after their deaths and on payment to the vendees of Rs. 1,042-5-4, this sum being two thirds of Rs. 1,563-8-0 paid by the vendees to the vendors and an earlier mortgagee.

The vendees have appealed to this Court and urged that the plaintiffs' suit should have been dismissed in toto, whilst there is cross-objection on the part of the plaintiffs against the dismissal of their suit as to the share of Fazil in the property sold.

As has been mentioned above, the Court below finds that the vendees appellants in order to acquire this land have paid Rs. 1,563-8-0 in all. The purchase price according to the deed of sale is only Rs. 1,500 and the discrepancy between that price and the price actually paid is due to the circumstance that a portion of the purchase price was left in deposit with the vendees for the redemption of an earlier mortgage, and the vendees found subsequently that the incumbrance upon the property sold to them was of a heavier nature than had been imagined. Consequently before obtaining possession they found it necessary to disburse a larger sum of money than had been retained by them under that specific head at the time of the sale. Thus although the vendees have paid a larger sum than the sale price, the trial Court has rescinded the sale in respect of two-thirds of the area sold, solely on the ground that a sum of Rs. 300 set forth in the deed of sale as part of the sale price had not been paid. We have been taken through the evidence on the subject and as might be expected, after the lapse of so many years we find it very meagre both in quantity and quality and we cannot say that we are thoroughly satisfied that a sum of Rs. 300 was actually paid in advance as set forth in the deed of sale. At the same time we are quite satisfied that the transaction was a bona fide one. A large area of the vendors' land was already under mortgage, and by this sale they retrieved a portion of the mortgaged area and at the same time secured some cash and cattle. Whether they could have made a better bargain than they did is not for us to decide, nor would it be easy at this time to arrive at any precise conclusion. But the fact remains that the sale was effected by all the existing elders of the family and was never challenged for many years. The sale has all the outward appearances of a genuine transaction, and we do not think that it should be rescinded merely because it is doubtful whether the sale price was paid in the details set forth in the sale-deed. It may be that the Rs. 300 shown as earnest money was the usual padding which is rarely absent from any Indian sale deed, or it may be that the uncertainty with regard to the amount which would be found payable to the previous mortgagee induced the parties to show the sale price as Rs. 1,100, although Rs. 1,200 had been decided between the parties, or still more probably this item of Rs. 300 was, by agreement between the vendors and the vendees left to meet the extra sums which it was foreseen would have to be paid to the mortgagee.

For these reasons we see no reason why the sale should not be upheld as a sale, and this will dispose of the cross objection regarding Fazil's share in the land sold. In this connection we may say briefly that had the sale of the shares sold by Mubarik and Bakar not been upheld, we could not have maintained the sale of the share sold by Fazil, for it is obvious that if the action of Mubarik and Bakar in the sale of their own shares was unjustifiable it would follow that their acquiescence in the sale of Fazil's share could not strengthen the position of the vendees in regard to that share. Kesar v. Sundar Singh (1) has been cited to us by the learned Counsel for the respondents, but the facts of that case are distinguishable from those which we are here considering. Moreover, there are many rulings of this Court to the effect that a sale should not be disturbed merely because the payment of an item of consideration set forth in the deed of sale has not been made or because its payment is doubtful, when the consideration even after the deduction of the doubtful item represents a reasonable sale price.

For these reasons we accept the appeal and dismiss the cross-objection, dismissing the suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant on the following allegations and for the following reliefs:—

Allegations.

(a) That on the 1st of June 1909 the Ganges Sugar Works, Ltd., mortgaged certain immoveable property to the plaintiff firm.

(b) That on the same date the plaintiff firm assigned its rights as mortgagee to the Bank of Bengal.

(c) That prior to the 8th June 1917 the plaintiff firm had become entitled to reconveyance and assignment of its mortgagee rights from the Bank of Bengal.

(d) That on the 8th June 1917 the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, in execution of a decree against the plaintiff firm without the consent of that firm, attached the mortgage-debt and on the 17th December 1917 sold the same.

(e) That on the 3rd April 1918 the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore directed the Bank of Bengal to reconvey the mortgagee's title to the auction-purchaser, which was done by the Bank on the 16th May 1918.

(f) That for reasons (not set out) the attachment, sale and order to the Bank of Bengal by the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore were wholly irregular, invalid and inoperative against the plaintiff firm.

Reliefs.

1. A declaration that the plaintiff firm on the 8th June 1917 (the date of attachment) and on the 17th December 1917 (the date of sale) was the sole mortgagee.

2. That all proceedings in connection with the sale be set aside.

3. That the so called assignment by the Bank of Bengal on the 16th May be cancelled.

5. That, if necessary, the Bank of Bengal be ordered to give the plaintiff firm a reconveyance of the mortgage.

5. That the auction-purchaser be directed to deliver up to the plaintiff firm the original indenture of mortgage.

This suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Unao. He returned the plaint on the ground of want of jurisdiction. The learned Subordinate Judge has stated in his judgment that a suit in substance for a declaration that the plaintiff's position as mortgagee was not affected by an alleged illegal attachment and sale by the execution Court would ordinarily, under section 6 (d) of the Code of Civil Procedure, be maintainable in the Court where the mortgaged property was situated, that is to say in Unao, having regard to the definition of immoveable property in the General Clauses Act and to the definition of a simple mortgage in section 58 of the BALDEO DAS KEDAR NATH v. BOMBAY MERCANTILE BANK, LTD.

Transfer of Property Act. But he goes on to hold that, as in this case the execution Court was bound to deal with the mortgage debt as moveable property, a suit questioning the validity of the attachment and sale by that Court must be deemed a suit in respect of moveable property. The appellant's contention is that, although the execution Court had jurisdiction to attach the mortgage debt as moveable property, if it was desired to sell the rights of the mortgagee the decree should have been transferred for execution to the Unao Court where the mortgaged property was situated. The Subordinate Judge's reason for holding that the suit lay at Cawnpore does not seem to be correctly stated. To say that the execution Court had a right to sell the mortgage debt (or mortgagee's rights) is to assume a decision against the appellant of the very point which he desired to be decided by the suit. We are of opinion, however, that the Subordinate Judge's order can be sustained on the ground that the question whether the sale was within the powers of the execution Court was a question arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. Under section 47, therefore, of the Code of Civil Procedure it was a question which had to be decided by the Court executing the decree. This suit, therefore, so far as it calls in question the legality of the execution Court's procedure, was a question that was bound to be brought in the execution Court at Cawnpore under section 47. The language of section 47 is wide enough to include a question as to the jurisdiction of the execution Court and if the execution Court decided that question wrongly, the remedy would be by appeal and not by a separate suit. If the execution Court assumed a jurisdiction which it did not possess, it was open to the appellant to object at some stage or other of the proceedings in that Court and he cannot raise the question before any other Court. It may well be that now that the sale is concluded no remedy whatever is available to the appellant. The appellant's Counsel has attempted to show that section 47 read with Order XXI, Code of Civil Procedure, did not afford him any means of relief in the execution Court.

Whether this is so or not, we are of the opinion that section 47 is a bar to his obtaining his relief elsewhere. It is obvious that if the appellant had no relief whatever, the appellant's Counsel would have no difficulty in showing that he had no relief in the execution Court. But what the lower Court has in effect done, and we consider rightly, is to state that, without going into the question whether the appellant has any relief, that relief, if any, can be obtained from the execution Court or by an appeal from an order of the execution Court and in no other way.

The learned Subordinate Judge has rightly stated that the main relief claimed is the setting aside of the sale. He was justified in ignoring, for the purpose of considering jurisdiction, all merely incidental reliefs or superfluous reliefs or reliefs unmaintainable on the face of them. The first relief for a declaration that the plaintiff firm was sole mortgagee before attachment was obviously unmaintainable. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not enable a declaratory decree to be given in respect of a right at some date previous to suit, especially when the plaint fails to set forth that that right has ever been denied by the defendants. Reliefs 3, 4 and 5 are obviously mere incidental to the setting aside of the sale.

We may notice two arguments of a somewhat dialectical character advanced by the learned Counsel for the appellant against the permissibility of upholding the learned Subordinate Judge's order by invocation of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. He submits that section 47 does not merely prescribe that questions as to the execution of a decree arising between the parties to the decree, or their representatives, "shall be determined by the Court executing the decree," but adds the words "and not by a separate suit". Hence if the case is governed by section 47, the plaintiff's relief was by application and not by the institution of a suit, in the Court executing the decree. The Subordinate Judge could not, therefore, under Order VII, rule 10 (1), of the Code "return the plaint for presentation to the Court in which the suit should have been instituted." To this argument subsection (2) of section 47, which allows the execution Court to treat a proceeding as a suit or a suit as a proceeding, would appear a sufficient answer. The Subordinate Judge was entitled to return the plaint for presentation to the execution Court, as that Court could either treat the plaint as a plaint or as an application. Even, however, apart from sub-section (2) of section 47, we think that Order VII, rule 10 (1), can be construed as giving a Court power to return a plaint for presentation as an application in the Court having jurisdiction to accept it as an application. The remark of Sir W. Scott quoted on page 117 of the 7th edition of Broom's Legal Maxims under the maxim "de minimus non curat lex" appears relevant. "The Court is not bound to a strictness at once harsh and pedantic in the application of Statutes". The second objection is that in ignoring the first relief claimed on the ground that it is devoid of cause of action we are going beyond the question of jurisdiction. This argument appears to ignore that a plaint may under Order VII, rule 10 (1), be returned on the ground of want of jurisdiction at any stage of the suit. There is nothing to prevent a Court ignoring a relief as being based on no shown cause of action and then proceeding to find that the other reliefs are outside its jurisdiction. A third argument is that before a Court returns a plaint for presentation to another Court, it is bound to come to an affirmative decision that the suit is maintainable in some form or other by the other Court. This argument also appears to ignore the force of the words "at any stage" in Order VII, rule 10, of the Code. A Court debarred from entertaining a suit by an express provision of law, such as section 47, is, in our opinion, entitled to return the plaint for presentation to a Court not so debarred without first determining the maintainability of the suit, and should do so when the question of maintainability is one that is likely to be strenuously argued. In such a case it would involve waste of the Court's time to consider the maintainability of the suit, when it could not entertain it if maintainable.

A preliminary objection was raised to the hearing of this appeal before this Bench, on the ground that the appeal had already been argued before a Bench composed of one of us and the Judicial Commissioner. The appellant's Counsel admitted that he could not maintain that the Judicial Commissioner's order that the case be re-heard by a Bench (on the ground that the argument at the previous hearing was insufficient) was illegal. Nor could he maintain that the hearing of the appeal a second time by a Bench of different Judges was contrary to law. He only maintained that it was contrary to expediency and involved a waste of time, as it necessitated Counsel at the second hearing re stating what they had said at first hearing. We are of the opinion that it was within the discretion of the Judicial Commissioner to appoint what Bench he thought fit and that it is not open to us to question his discretion.

Accordingly we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where an arbitrator definitely refuses to act, no matter for what reason, the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application to enforce the agreement to refer the dispute to the arbitration of such arbitrator. [p. 367, col. 2.]

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Pilibhit, dated the 5th June 1918.

Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Messrs. R. K. Malaviya, Iqbal Ahmad and N. Upadhyaya, for the Respondents.

AHMAD NOOR KHAN V. ABDUR RAHMAN KHAN.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of proceedings which were taken in the Court below under the provisions of paragraph 17, clause 1, of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It seems that there was some dispute between the members of two families descended from two brothers, Bala Khan and Ahmad Noor Khan. A suit relating to this dispute was filed in Court and while the suit was proceeding, the parties executed an agreement on the 20th of March 1915 agreeing to refer their dispute to the arbitration of Khan Bahadur Abdur Rahman Khan. The result of the execution of this agreement was that the suit was withdrawn and the arbitrator took upon himself the duty of investigating into and deciding the dispute between the parties. On various dates in the year 1916 the arbitrator examined witnesses and finally the case came up before him again on the 18th of March 1917. On that date he was informed that one of the parties to the dispute, namely, Akhtar ud-Din Khan, had died and it would appear that some application was made to him asking him to send notice to the legal representatives of Akhtar-ud-Din before any further proceedings were taken. The arbitrator sent out some notices and on the 25th of March 1917, he put in writing a definite refusal to go on with the arbitration. He said that as one of the parties to the reference had died, he had no legal authority to make the legal representatives of the deceased party parties to the proceedings. After this he returned the parties their documents and nothing more was done. On the 2nd of November 1917, the present plaintiff appellant filed this application under paragraph 17 of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, asking that the agreement to refer to arbitration might be filed in Court. In other words, the intention of the appellant is that the Court should order the arbitration proceedings to go on as before and should direct the arbitrator to carry out the settlement of this dispute.

The Court below has dismissed the application. It is not necessary for us to examine the various reasons which the Subordinate Judge has given in support of his order. It is sufficient to refer to his finding on the third issue, namely, that by reason of the refusal of the arbitrator to act, the deed of reference has become unenforceable.

If the appellant here cannot succeed in showing us that the finding of fact that the arbitrator refused to act is wrong, then the order of the Court below must be maintained. The learned Counsel for the appellant has not found it possible to argue that this finding of fact is erroneous, nor indeed would it have been easy for him to do so in view of the clear statement made by the arbitrator himself when examined as a witness in the case. In the course of his deposition he stated clearly that he had refused to go on with the arbitration, his reason being that one party to the reference having died, he considered that he had no authority to continue the proceedings. Whether or not the arbitrator was right in supposing that in these circumstances he had not authority to continue to act, is a matter with which we are not concerned. The fact remains that he definitely refused to act and that at the time this application was filed under paragraph 17 his refusal was still in force. It is quite true that in the course of his examination in Court the arbitrator expressed his willingness to resume his functions as arbitrator provided the Court would give him an order to that effect. In the first place, this offer, if it can be treated as an offer, was only qualified. In the next place, we do not think the Court had any jurisdiction to give the arbitrator any direction to carry on. The result, therefore, is that we have before us an application to enforce an agreement to refer a dispute to the arbitration of a gentleman who had already declined to act, and in these circumstances we hold that it would be quite impossible for the plaintiff to have an order such as he sought in the Court below.

Other points are set out in the memorandum of appeal here, but it has been agreed before us that the decision of the point which we have already determined is sufficient to dispose of the appeal. The result therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 90—Presumption as to genuineness of document—Document thirty years old on date of arguments—Presumption, whether applicable.

A Court has a right to presume, under section 90 of the Evidence Act, the genuineness of a document which was not thirty years old either on the date of the suit or on the date of its production, but was thirty years old on the date when arguments were heard.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 16th August 1918, upholding that of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich, dated the 29th June 1918.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Babu Daya Kishen Seth, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The only point of importance in this appeal is whether the Courts below had the right to presume that the sale-deed of the 21st May 1888 was a genuine document which transferred two shops and a house to Imam Bakhsh, the presumption being made under the provisions of section 90 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). I think that they had a right to make this presumption. It is true that at the time when the suit was instituted the document in question was not thirty years old. It is also true that it was not thirty years old at the time of its production, but it was thirty years old when arguments were heard. As the Courts below, according to this finding, had a right to make the presumption, the finding of the learned District Judge to the effect that the two shops and the house were transferred to Imam Bakhsh is a finding of fact, which cannot be impugned in second appeal.

It is argued that the learned District Judge's finding is vitiated because he approached the evidence in the wrong manner. I do not find that he approached the evidence in the wrong manner, and I hold that his finding is a good finding of fact which cannot be impugned. I dismiss the appeal.

With reference to the office report that two declarations were sought, I find that only one declaration was sought and that the Court-fees were correctly calculated in the Courts below. The appellants will pay their own costs and those of the respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXXII, r. 4 (2)—Guardian ad litem—Person appointed guardian who has failed to furnish security, whether can act as guardian ad litem—Minor, representation of.

Where upon the application of a person he is appointed the guardian of a minor conditional on his furnishing security in a specified amount, and he fails to furnish the security, in consequence of which the necessary certificate is not issued to him, he cannot be regarded as a proper guardian ad litem of the minor in a suit and the minor cannot be said to be properly represented in a suit by such person unless the latter is formally appointed guardian ad litem of the minor. Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 5th April 1918, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 28th of July 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Dr. D. N. Mitter (with him Babu Manindro Nath Banerjee), for the Appellant.—My first submission would be that the non-compliance with the Court's order to furnish security is not sufficient to prove that the defendant No. 2 was not a certificated guardian.

BHUTNATH NAG v. SATYA KINKAR NAG.

The fact that security was not asked is not sufficient to prove that the guardian was not appointed.

Referred to section 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

In the plaint defendant No. 2 was described as a certificated guardian and it was not necessary for the Court to appoint a guardian. This Court is to be guided by the Code of 1832, section 443, corresponding to Order XXXII, rule 4, clause (2).

The non-appointment of the defendant No. 2 as the guardian ad litem is at best an irregularity which is curable.

Babu Dwarkanath Ohakaravarty (with him Babu Kalikankar Ohakravarty), for the Respondents.—In the previous suit out of which arose the present suit the defendant No. 2 was not described as a certificated guardian.

The Court below has come to a definite finding of fact that the minor's interest was not protected by the defendant No. 2 and on his non-compliance with the Court's conditional order to furnish security the appointment was a nullity.

Mungniram Marwari v. Gursahai Nand (1).

The non-appointment of defendant No. 2 as a guardian ad litem is an irregularity which is fatal to the trial of the case.

Walian v. Bankey Behari Pershad Singh (2).

No reply was called upon.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration that the decree obtained by the defendant No. 1 in a contribution suit was void and inoperative as against the plaintiffs and that the sale held in execution of that decree was not binding upon them.

In that suit the present plaintiffs were described as minors represented by their certificated guardian, the defendant No. 2. It appears, however, that when the defendant No. 2 applied for certificate of guardianship, the Court ordered that he might be appointed guardian provided he furnished security to the extent of Rs. 2,000. This security was never furnished by defendant No. 2, nor did he ever take out a certificate of guardianship. The defendant No. 2 was not appointed a guardian ad litem. The question is whether under these circumstances the plaintiffs can be said to have been properly represented by defendant No. 2 in that suit.

The Courts below have concurred in answering the question in the negative and the defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court.

Two contentions have been raised in this Court. First, it is contended that the mere fact that security had not been furnished or that the certificate had not been taken out does not go to show that the defendant No. 2 was not the certificated guardian. Reliance has been placed on the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mungniram Marwari v. Gursahai Nand (1).

That case, no doubt, lays down that "when a Court to which application has been made under section 3 of Act XL of 1853 for certificate, has adjudged the applicant entitled to have one, he then substantially obtains it although it may not be drawn up...at the time. Having obtained such an order, he has in substance complied with the terms of the Act in the same way as when a plaintiff has judgment that he shall have a decree in his suit, it may be said that he has then obtained his decree." That case, however, is distinguishable from the present; because in that case the order granting the certificate was not a conditional order. The applicant in that case had done all that was necessary to be done, and all that remained was that a formal certificate appointing him guardian was not drawn up. In the present case the order appointing him was conditional upon his furnishing security to the extent of Rs. 2,000. This was not given by the defendant No. 2 and, therefore, the certificate could not be issued to him.

The next contention is that although there was not formal order appointing the defendant No. 2 guardian ad litem, it was merely an irregularity because the defendant No. 2 appeared in the proceedings as guardian of the minors. We are referred to the case of Walian v. Bankey Behari Pershad Singh (2), where it is pointed out that under section 443, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), the Court is bound after satisfying itself of the fact of minority to appoint a proper person to act on behalf of a minor in the conduct of a suit; and this rule should be strictly followed, but where the Court by its action has given its sanction to the appearance of a person as such a guardian, the absence of a formal order of appointment is not necessarily fatal to the proceedings. But in that case the mother of the minor defendants appeared throughout the proceedings in the suit as their guardian, the Court admitted the plaint in which she was described as guardian, and in the decree and execution proceedings the Court so described her and although no formal order appointing her guardian ad litem was drawn up, it was held that the minors were effectively represented in the suit by their mother and with the sanction of the Court. The absence of formal order in that case appointing her guardian ad litem was merely an irregularity of procedure, as there was nothing to suggest that the interests of the minors were not duly protected; the defect in the procedure did not prejudice them and, therefore, the error was not fatal to the suit.

In the present case, however, it has been clearly found by the Courts below that the minors had been seriously prejudiced, that the defendant No. 2 did not protect the interests of the minors, that he was under the influence of defendant No. 1, that property worth Rs. 1,000 had been sold only for Rs. 50 and that even assuming that the decree-holder took over the liability of paying the debts to the extent of Rs. 350, it does not appear that the minors were liable for that debt. It is further found that in the rent suit brought by the Maharaja of Burdwan against the defendant No. 1 and the plaintiffs, there was also the same defect. As a matter of fact the plaintiffs in that suit were described as minors represented by defendant No. 2 as their guardian (and not as certificated guardian). The learned District Judge points out that the contribution suit would have been dismissed as against the minors had the guardian of the present plaintiffs taken any appropriate defence. Having regard to the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court that the interests of the minors were not protected, we think that the non-compliance with the provision of the Code cannot be treated in the way we are asked to do on behalf of the appellant, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil revision against the order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Meerut, dated the 9th December 1918.

Mr. Kailas Chandra Maithal, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This application has been argued ex parte; no one appears for the defendants opposite parties. The suit as framed was a suit for contribution, the case for the plaintiff being that he and the defendants had been co-defendants in a partition suit. In that partition suit a decree for costs was passed against all of the defendants and in favour of the plaintiffs. The decree for costs was a joint decree and the result was that execution was taken out against the present plaintiff, who was obliged to pay the entire costs awarded by the decree. The suit with which I am now concerned has, therefore, been brought against the remaining defendants for the purpose of obtaining contribution. The Judge of the Court below has relied upon a ruling reported as Mulla v. Jagannath (1), which does not, in my opinion, govern the facts of this case. There is a ruling reported as Nihal Singh v. Collector of Bulandshahr (2), which seems to me to be in point. Applying the principle laid down in this latter ruling I hold that the plaintiff here was entitled to maintain the suit for contribution. It may also be observed here that the defendants did not in their written statement of defence raise any plea to the JUDGMENT.—In this appeal the plaintiff appeals from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur dismissing his suit to enforce his alleged right of pre-emption in respect of ten villages, of which nine are alleged to be in a mahal called Bhadaian and one (G. eshaou Kachanti) in a mahal called Fazilpur. The counsel for the appellant during the course of arguing this appeal has withdrawn the appellant's claim to preempt the last named village. Consequently in this appeal we are not concerned with that village or with mahal Fazilpur and may disregard the evidence and the portions of the judgment of the lower Court dealing therewith. The vendor in this case is the 2nd defendant Musammatt Raj Bibi. The villages in question formerly belonged to one Sheodat Bahadur Singh, who was a taluqdar. On the 11th January 1904 he mortgaged them to the plaintiff and again on the 15th April 1905 to the defendant No. 2. Then on the 4th September 1905 he executed a deed of further charge in respect of these villages in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant No. 2 brought a suit on the basis of her mortgage, obtained a decree, and when the villages were sold in execution thereof, herself purchased them subject to the two mortgages in favour of the plaintiff. Being unable to redeem these two mortgages, she executed on the 17th May 1915 what purports to be a sale deed in favour of defendant No. 1, without giving to the plaintiff the notice required by section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876.) Accordingly the plaintiff has brought this suit to enforce his right of pre-emption on the ground that no due notice was given to him as required by the said section 10, this being ground (1) mentioned in section 13 of the Act for the bringing of a pre-emption suit. The plaintiff in his plaint has claimed a right to acquire the property in preference to the defendant No. 1, on the ground that he is a co-sharer of the mahal Bhadaian by reason of the purchase, previous to the sale deed mentioned above, of three villages Bansari, Sukarsi and Amari situated in mahal Bhadaian, it being alleged that the defendant No. 1 is a mere stranger, which means that he is not one of the persons mentioned in section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act. The defendants resisted the claim on the following grounds:—

(a) that the so-called mahal Bhadaian was not a mahal within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act,

(b) that the deed of the 17th May 1915 contained provisions in it inconsistent with its being regarded as a mere deed of sale and consequently the proposal to execute this deed did not give rise to any necessity of giving notice, nor did the transfer by this deed amount to a sale,

(c) that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree for pre-emption, because prior to the suit defendant No. 1 had become a co-sharer in the mahal Bhadaian (assuming it to be a mahal) under a deed of exchange dated the 9th April 1916, and deeds of gift of that date and of the 13th April 1916,

(d) that the purchase by the plaintiff of the village Amari did not make the plaintiff a co-sharer in the mahal Bhadaian (assuming it to be a mahal).

The defendants also claimed that should the plaintiff be given a decree for pre-emption, he should be required to pay the costs hitherto incurred by the defendant No. 1 in instituting a suit against the plaintiff for redemption of the plaintiff's mortgage.

The learned Subordinate Judge found on defence plea (a) that there was no mahal Bhadaian within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act; on defence plea (b) that the deed of 17th May 1915 was not a mere sale-deed but that part of the consideration for the transfer was the promise of the vendee to do certain things which could not be done by the plaintiff if substituted as vendee; on defence plea (c) that the defendant No. 1 had become a co-sharer in the alleged mahal subsequent to the deed of sale of the 17th May 1915 but before the date of suit and that this put the defendant No. 1 on the same level with the plaintiff, so that the right to the property would depend on the drawing of lots under the last provision of section 9; and on defence plea (d), that the purchase of Amari did not help the plaintiff as it was subsequent to the deed of sale of 17th May 1915 but that the plaintiff was a co-sharer by reason of his purchases of the villages of Sakarsi and Bansari.

In argument in this appeal it is not denied by the respondents that the plaintiff would be a co-sharer of mahal Bhadaian if the local area called mahal Bhadaian can be said to be a mahal within the meaning of section 9, nor is it denied that the nine villages are also within that area. The questions then that arise for our decision are as follows:—

1. At the date of the sale in question, was the so-called mahal Bhadaian a mahal within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act?

2. Assuming the existence of such a mahal, did not the failure of the defendant No. 2 to give notice to the plaintiff of her intention to execute the deed of 17th May 1915 and her execution of that deed create a right of pre-emption on the part of the plaintiff?

3. Has the fact of the defendant No. 1 acquiring the position of co-sharer in the so-called mahal Bhadaian subsequent to the deed of 17th May 1915 but previous to the date of suit put the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 on a level and thus necessitated the casting of lots to determine who shall have the villages?

4. If the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for pre-emption, on what terms should he get it, and should he be required to re-pay the defendant No. 1 such costs as he has incurred in bringing the pending redemption suit against the plaintiff?

As regards the first question the plaintiff's contention is that the mahal Bhadaian is what is called a taluqdari mahal. To prove the coming into existence of such a mahal and its present existence he relies on certain exhibits and certain provisions of the law. Plaintiff's Exhibit 60 is a copy of a sanad of the year 1858 granted by the Chief Commissioner to two persons, Kamta Prasad and Bishnath Singh. This sanad is printed on page 200 of the appellant's paper-book. It confers on the persons mentioned the right and title and possession of the estate of Bhadaian consisting of villages stated in a list attached to the sanad. The sanad is incomplete, as this list of villages is not forthcoming. The plaintiff-appellant says that the list has been accidentally torn off or destroyed. The next document is a kabuliat dated the 1st December 1872, Exhibit 8. That is the date of the first regular settlement. In this the aforesaid Kamta Prasad and Bishnath Singh, who are described as taluqdars of ilaka Bhadaian comprising villages mentioned "on the back of this kabuliat," accept a revenue of Rs. 22,240. This document is also incomplete and does not show the villages. The next document is a kabuliat of the 19th October 1897, Exhibit 5, (referring to the recent settlement) by which Bishnath Singh described as taluqdar and lambardar of the mahal Bhadaian agrees to pay a revenue of Rs. 10,265 for 27 villages. The heading of the document shows that this agreement refers to "Bhadaian". Among the 27 villages mentioned Bhadaian village (not to be confused with Bhadaian mahal) is the sixth, Bansari the seventh and Sukarsi the nineteenth. Exhibit A68 and Exhibit 6 given on pages 197 and 198 of the appellant's paper-book are extracts from the copy of the register of villages comprised in the mahal Bhadaian. Pages 235 to 283 are the assessment statements of the various villages of the Bhadaian mahal. The mahal is described in each village as Bhadaian Bishnath Singh. Exhibits A24, etc., on pages 456 to 463 are certified copies of the Patwari's khewats for the year 1321 Fasli—1914—in respect of the villages forming the mahal Bhadaian. The headings of the jamabandis have also been produced as exhibits and are given on pages 309 and 310 of the appellant's paper-book. On pages 466 to 476 are the khatauni jamabandis. The most important paper is Exhibit A21, which is a report of the Tahsildar in a mutation case. It appears that the Government claimed to take the taluqa Bhadaian under direct management owing to non-payment of the revenue. This report is on page 313 of the appellant's paper-book and is dated the 27th July 1905. It explains that the taluqa of Babu Sheodat Bahadur Singh contains three mahals and that one of them is mahal Bhadaian, and goes on to state that the demand against each mahal is joint but the liability is confined to the revenue for each mahal and is not joint for the whole taluqa. At this date then there existed a Bhadaian taluqa, a Bhadaian mahal, part of Bhadaian taluqa, and a Bhadaian village, part of Bhadaian mahal. Exhibit A23 dated the 4th September 1905 on page 315 of the appellant's paper-book shows that the three mahals were taken under direct management. It appears to us that it is impossible to deny the existence of a mahal Bhadaian from the last settlement, even if it be held that the state of the documents produced before then is not such as to prove the existence of a mahal Bhadaian consisting of the villages now comprised in it at an earlier date. It is also clear that there is a joint liability for revenue extending over all the villages in this mahal. At the same time there is no evidence that any separate Record of Rights was ever in existence for this mahal. The Record of Rights consists of two registers—the khewat is the register of the proprietors who pay revenue, the khatauni is the register of actual cultivators of the ground. The khewats and khataunis of this mahal are drawn up for each village in it and not for the whole mahal. It appears to be agreed by both parties that in the case of a taluqdari mahal which consists of a great number of villages, it has never been the practice to draw up a single Record of Rights, that is to say, a single khewat or khatauni in respect of the whole mahal. The contention of the respondent's Counsel is that there can be no mahal within the meaning of section 9 unless the whole mahal has got a separate khewat and a khatauni. He would urge that if a taluqdari mahal never had such a separate Record of Rights, then section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act cannot be deemed to contemplate a taluqdari mahal as a mahal at all. He relies on the ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Sheoraj Kunwar v. Harihar Bakhsh Singh (1), as authority for the proposition that no area can be a mahal within the meaning of section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act unless for that area a separate Record of Rights is prepared. On pages 362 and 363* of that ruling a passage from Mr. Chamier's judgment is quoted. That passage is as follows:—

"Chapter V of the Revenue Act of 1876 shows that the word 'mahal' means any parcel or parcels of land which have been separately assessed to or are held under a separate engagement for the revenue and for which a separate Record of Rights has been prepared, and this is the sense in which the word has been used by Revenue and Judicial Officers since the first regular settlement of the province. See Thomason's Directions to Revenue Officers, which was the guide-book of officers engaged in that settlement Each mauza or village is as a general rule a separate mahal but a mahal may consist of two or more mauzas, or parts of mauzas or only a portion of one mauza. It is clear that the villages assigned to Uman Prasad did not form a separate mahal in the ordinary sense. The kabuliat of the taluqa in which they are included, a copy of which is on the record, shows that each village in the taluqa was separately assessed to revenue, and that the taluqdar entered into one engagement for the payment of the revenue on all the villages. The whole taluqa is, therefore, what is called in the Act, a taluqdari mahal, consisting of a large number of villages, each of which is separately assessed to revenue and may be regarded as an inferior mahal (see section 100 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1876). The plaintiff is certainly not a co-sharer in the taluqdari mahal for the taluqdar has no co sharer. Nor, as I have already pointed out, is the plaintiff a co-sharer in any of the inferior mahals just referred to of which the taluqa is made up."

After this quotation the judgment runs.—

"Their Lordships think that the meaning which Mr. Chamier has attributed to the term 'mahal' is the proper meaning of the word in the Oudh Laws Act, 1876, and that although Gadadhar and Ganesh may have been jointly liable to the taluqdar for the Government revenue plus malikana, as the rent of villages and pattis assigned to Bishe-shar and Uman under the compromise of 1854, Gadadhar and Ganesh were not at the date of the sale to Harihar co sharers in any sub division of the tenure in which the property in question was comprised or in the whole mahal."

The appellant's Counsel has argued that Mr. Chamier's definition of mahal is incorrect, so far as it requires that a mahal should have a separate Record of Rights. He has taken us through Chapter V of the Oudh Revenue Act of 1876 and through Thomason's Directions to Revenue Officers and shown that in neither is there any mention of such a necessity. He also points out that the term "Record of Rights" was never used in the Oudh Revenue Act of 1876. There appears to be much force in his contention that, if the Legislature when enacting the Oudh Revenue Act of 1876 had thought the definition of mahal given in the Agra Revenue Act of 1873 applicable to Oudh, it would certainly have incorporated that definition inasmuch as in the latter Act it incorporated several definitions of the earlier Act. He indeed suggests that Mr. Chamier's definition was due to an altogether unjustifiable reference to Acts and rulings applicable only to Agra. In order to understand the scope and meaning of their Lordships' remarks it is necessary to explain that in the case of Sheoraj Kunwar v. Harihar Bakhsh Singh (1) two under-proprietors had claimed a right of pre-emption on the ground that the taluqdar had made a private agreement with them whereby they should be jointly responsible for the payment of rent to the taluqdar in respect of the separate areas over which they were individually under-proprietors. They claimed that their joint responsibility for rent to the taluqdar in respect of these areas had the effect of making them co sharers in a mahal consisting of these areas. They also appear to have maintained alternatively that by reason of being under proprietors in certain villages in a taluqa they were entitled to be regarded as co-sharers of the taluqdari mahal. Mr. Wells, one of the Judicial Commissioners, had agreed to the first contention. It was rejected by Mr. (now Sir Edward) Chamier, who held that no arrangement between the under-proprietors and the taluqdar could have the effect of creating a mahal and that it was necessary that at the time of settlement the Settlement Officer should himself have indicated his intention to form an area into a mahal by assessing it as a single unit for the payment of the revenue to the taluqdar, for which the under proprietors of the several portions should be jointly liable. Mr. Chamier called the revenue payable by an under-proprietor to the taluqdar rent, but as pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council, an under-proprietor's rent is his share of revenue plus something extra, called malikana. Now it was not necessary for their Lordships to hold more than the correctness of Mr. Chamier's view as just stated, and it appears to us that the last part of the long sentence in which their Lordships approved of Mr. Chamier's view indicates that this was all that their Lordships thought it necessary to approve. We should not, therefore, feel bound by Mr. Chamier's definition of a mahal even so far as that definition applied to mahals other than taluqdari mahals. We feel still less bound by it in respect of a taluqdari mahal. Mr. Chamier in the same judgment from which the passage is quoted by their Lordships states: "The kabuliat of the taluqa shows that each village in the taluqa was separately assessed to revenue and that the taluqdar entered into one engagement for the payment of the revenue on all the villages. The whole taluqa is, therefore, what is called in the Revenue Act a taluqdari mahal, consisting of a large number of villages each of which is separately assessed to revenue and may be regarded as an inferior mahal." Later on he says that the fact that each village has been separately assessed to revenue is a fact which points to each village being a separate mahal. It is impossible to doubt that Mr. Chamier must have known that in Oudh a separate khewat, etc., was not drawn up for a taluqdari mahal but only for the individual villages. He cannot have intended his definition to apply to a taluqdari mahal, though he did intend it to apply to an under proprietary mahal. When the Oudh Land Revenue Act of 1876 and the Agra Land Revenue Act of 1873 were replaced by a single Revenue Act for Agra and Oudh in 1901, the definition of mahal as it existed in the Agra Act (which was substantially the same as Mr. Chamier's definition) was changed and it was distinctly provided that, where a local area was held under separate engagement for the payment of land revenue and consisted of two or more villages, it would only be necessary that a separate Record of Rights had been framed for each of the component villages. In our opinion this provision was necessary in order to meet the circumstances of Oudh and in particular the circumstances of a taluqdari mahal. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the ruling relied on by the Subordinate Judge does not compel us to hold that Bhadaian was not a mahal merely because a single Record of Rights, i. e., khewat, had not been prepared in respect of the whole area. The proposition of the respondent's Counsel that section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act, when speaking of a mahal, did not contemplate a taluqdari mahal has not been supported by anything but mere conjecture. Section 100 (a) of the Oudh Land Revenue Act of 1876 speaks of a taluqdari mahal, and the Oudh Laws Act was passed in the same year. It is impossible, therefore, to suppose that when section 9 of the latter Act was drafted, the Legislature in using the term 'mahal' did not have in mind a taluqdari mahal. In the Privy Council case referred to both Mr. Evans and Mr. Chamier assumed that a taluqdari mahal was a mahal contemplated by section 9 of the Oudh Laws Act. Consequently we are of opinion that at the date of the deed of 17th May 1915 Bhadaian was a mahal, that the plaintiff was a co sharer of it and that the nine villages in dispute in this appeal were villages comprised within that mahal.

As to question No. 2 the learned Subordinate Judge has taken up the position that because the sale-deed left all but Rs. 5,000 of the total consideration money stated, namely Rs. 1,45,000, in the hands of the vendee and provided that the vendee was to redeem the plaintiff's mortgage as economically as possible, the deed was something other than a sale. The Subordinate Judge has stated that if he granted the suit, he would have to substitute a foe for a friend and would have to leave the plaintiff to fight out the case against himself. In our opinion there is no provision in the deed of 17th May 1915 calculated to take it out of the category of a sale-deed. The fact that if the plaintiff's claim is decreed, a redemption suit will be unnecessary cannot, in our opinion, affect the nature of the transaction as it appears from the deed. Indeed as the appellant has given up all claim for pre-empting the village of Ganeshpur, it will still be necessary for the defendant No. 1 to redeem that village and in so doing he can question the amount of mortgage money claimed by the plaintiff. It has also been urged that the sale-deed of 17th May 1915 contains a statement as follows:—"The said vendee shall be entitled to all the sums of money and rights arising from the deed of 15th April 1905 against Babu Sheodat Bahadur Singh, his heirs, successors, transferees and prior or subsequent creditors." It is said that this provision means that the vendee was to get something more than the villages in suit, and it is suggested that he was to get some cause of action in addition to them. The Counsel for the appellant, however, has not been able to show us that this paragraph in the sale-deed meant more than that the vendee was to get the villages specified. The object of this statement in the deed of 17th May 1915 is nothing more than to refer back to the title-deed of the vendor. Again it is urged that the sale-deed is signed by the husband of Musammatt Raj Bibi as well as by herself. It does not appear, however, that the husband had any interest in the property sold. The respondent's Counsel also argues that it will be impossible to put the plaintiff in the same position as the vendee and indeed impossible to give a decree for pre-emption on any specific sum. His argument is that the equity of redemption alone was sold by Musammatt Raj Bibi and that she has sold it for a sum which cannot be ascertained until after the completion of the redemption suit referred to in the deed. The deed in effect provides that she is to get Rs. 5,000 as shall not be expended on the redemption suit unless more than Rs. 1,45,000 shall be spent on the redemption suit, in which case she will have to return out of the Rs. 5,000 any excess sum so spent. We are asked how it can be possible to say that the plaintiff, who is the mortgagee of the property, should pay. It may be remarked that the deed does not purport to sell only the equity of redemption. It purports to sell, as is a very common practice in this country, the whole property and to leave the vendee with funds to redeem. In reality, however, only the equity of redemption passed, as that was all that remained to the vendor. The price of this equity of redemption was Rs. 5,000 more or less, more if the cost of redemption fell short of Rs. 1,45,000 and less if the cost of redemption exceeded that sum. This clearly meant that the parties estimated the value of the equity of redemption, so far as it could be ascertained at the time of executing the deed, at Rs. 5,000. We see no reason to doubt that this is as near the market value of the equity of redemption as could be ascertained. As in the event of the plaintiff being given a decree for pre-emption it will not be possible to determine precisely the value of the equity of redemption by waiting to see the cost of redeeming, we are thrown back on estimating the actual market value of the equity of redemption at the date of the deed of sale. The defendants cannot complain if we adopt the figure which they themselves adopted.

It is convenient here to deal with question No. 4. If the vendee defendant No. 1 had seen that the provisions of section 10 of the Oudh Laws Act were complied with and notice given, he would not have spent any money on the unnecessary institution of a redemption suit. Indeed there is strong reason to hold that the vendor's failure to give notice to the plaintiff was not merely with the concurrence of the vendee but at his instigation. In our opinion the vendee cannot take advantage of his own negligence or wrong-doing and is not, therefore, entitled to recover any sum spent by him on the redemption suit up to date.

As to the third question whether the vendee can resist the plaintiff's claim to pre-empt on the ground that he, the vendee, has since the sale of 17th May 1915 acquired an interest in the mahal Bhadaian by the transactions referred to above, we find that there has been some divergence of opinion prevailing in this Court on the legal question involved. We would refer to the cases of Onkar Singh v. Bhagwan Dat Singh (2), Ratan v. Ram Niwaz (3), Manna Singh v. Bihari Singh (4), Sitla Bakhsh Singh v. Jagdat (5) and Jagan Nath Singh v. Mata Prasad (6). These rulings deal also with the question whether a pre-emptor loses his right by ceasing to become a co-sharer at a date subsequent to the sale on which his claim is based. A similar divergence of opinion appears to have obtained in the Chief (now High) Court of the Punjab, where a pre-emption enactment on similar lines to that obtaining in Oudh is in force. We would refer to the cases of Sanwal Das v. Gur Parshad (7) and Dhanna Singh v. Gurbakhsh Singh (8). The balance of opinion appears to be against the view that a pre-emptor loses his right by reason of the vendee becoming a co-sharer before the pre-emption suit is brought in favour of the view that he loses his right by himself ceasing to be co-sharer before the suit is brought. These questions, so far as Oudh is concerned, must be decided solely with reference to the language of Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876).

The relevant portions of Chapter II are as follows:—

Section 6 runs as follows:—The right of pre-emption is a right of the persons hereinafter mentioned or referred to, to acquire, in the cases hereinafter specified, immoveable property in preference to all other persons.

Section 7 enacts that there shall be a presumption of the right of pre-emption in all village communities.

Section 9 sets forth in order the persons entitled to the right.

Section 10 runs as follows:—When any person proposes to sell any property in respect of which any persons have a right of pre-emption, he shall give notice to the persons concerned of the price at which he is willing to sell such property.

Such notice shall be given through the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property or any part thereof is situate, and shall be deemed sufficiently given if it be stuck up on the chaupal or other public place of the village or city in which the property is situate.

Section 11 runs as follows:—Any person having a right of pre-emption in respect of any property proposed to be sold shall lose such right, unless within three months from the date of such notice he or his agent pays or tenders the price aforesaid to the person so proposing to sell.

Section 13 provides that a person entitled to a right of pre-emption may bring a suit to enforce such right on any of the following grounds:—

(a) that no due notice was given as required by section 10;

(b) that tender was made under section 11 or section 12 and refused;

(c) in the case of sale, that the price stated in the notice was not fixed in good faith.

Section 14 runs as follows:—If the Court finds for the plaintiff, the decree shall specify a day on or before which the purchase-money or the amount to be paid to the mortgagee shall be paid.

To clear the ground, we may point out that the provision about giving a general notice contained in sections 10 and 11 in one respect favours the pre-emptor and in another respect is unfavourable to him. If notice is not given, he is under no obligation to tender the money until he has got a decree for pre-emption. On the other hand if notice is given, he loses his right of pre-emption unless he tenders

the price within three months. The provision about notice appears otherwise to have no effect on the relation between the parties. We construe this chapter to mean that the persons, who in section 9 are described in a proleptic or anticipatory sense as having a right of pre-emption, are invested with an actual right to pre-empt as soon as a sale to a stranger takes place. In other words, up to the date of sale the pre-emptor has merely the right to be preferred, which is a potential or imperfect right. This potential right gives place, on the happening of the sale to a stranger, to an actual or perfect right to be substituted for the vendee. We are unable to understand how such an actual right can be defeated by any act of the vendee after the right has accrued. It is to be noted that section 14 makes no exception and allows no discretion. If the Court finds for the plaintiff, a decree must be given. In this respect and also because the decree is to enforce a statutory right that has accrued and not a contract, the case of specific performance is not analogous. Again it is a fundamental principle of law that a person cannot take advantage of his own wrong-doing. A purchaser who purchases property, without ascertaining that it has been offered first to a person having a preferential right of purchase, is assisting the vendor in evading his obligation to give notice under Chapter II of the Oudh Laws Act. If then such a purchaser might by subsequent purchase plead that his first purchase was unassailable, the law would be permitting him to benefit by his own wrong-doing. Our conclusion, therefore, is fortified by the principle mentioned. In this case it may be mentioned that, to prove himself now a co-sharer, the respondent vendee is relying on two transactions of a very colourable nature. In one he got a lady who owns land in the village of Bhadaian to exchange 4 bighas odd with him: in another the same lady has made a gift to him of one share out of 2,304 shares in the village Bhadaian. These two deeds, which are Exhibits A1 and A3 dated both the 9th April 1916 and printed on pages 100 and 102 of the respondents' paper book, need only to be read and it will be seen that the transactions were merely entered into for the purpose of this particular case. On grounds of public policy it seems most undesirable that a pre-emptor, who had gone to the expense of taking all the steps necessary for bringing a suit for pre-emption, should lose his trouble and money at the eleventh hour by reason of a purchase by the vendee of a few yards of land in the mahal in question.

In accordance with these findings we grant the appeal and allow the plaintiff's claim with costs in both Courts against defendant No. 1. The form of the decree will be that, if the plaintiff pays to the vendee within three months Rs. 5,000 less Rs. 1,300=Rs. 3,700, the proportionate value of the excepted village Ganeshpur Kaithauli, he will be put in possession of the nine villages in the Bhadaian mahal in suit. If he fails to deposit this sum within the three months' time specified, the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout to the defendants.

Appeal allowed.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 915
OF 1918.

JAGIR PRAMANIK—PLAINTIFF—

versus

SUBID MOLLA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Gift subject to condition which derogates from grant, validity of—Condition to maintain donor, whether makes gift inoperative—Musha, doctrine of, applicability of.

Under the Muhammadan Law where a gift is made subject to a condition which derogates completely from the grant, the condition is void and the gift takes effect as if no condition is attached to it. [p. 380, col. 2.]

A hebanona containing a condition in the nature of a trust to maintain the donor during her life does not make the gift inoperative. [p. 380, col. 2.]

Where a hebanama purports to give one-half of certain plots of land, there is no likelihood of any confusion being created, and the gift does not come within the mischief of the rule of musha. [p. 380, col. 1.]

JAGIR PRAMANIK v. SUBID MOLLA.

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Pabna, dated the 21st January 1918, modifying that of the Munsif, Additional Court at Pabna, dated the 14th of August 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra, for the Appellant.—There is no dispute that the plaintiff is an heir of Katu Bewa, who executed the hebanama. The lower Appellate Court has held that as the hebanama did not indicate which part of the properties the lady wanted to give away, the matter came under the rule of musha. I submit that the learned Judge is in error, regard being had to the circumstances of the case. The rule of musha cannot affect the present case at all. How could the plaintiff prove that he tilled half of the lands in his personal capacity after the hebanama as he tilled these lands before the death of the lady and after the execution of the deed? How could he show that he was tilling the land for himself and not for both? The whole thing depends upon the intention as disclosed by the hebanama and the attendant circumstances. The plaintiff is entitled to the whole of the land in Schedule kha under the deed of gift and as heir to half of the remaining lands in Schedule ka. The evidence of possession is in favour of the plaintiff. He has been possessing the land for a considerable length of time. There is no indefiniteness about the gift by the lady as her own conduct is clear on the point.

The point taken by the other side that inasmuch as the gift is a conditional gift it is inoperative, is untenable. Refers to Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Fatima Bibi (1).

Babu Dinesh Ohandra Roy, for the Respondents.—The hebanama cannot take effect on account of indefiniteness. There is no specific mention in the deed as to which portion of the property the plaintiff is to take. Moreover, the plaintiff has not been able to prove the nature of his possession, —was it on behalf of himself or for himself and also the lady? There was a condition in the deed which makes it ineffectual. There is also a condition in the document in the nature of trust to maintain the lady during life.

Babu Krishna Kamal Moitra briefly replied.

JUDGMENT.—The questions before us arise out of a hebanama by a Muhammadan lady named Katu Bewa. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the plaintiff has failed to prove that he is the sole heir of Katu Bewa. Having regard to that, it has been rightly held that the plaintiff is entitled to 8 annas of the property mentioned in Schedule ka. The other 8 annas, therefore, is to go to the defendants.

With regard to the deed of gift, he agrees with the learned Munsif that it was duly executed and that the donor intended to give the plaintiff the quantity of land mentioned in the deed. But he held that as the deed of gift did not show which portion she intended to give away, the matter came within the mischief of the rule of Musha. It is, however, to be noticed that the deed purports to give half of the quantity of land mentioned therein. In one plot reference is made to 5 cottas only. But it appears from the evidence that that 5 cottas is half of the 10 cottas which was owned by the lady, the plot being one bigha. It has also been found that the plaintiff was brought into the house of Katu Bewa, some years before her death, that he used to cultivate all her lands during her lifetime. The heba was executed in Kartik 1321. So during these several years the plaintiff lived with her in the same house and cultivated all her lands. The lady died in Pous 1321, shortly after the execution and the registration of the hebanama. The learned Subordinate Judge finds that the same state of things continued up to the death of the lady and he, therefore, thinks that as there is no evidence of change in the character of possession, the rule of Musha affects the gift and that the plaintiff is not entitled to the quantity of land given to him by the lady. We find, however, that the plaintiff immediately after the death of this lady paid rent of the land to the landlord. It was a payment by him. No doubt the lady paid rent of the earlier period. We think it is absolutely impossible for any man in the position of the plaintiff to prove that he was cultivating half of the land in his personal capacity after the deed, as his was the hand which titled these lands before the death of the lady and he continued to till the lands after the execution of the deed. How was he to show that he was tilling the land for himself and not for both, or that he was tilling one portion for himself and the other portion for the lady? The period between the execution of the document and the death of the lady being a very short one, it was very difficult for the plaintiff to give any further evidence than what he has given. We are unable to accept the inference drawn from that by the learned Subordinate Judge. There was clearly an intention to give. The man was living with her for a considerable number of years. He was looking after her and she died shortly after the execution of the documents, and we think it is fair to infer from these circumstances that when there was an intention to give, full effect was given to that intention by the lady, and the fact that he tilled the land ought to be taken in his favour and not against him. A liberal interpretation has to be given, having regard to the decisions of the Privy Council, of gifts of this character, and we think that it would be doing great injustice to the plaintiff if we held, there being clear evidence of acts of possession being exercised by the plaintiff on his own behalf, that the deed was ineffectual. We think the evidence of possession ought to be construed in favour of the plaintiff and effect given to the deed. Having regard to the fact that the document purported to give one-half of certain plots, we do not think that there is likelihood of any confusion being created. It is not a gift of small quantities of land out of a larger quantity and, therefore, difficult to ascertain. There is no difficulty in ascertaining the half and we do not think that it matters much whether the right half or the left half was given. Regard ought also to be had to the nature of the defence in this case, namely, that the document was not properly executed and various other grounds taken of that character which have all failed.

(1) 12 I. A. 159; 8 A. 39 (P. C.); 4 Sar. P. C. J. 670.

We think that the gift ought to be upheld and the plaintiff is declared entitled to the whole of the land in Schedule kha under the deed of gift and as heir to half of the remaining lands in Schedule ka.

With regard to mesne profits it is conceded that the plaintiff is entitled to mesne profits of the portion of which he was kept out of possession, that is, the 16 annas of Schedule kha.

A point was also taken that the gift was a conditional gift and is, therefore, inoperative. But the Muhammadan Law as it stands is this, that when a gift is made subject to a condition which derogates completely from the grant, the condition is void and the gift will take effect as if no condition is attached to it. See Baillie's Muhammadan Law, 547, and the case of Muhammad Abdul Majid v. Fatima Bibi (1). There is also a condition in the document in the nature of a trust to maintain the lady during her life. That does not make the gift inoperative. In one portion of the document the lady speaks of an immediate gift and in another portion of the gift she says that she would have "power to possess during her lifetime." But the earlier portion is the operative portion by which an immediate gift was made, and in the later portion she wanted to say that if the conditions were not fulfilled she would claim to take the property back herself. Therefore, from every point of view the document seems to us to be a proper one and, therefore, effect should be given to it.

The appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal.

The cross objection is dismissed without costs.

Plaintiff is to be given khas possession with regard to the lands in Schedule (kha). His title is declared with regard to 8 annas share of the remaining lands of (ka).

Appeal accepted.

A suit in which the plaintiff seeks to eject the defendant on the ground that he is a trespasser and not a tenant, is cognizable by a Civil Court and not by a Revenue Court. If in such a suit the defendant pleads that he is a tenant of the plaintiff, the procedure laid down in section 202 of the Agra Tenancy Act should be followed. [p. 382, col. 1.]

First appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, Banda, dated the 19th December 1918.

Mr. Pearey Lal Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katiu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this appeal are as follows:—The plaintiff is the owner of a two-anna share out of an eight-anna share in a certain village in the District of Hamirpur. His father died leaving him a minor and one Musammatt Peari, apparently his mother, looked after his affairs. She mortgaged his share. Subsequently proceedings were taken under the Encumbered Estates Act, Bundelkhand. The creditor was paid off by Government and Musammatt Peari proceeded to re-pay Government by instalments. After she had paid up a part of the debt she died. Another sarbarahkar was appointed in her place and then the owners of the eight-anna share gave a zar-i-peshgi lease to the defendants-respondents before us of the whole eight annas. The plaintiff's sarbarahkar was a party to this lease. The plaintiff has now come of age and he has brought the present suit to eject the defendants-respondents from his two-anna share and to obtain possession thereof for himself. An examination of the plaint will show that he has treated the transaction, under which the defendants obtained possession, as a lease. He has alleged, however, that his sarbarahkar Toraiyan had no power whatsoever to grant a lease of his property or to transfer it in any way. He, therefore, pleads that the lease is not binding upon him and he seeks to eject the defendants as trespassers on the property. The suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif at Hamirpur. The defendants' written statement may be boiled down to this. First of all, that the sarbarahkar had full power to grant the lease, and, secondly, that even if he had not, still the plaintiff on coming of age had confirmed the lease and had accepted rent under it; though in definite terms the defendants did not plead that they were the plaintiff's tenants, yet the whole sum and substance of their defence is that they are his tenants and furthermore they clearly plead that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court but was cognizable only by the Revenue Court. The Court of first instance held that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court but instead of returning the plaint to be filed in the proper Court, it dismissed the suit. From this decree the plaintiff filed an appeal as he was fully entitled to do. He urged in the grounds of appeal that the suit as it stood was cognizable by a Civil Court and should have been entertained by the Munsif. At the time that the appeal was argued it was further urged that even if the Munsif's decision was a correct one, his decree dismissing the suit was bad and the plaint should be returned for presentation to the proper Court. The Appellate Court agreed with the Munsif that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court. It agreed with the appellant that the Munsif ought to have returned the plaint and not to have dismissed the suit; and accepting this contention, it ordered the plaint to be returned to the plaintiff. The plaintiff has come here on appeal from this order. A preliminary objection was taken that no appeal would lie from the order of the Court below on the ground that if the Court of first instance had done its duty and passed a proper order, no second appeal could have lain against an order passed by the lower Appellate Court on appeal from the Munsif's order. We do not think that there is any substance in this point, as we have to take the facts as they are and not as they ought to have been, and the case is very similar to that of Behari

NEELATOORU VENKATARANGACHARLU v. NEELATOORU SAMPATH KUMARA AIYANGAR.

Lal v. Khub Chand (1). We must come to the merits of the appeal. In substance the plaint is an allegation by the plaintiff that the defendants are not his tenants. He distinctly pleads that they are trespassers and that he seeks to eject them. On the plaint, as it stands, we do not think that the suit could have been instituted in the Revenue Court. Neither section 58 nor section 34 of the Tenancy Act, to which we have been referred, will enable the plaintiff to file his present plaint in the Revenue Court and claim to have a decision on it. We have not been referred to any other section of the Tenancy Act which would enable him to bring this suit under that Act. In substance the defendants' plea is that they are the tenants of the plaintiff under the lease in question and that it is a valid and binding transaction. It seems to us, therefore, quite clear that in these circumstances the Civil Court ought to have entertained the suit and ought to have taken action under section 202 of the Tenancy Act, and the question of the defendants' tenancy would then really be decided by a Revenue Court. The Courts below have merely erred in the procedure adopted by them, but still the procedure laid down by law must be followed. It must be noted that there has been no previous litigation between the parties either in the Revenue or Civil Court in respect of the matter in dispute in this suit. The rulings in Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (2) and Sher Khan v. Debi Prasad (3) do not apply to the present case, for in each of the suits with which those decisions are concerned, there was (in the end at least) an admitted tenancy and the plaintiffs were merely making an attempt to get round a decision of the Revenue Court already passed. In this view we allow the appeal. We set aside the orders and the decrees of the Courts below. We direct that the record be returned to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court with directions to re-admit the suit on its original number and to proceed to hear and decide it according to law, keeping in view our remarks in respect of the use of section 202 of the Tenancy Act. Costs of this appeal as well as the costs so far incurred up to the present date by the parties in all Courts will abide the result of the suit.

Restitution of conjugal rights—Refusal of wife to live with her husband—Legal ground—Danger to health or safety of wife.

A husband is undoubtedly entitled to the society and companionship of his wife just as a wife is entitled to the society and protection of her husband. But before a Court can be asked to compel a reluctant wife to return to her husband's custody, it must be shown that there is no legal ground to justify the wife's refusal to live with her husband. One such ground is that the health or safety of the wife is likely to be endangered if she is forced to return to her husband's house. [p. 384, col 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 20th February 1919, reversing that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 7th May 1918.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are Jats of Garh Shankar Tahsil, Hoshiarpore District, and the plaintiff, Ganga Singh, sues for restitution of conjugal rights as against his wife, Musammat Dhanno, and for an injunction against Musammat Dhanno's brother Ram Chand, her mother Musammat Kirpo, Bela Singh (who stood surety for Musammat Dhanno in a criminal case), Ganga Singh (Bela Singh's relative) and Pala, maternal uncle of Musammat Dhanno. It appears that Musammat Dhanno was originally married to one Harnama, the brother of Ganga Singh; that Harnama died some four years before suit, and that after his death Ganga Singh married Musammat Dhanno by karewa. Ganga Singh is also married to Musammat Uttam Dai, the younger sister of Musammat Dhanno, and at the time of her marriage with Ganga Singh, Musammat Dhanno was a minor, about 16 years old.

In the present suit the defendants denied that any marriage had taken place between Musammat Dhanno and the plaintiff Ganga Singh, but both Courts have agreed in finding against defendants on this point. At the same time it is quite clear from the materials on the record that the relations between plaintiff on the one side and his wife and her family on the other side have been exceedingly strained for some considerable time past. In November 1917 plaintiff lodged a complaint in the Criminal Courts, alleging that he had been assaulted by Musammat Dhanno, her mother and her brothers and that during the assault his wife jeered at him and also struck him. His complaint was made under section 352, Indian Penal Code. Subsequently plaintiff and his friends were convicted of rioting, and in those proceedings it was alleged and found established that he had endeavoured to carry off his wife by force. The conviction took place on the 10th of October 1918 and the present suit was instituted on the 6th of February. In his complaint in this case plaintiff alleges that his wife had taken with her, when she left him, cash and ornaments. Upon these facts the District Judge refused to grant plaintiff a decree for restitution of conjugal rights, holding that there was a reasonable apprehension that her safety would be endangered if a decree was passed against her and she was compelled to return to her husband.

Plaintiff has appealed to this Court, and it has been argued on his behalf that though the District Judge had a discretion to grant or withhold the relief sought for, such discretion must be exercised in accordance with judicial principles and that in the present case there was no reasonable ground for refusing plaintiff a decree. On the other hand Mr. Fakir Chand for the respondents has contended that the District Judge was fully justified in dismissing the suit inasmuch as it could not be expected that the husband would fail to take his revenge when he found the young wife, who is the cause of all the struggle, once again in his power. It was also pointed out that Musammot Dhanno was married to the plaintiff when she was of tender age and that it is exceedingly doubtful, as the District Judge remarks, whether she ever lived with the plaintiff who is married to her younger sister. I have carefully considered the case and the arguments addressed to me, and the conclusion at which I have arrived is that no sufficient cause has been shown to justify my interference with the order of the lower Appellate Court. A husband is undoubtedly entitled to the society and companionship of his wife, just as a wife is entitled to the society and protection of her husband. But before a Court can be asked to compel a reluctant wife to return to her husband's custody, it must be shown that there is no legal ground to justify the wife's refusal to live with her husband. Such grounds may be of various kinds, and one is that the health or safety of the wife is likely to be endangered if she is forced to return to her husband's house. In the present case there is, I regret to say, reason to believe that Musammot Dhanno's position, if she returned to the plaintiff, would be fraught with danger to herself. It can hardly be expected that the plaintiff would overlook all that has occurred and his conduct towards his wife has been undoubtedly vindictive, even if it can be said that it has been not altogether unjustifiable.

I must accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.
CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS No. 427 OF 1919.
November 6, 1919.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott and Mr. Justice Dalal.

In the matter of THE NATIONAL INSURANCE AND BANKING COMPANY,
LD, IN LIQUIDATION.

Companies Act (VII of 1913), ss. 3, 164, 200—Winding-up referred to District Court—Contributories residing within jurisdictions of different High Courts —Procedure.

An order for the winding up of a company was made by the Punjab Chief Court, and under section 164 of the Companies Act, subsequent proceedings were taken in the Court of the District Judge of Lahore against contributories residing in districts within the jurisdiction of the Allahabad High Court. On an application to the Allahabad High Court by the Official Liquidator to enforce these orders:

Held, that the High Court had jurisdiction to enforce the orders by proceedings in execution before itself, or to authorise the Official Liquidator to apply to the various District Courts in respect of each of the persons against whom orders for contribution had been passed; and that as the balance of convenience was in favour of the latter course, the Official Liquidator was authorised to proceed accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the Official Liquidator of the National Insurance and Banking Company, Ltd., which is now in liquidation. The winding-up order was made by the Chief Court of the Punjab, and under section 164 of the Indian Companies Act VII of 1913, proceedings subsequent to that order are now being had in the Court of the District Judge of Lahore. According to this petition, which is supported by affidavit, the District Judge of Lahore has passed a number of orders against contributories residing at various places within the jurisdiction of this Court. The prayer in this application is that this Court should make an order under section 164 aforesaid, permitting these subsequent proceedings to be had in the various District Courts specified at the foot of the application. Under section 200 of Act VII of 1913 the orders made by the District Judge of Lahore require to be enforced by the Court which would have had jurisdiction in respect of the company concerned if the registered office of that company had been situated at the places where execution is sought. Under section 3 of the Act, the Court having jurisdiction at the various places specified at the foot of the plaint is this High Court. Referring back, however, to section 200 we find that this Court has authority to enforce the orders of the District Judge of Lahore in the same manner and in all respects as if these orders had been made by this Court itself. If the orders in question had been made by this Court itself, we could undoubtedly direct under section 164 of Act VII of 1913 that subsequent proceedings be had in a District Court. It is, therefore, merely a question of convenience whether the proceedings in execution should all be had in this Court, or whether the Official Liquidator should be authorised to apply to the various District Courts specified at the foot of his application in respect of each of the persons against whom orders for contribution have been passed by the District Judge of Lahore. The balance of convenience is obviously in favour of allowing proceedings to be taken in the District Courts. Our order, therefore, under the sections to which reference has been made, is that proceedings to enforce the orders passed by the District Judge of Lahore may be instituted on the application of the Official Liquidator, and the aforesaid orders may be enforced according to their tenure in the Courts of the various District Judges specified at the foot of this application and shown in the margin (foot-note)* of this order; proceedings in each Court being taken according to the place of residence of the person against whom orders for contribution have been made, or according to the situation of the property against which execution is sought.

Order accordingly.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 144—Alienation by co-parcener—Adverse possession—Limitation.

The entry of an alienee from a co-parcener into the property alienated is adverse to the other co-parceners from the very moment of that entry. [p. 286, col. 2.]

Muttusami v. Ramakrishna, 12 M. 292, Secretary of State v. Vira Rayan, 9 M. 175 at p. 183 and Bharao v. Rakhmin, 23 B. 137 (F. B.), followed.

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Ganjam at Berhampore, in Appeal Suits Nos. 23, 24 and 25 of 1917, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Berhampore, in Original Suit No. 69 of 1915.

FACTS.—A Muhamadan brother and his sister owned certain property as co-sharers and were living together in common enjoyment of the income. The appellants were alienees of the property from the brother alone. The District Judge, following the case of Hindu co-parceners as reported in Muthukrishniengar v. Sankara Narayana Aiyar (1), held that the suit by the sister for partition of the property and setting aside the alienations made by the brother was not barred.

Mr. T. Prakasam for the Appellants.—Muthukrishniengar v. Sankara Narayana Aiyar (1) does not apply as it was a case of a Hindu co-parcenary. The only question in the present case was whether there was any special relation between the person in possession and the person claiming which should compel the former to prove exclusive possession to the knowledge of the latter. Being only an alienee there is no such liability. His possession is adverse and in his own right.

[SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J., remarked that there was no finding by the lower Court as regards knowledge of exclusion.]

ABDUL GAFUR v. ASHAMATH BIBI.

The finding is unnecessary, as the appellant has been in possession for over the statutory period. See Muthuraku Thevan v. Orr (2), Vasudeva Padhi Khadanga Garu v. Maguni Devan Bakshi Mahapatrulu Garu (3), Nachiyappa Ohetty v. Ramasami Ohetty (4), Secretary of State v. Vira Rayan (5), Madhava v. Narayana (6).

Mr. V. Ramadoss, following.—An alienation by a co-parcener is always adverse. Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (7).

Possession is prima facie adverse. See Muttusami v. Ramakrishna (8).

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair (with him Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao), for the Respondents in both appeals.—The facts are that the alienations were made secretly while the sister was away. The mere fact that an alienation is made does not take away the fraud which was intended to be and was committed on the sister. I submit that fraud vitiates the whole set of transactions.

Farther an alienee cannot get a title better than that of the alienor. The alienor's possession was not adverse to the respondents. See also Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baladeo Das (9).

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by a Muhammadan sister for partition against her brother and for setting aside alienations made in favour of the other defendants by that brother. The alienations in question were made more than 12 years before suit. Both the lower Courts have held that, as it had not been proved that the plaintiff had knowledge of those alienations, her claim was not barred by limitation. Apparently the view which found favour with them was that, as a co-parcener cannot be prescribed for exclusive possession without setting up notoriously and to the knowledge of other members of the family his intention to hold adversely, the alienee from the co-parcener is affected by the same disability. In this Court also Mr. Madhavan Nair forcibly argued in support of this contention. But in the very case relied on by him and by the Courts below, namely, Jogendra Nath Rai v. Baladeo Das (9), Mr. Justice Mookerjee points out the distinction between the possession of a co-parcener and that of a stranger. In Muttusami v. Ramakrishna (8) Muthusami Aiyar and Wilkinson, JJ., decided this very point. They say that the entry of an alienee from a co-parcener is adverse to the other co-parceners from the very moment of that entry. This and the observations in Secretary of State v. Vira Rayan (5) [which though distinguished by the Judicial Committee on certain points follows the decision of Fry, J., in Rains v. Buxton (10)] is very explicit and direct. A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has taken the same view: see Bhavrao v. Rakhmin (7). We must, therefore, hold that the view taken by the Courts below is untenable.

The further question is, whether the case must be sent back. Mr. Prakasam drew our attention to statements in the two judgments indicating that there was no participation in the income after 1892 by the sister. Mr. Madhavan Nair, on the other hand, referred to the statements of the District Judge that the plaintiff recovered her share of the profits upto 1914. This latter statement by itself would not be effective to save limitation but may be some evidence of the alienation having been concealed from the plaintiff. However, as the question of adverse possession has proceeded on a wrong view of the law, we think the safe course is to reverse the judgments of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of 1st instance for disposal in the light of our observations. There will be no fresh evidence. Costs will abide. Refund Court-fees. The memo. of objections are dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—
Amendment of decree—Appeal, whether lies.

There is no appeal from an order passed under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 7th March 1919.

Drs. S. N. Sen and J. N. Misra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. H. K. Mukerjee and S. O. Chaudhuri, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies. The facts may be briefly stated. A decree was passed and put into execution. That decree had been confirmed on appeal in this Court. The respondents discovered an error in the decree by reason of which they had been deprived of property in execution, to which they were on the face of the judgment entitled. They applied to the Court below for amendment of the decree. Objections were taken. The Court granted the application and amended the decree. Another application after the amendment was made for restitution. That is the subject-matter of a connected appeal. But in this appeal it is urged that no appeal lies from an order passed under section 152, Civil Procedure Code. The truth and the force of this contention are practically admitted and the Code is perfectly clear on the subject that no appeal lies. We are asked to treat the appeal as an application in revision, but this we must decline to do for admittedly there are no merits whatsoever in the appellant's case. The error in the decree was admittedly there and justice has been done, and we see no ground whatsoever to accede to this request. The result is that the appeal is rejected with costs to the opposite party including fees on the higher scale to the extent of Rs. 62-8-0.

Appeal rejected.

Custom or personal law—Arains of Jullundur city—Presumption—Alienation, restriction on powers of—Burden of proof.

In order to apply the initial presumption against the power of alienation in the case of families claiming to be governed by customary law, it is necessary to prove not merely that the family belongs to an agricultural tribe but also that its main occupation is agriculture. [p 388, col. 2]

No such presumption exists in the case of a family which, though belonging to an agricultural tribe, has altogether drifted away from agriculture as its main occupation and has settled for good in urban life and adopts trade, industry or service as its principal occupation and means and source of livelihood. [p 388, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 18th February 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Jullundur, dated the 22nd July 1918, dismissing the suit with costs.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts in this case are that one Umar Din, an Arain living in Mohalla Khadian, in the city of Jullundur, sold his rights of residence in and the materials of a house in that Mohalla on the 21st August 1909 for Rs. 99-14-0. The site belonged to the proprietary body of that Mohalla. Umar Din died recently and his brother, the plaintiff, sued for possession of the house on the grounds that the house was ancestral and that the sale was without consideration or valid necessity. The vendee, defendant, pleaded that as Umar Din was a non-agriculturist, the plaintiff could not object to the sale and that in any case the sale was for consideration and valid necessity. The trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that the house was ancestral and that the plaintiff and his deceased brother were governed by custom but that the sale was for consideration and valid necessity. The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court has held :—

GHULAM MUHAMMAD v. BURA.

(1) that the plaintiff and his brother Umar Din were Arains and though living in a city were presumably governed by customary law and that the presumption had not been rebutted ;

(2) that the plaintiff's evidence that the house was ancestral had not been rebutted and, therefore, the plaintiff had a right to contest the alienation; and

(3) that there was no valid necessity for the sale.

The lower Appellate Court, therefore, accepted the appeal and decreed the plaintiff's claim.

In setting out the facts of the mortgages the lower Appellate Court erred in stating that not only the first mortgage for Rs. 30 but the second mortgage for Rs. 90 was in favour of one Sandhu, and this no doubt led to the framing of ground No. 2 of this appeal. As a fact the second mortgage was in favour of the vendee. As explained in Devi Ditta v. Saudagar Singh (1) the onus on the vendee would be greater in the latter case.

For the appellant it is contended that after setting the issue as to custom so as to place the onus on the plaintiff of proving that his family was governed by custom, the lower Appellate Court erred in turning round and deciding the point on a presumption to the contrary. It is contended that no certificate is necessary as the present is not an appeal with regard to the onus which was rightly placed, but if the onus was wrongly placed the defendant should have had an opportunity to meet the new case.

It is unnecessary to go into this complaint or into the questions of consideration and necessity, because in my opinion the lower Appellate Court has drawn a wrong presumption. It is admitted that the family does not follow agricultural pursuits and it is not shown that it ever did so. The deceased vendor earned his living as a labourer and as a servant. The decision in Taj Muhammad v. Sayad Muhammad (2), which also related to Arains in Jullundur city, is distinguishable in that in that case it was proved that the ancestors of the family were agriculturists who had migrated to Jullundur. There is no such evidence in the present case. Apparently the head-note in that case states the findings too generally. In Fakhar-un-nissa v. Malik Rahim Bakhsh (3) it was held that there was no such presumption in the case of Arains living in the Sabzi Mandi at Delhi and again in Muhammad Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (4) it was held that no such presumption existed in the case of Rajputs. I quote the following remarks from the latter judgment :—

"It appears to me that in order to apply the initial presumption against the power of alienation laid down by the Full Bench judgment in Gujar v. Sham Das (5) it is necessary to prove not merely that the family belongs to an agricultural tribe but also that its main occupation is agriculture. As further explained in Ramji Lal v. Tej Ram (6) the presumption in favour of a restricted power of alienation applies to members of agricultural tribes who are members of village communities. But where a family, though members of an agricultural tribe, has altogether drifted away from agriculture as its main occupation and has settled for good in urban life and adopts trade, industry, or service as its principal occupation and means and source of livelihood, I am not inclined to hold that any initial presumption would exist or apply that the power to alienate ancestral immoveable property by the members of such family is necessarily restricted."

In the present case it is not shown that the family ever followed agricultural pursuits or how they became possessed of the house in question. It may have been bought.

I also quote the following from the same judgment:—

"Even, however, if it were held that Ghulam Muhammad and his two sons being Rajputs had a restricted power of alienation respecting landed property, I am inclined to agree with the learned District Judge that the rule does not apply to house property of the class in dispute in the present case. I agree with him that the rule would apply to property connected with ancestral lands, and not to house property altogether unconnected and which was acquired in a town or city as a means of investment."

There is no evidence relating to the history of this house, and it cannot be assumed that the rights in it were acquired in connection with ancestral agricultural land. But even if, as suggested in Ellis' Customary Law (page 199), the above principle has since been extended to all ancestral property, a proposition which is denied by Counsel for the appellant, I am of opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that Umar Din had only a restricted power of alienation. On this finding it is unnecessary to consider the findings of the lower Appellate Court regarding necessity.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court, dismiss plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Malabar Law—Appointment of heir—Succession to estate of appointee—Rights of relations of natural family—'Ananthira avakasham,' meaning of.

According to the customary law of Malabar the relations of the natural family from which an heir is constituted are entitled to succeed to that heir if he dies sonless. The appointment of an heir is very different from an adoption. [p. 390, col. 2.]

The expression 'ananthira avakasham' only means the right of heirship, and the appointment of a person with 'ananthira avakasham' rights enables his natural relations to succeed to his property. [p. 390, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Palghat, at Calicut, in Appeal Suit No. 292 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 447 of 1916 of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Walluvanad, in Original Suit No. 99 of 1913.

This second appeal came on for hearing before Seshagiri Aiyar, and Phillips, JJ., on the 21st November 1918.

Mr. C. V. Anantha Krishna Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Madhavan Nair, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The last two members of a Nambudri Illom, known as the Kotakkat Illom, were Kesavan, and Nangeli. In 1849 one of them, Kesavan, mortgaged the property in dispute by Exhibit B to the Tarwad of defendants Nos. 1 to 12. He died after 1852. In 1855 the only surviving member Nangeli appointed one Narayana Moosad as the heir to the properties of the Tarwad. In 1856 she appointed Damodaram during the lifetime of Narayana. In 1858 Narayana brought a suit to redeem the Kanom executed by Kesavan in 1849. Damodara intervened and disputed Narayana's title. There was a compromise (Exhibit E) in 1859 by which Damodara's right was recognised by Narayana and the suit was dismissed. There was a Kanom by Damodara in 1859, which is Exhibit A, to the Tarwad of defendants Nos. 1 to 12. Damodara died in 1896. Damodara prior to his being appointed heir belonged to a Tarwad known as Thiyyath Tarwad. Damodara died issueless and the present suit is by his natural brother to redeem Exhibit A. The two Courts below have found that Damodara was legally and validly appointed heir by Nangeli. They have also found that Exhibit A is genuine.

The question which was strenuously argued before us was whether the present plaintiff is the heir of the deceased Damodara. The District Munsif was inclined to the view that the members of Thiyyath and Kotakkat Illoms were related to each other as Dayadees. The Subordinate Judge has expressed no opinion on that question. It was suggested by Mr. Madhavan Nair, who appeared for the respondents, that paragraph 30 of the lower Court's judgment must be regarded as a finding on the question of relationship. In that paragraph the Subordinate Judge refers to his having found that the plaintiff was recognised as the legal representative of Damodara in a number of transactions and concludes by saying: "I find the issue for the plaintiff." In paragraph 25 wherein he discusses this recognition there is not a word about the relationship between the two Tarwads. There is considerable body of evidence on the question and, therefore, we cannot regard that the Subordinate Judge applied his mind to the consideration of the facts bearing on it.

It was then argued by the learned Counsel for the respondents that under Exhibit D, which was executed by Nangeli to Damodara on the occasion of his appointment as heir, not only Damodara but all his relations were taken into the Kotakkat Illom. The expression on which great reliance was placed is 'Ananthira Avakasham'. Neither in the Munsif's Court nor before the Subordinate Judge was any reliance placed upon these words as constituting the plaintiff as the heir to Damodara.

There is no definition of the word 'Ananthira Avakasham' in any of the treatises on Malabar Law or in any of the judgments of Courts. There are observations in Vasudevan v. Secretary of State (1) which rather suggest that this expression is synonymous with heirs. However, we do not desire to express any definite opinion on the question. If there is any evidence on record upon which a finding can be given regarding the meaning of this expression, we may ask the lower Appellate Court to consider the evidence and to submit a finding. We are not inclined to allow fresh evidence to be taken on the question, because if the plaintiff relied upon this expression in Exhibit D as constituting him the heir to the Tarwad, he ought to have examined witnesses in that behalf.

There can be no doubt that in a large number of proceedings to which the defendant was not a party but which were instituted by the plaintiff he has been recognised by Courts and by the parties to those proceedings as the heir to Damodara. There is also the fact that the Government, which contemplated at one time a claim to the property as escheated to the Crown, recognised the plaintiff as the heir. These various proceedings tend to show that according to the customary law of Malabar the relations of the natural family from which an heir is constituted are entitled to succeed to that heir if he dies issueless. There is also the fact which is well recognised in Malabar that the appointment of an heir is very different from adoption. The very fact that Nangeli, an unmarried woman, was considered to have properly appointed Damodara as heir to the property of the Tarwad to which she belonged, shows that there is a difference between adoption and the appointment of an heir. Therefore, it is possible that although Damodara was regarded as an adopted son and his natural relations of the Tarwad from which he came may not be his heirs, his appointment as heir from the Tarwad would not preclude such relations from succeeding to his property. That is again a matter upon which the Subordinate Judge has expressed no definite opinion.

There is also the further question whether the plaintiff has not acquired title to the properties of the Tarwad by adverse possession. That would depend upon how far to the knowledge of the defendants he set up his right. This aspect of the question also has not been considered by the Subordinate Judge. We must, therefore, ask for findings upon the following questions:—

(a) Were the members of the Kotakkat Tarwad and those of the Thiyyath Tarwad related to each other? And if so, how?

(b) Whether under the customary law of Malabar the natural relations of an appointed heir are entitled to succeed to the appointee's properties?

(c) Whether the appointment of a person with 'Ananthira Avakasham' rights enables his natural relations to succeed to his property?

(d) Whether the plaintiff has acquired title to the property by prescription?

The findings must be submitted within two months and 7 days will be allowed for objections. No fresh evidence.

In compliance with the above order in the judgment the Temporary Subordinate Judge

(1) 11 M. 157 at p. 189.

KUTUMATT PUTHEN VARIATH SEKHARA VARIER v. KOTAKAT.

at Ottapalam submitted the following FINDINGS—I am asked to submit findings with reference to the evidence on record on the following points:—

1. Were the members of the Kotakkat Tarwad and those of the Thiyyath Tarwad related to each other? And if so, how?

2. Whether under the customary law of Malabar the natural relations of an appointed heir are entitled to succeed to the appointee's properties?

3. Whether the appointment of a person with 'Ananthira Avakasham' rights enables his natural relations to succeed to his property?

4. Whether the plaintiff has acquired a title to the property by prescription?

2. 1st Issue.—The evidence relating to the question of relationship between the two Illoms is that furnished by Exhibit XXVIII and the deposition of the present plaintiff in this litigation. Exhibit XXVIII is the record of the evidence of the late Damodaran Moosad in Original Suit No. 503 of 1890 on the file of the District Munsif, Angadipuram. Damodaran Moosad then stated that he had been adopted into the Kotakkat Illom and that he had no right to the property of Thiyyath Illom. He has amplified these statements by a reference to the question of pollution between the Illoms. According to him he would observe pollution for ten days on the death of any member of the Thiyyath Illom, but that the members of Thiyyath Illom did not observe pollution when Nangeli Manayamma who adopted him died in Andu 1036 (1860—1861). Apparently, his idea was to keep open his connection with his natural Illom for his own purposes while seeking to make out that the converse was not the case.

3. Then there is the evidence of the present plaintiff, which is to the effect that the members of his family are attalatakam heirs of Kotakkat Illom having ten days' death pollution. This definite statement, it may be pointed out, stands uncontradicted, no effort having been made to displace it by any testimony to the contrary.

4. As between Damodaran Moosad and his brother, the plaintiff in this case, I think that the statement made by the latter should be preferred. Any weight that might otherwise be due to the evidence given by Damodarán Moosad is taken away by the fact that in 1891, when he was examined in Original Suit No. 503 of 1890, he was trying to establish his status as adopted heir. He was naturally, therefore, inclined to attribute all the results of a regular orthodox adoption to his case and in consequence he seems to have thought that he would strengthen his position by disclaiming mutual ties of relationship between the two Illoms. Self-interest of another kind, however, made him careful in safeguarding his own rights in his natural Illom. On this ground I consider that literal effect should not be given to his statements of the year 1891. The plaintiff's evidence is not vitiated by any such motives and if his assertion were untrue, it is not easy to see why the defendants made no effort at all to establish their present suggestion. Moreover, Damodaran's own evidence shows that the two Illoms were of the same gotram and that he claimed to be attalatakam heir to the Thiyyath Illom only in the character of a member of the Kotakkat Illom. But this could only be on the footing that the members of the two Illoms were dayadis. That his testimony as a whole cannot be accepted at its face value can be judged from his pretended ignorance as to whether the two families had relationship through pollution between each other.

5. I think it is reasonably clear that the members of the Kotakkat and Thiyyath families were related to each other as dayadis, having what is known as ten days' impurity or pollution; or in other words, sapindas of each other. I answer the first question accordingly.

6. 2nd Issue.—The question is whether under the customary law of Malabar the natural relations of an appointed heir are entitled to succeed to the appointee's properties. In Kumaran v. Narayanan (2) it was held that the son of a daughter married in the Sarvaswadanom form may inherit to his father's Illom as an attalatakam heir, although his father would have no right at all in regard to the properties of the wife's Illom. This ruling shows that in case of an adoption there may be ultimate rights of succession on failure of the ordinary line of heirs. In the present case what happened was that the plaintiff's brother Damodaran

KUTUMATT PUTHEN VARIATH SEKHARA VARIER v. KOTAKAT.

Moosad was not regularly adopted into the Kotakkat Illom by its last representative, Nangeli, but that he was merely appointed heir to the Illom (Vide Exhibit D). In such a case it seems to be clear on the authorities that Damodaran would not lose the rights possessed by him in his own natural family [Mayne's Hindu Law, section 204; Vasudevan v. Secretary of State (1)].

7. The above proposition was not controverted by Mr. K. P. Raman Menon, but his argument was that although Damodaran might have had rights in his natural Illom, the plaintiff is not possessed of the converse right of succession as heir to Damodaran in regard to the properties of the Kotakkat Illom. The line of argument adopted by Mr. Raman Menon was that Exhibit D evidences an adoption in the kritrima form and that as such all the incidents of such an adoption as stated by Mr. Mayne in regard to the Mithila country should be held to apply to Damodaran's appointment. But the argument overlooks the fact that the affiliation of an heir to a Nambudri Illom by appointment, such as that of Damodaran under Exhibit D, resembles the kritrima adoption of Mithila only in this respect that both are based on purely secular motives and that in both no particular form or ceremony of adoption is a prerequisite to its validity. Beyond this, I do not think it would be safe to push the analogy.

8. The decision in Vasudevan v. Secretary of State (1) continues to be the leading case on the subject of adoption or affiliation among Nambudiris. Mr. Mayne's observations regarding adoptions by Nambudiris are almost wholly rested on the remarks to be found in the judgment of the High Court. That judgment, however, is very cautiously worded with regard to this matter. Their Lordships say: "It may well be that the power to appoint an heir is equivalent to kritrima...adoption" (the italics are mine), and not, be it noted, that it is an actual kritrima adoption. All that appears from the discussion of the evidence and the observations in the above judgment is that there are three kinds of adoption among Nambudiris, that the first two of them are regular adoptions with some kind of religious ceremony accompanying them, and that the third is a mere affiliation by appointment without any religious ceremony whatever.

Exhibit D is an instance of the third class. But I do not find any warrant anywhere for foisting upon it all the various legal incidents attaching to the kritrima adoption of Mithila.

9. A single illustration will suffice to show the untenable nature of the argument. In Mithila, a kritrima son can be adopted to the mother alone or to the father alone, while both are alive, and will then take only the property of the person adopting. But I do not think that anyone can be found to assert that a Nambudiri wife can make a valid adoption to herself alone in the Mithila sense and without reference to her husband or to the Illom of which they are members. On the other hand, such evidence as there is in this case goes a great way in supporting the plaintiff's contention.

10. In 1892 Damodaran Moosad together with his brother Kesavan Moosad, the present plaintiff, executed the document Exhibit XII in respect of some of the properties belonging to Thiyyath Illom. This is evidence showing that notwithstanding the appointment under Exhibit D, Damodaran was exercising all the rights of a member of his natural Illom, and it also forms a basis for inferring that the properties belonging to Damodaran and his brothers were treated by them as joint so as to be capable of being taken mutually by right of succession.

11. Then there are documents showing public recognition of the usage under consideration. Exhibits P and BB are judgments of the Court of first instance and the Court of Appeal, respectively, in a litigation in which Damodaran Moosad was the plaintiff. He obtained a decree but died before putting it in execution. On his death the present plaintiff's nephew Govindan Moosad applied for and was granted the succession certificate, Exhibit Q, for realising the decree amount as heir to Damodaran. Exhibit R is the execution petition presented by Govindan Moosad and the present plaintiff jointly. It is noteworthy that no point was then taken that these were not the heirs of Damodaran in regard to the Kotakkat Illom.

12. The next series of documents are Exhibits H, H1, XIII and H2. These relate to a litigation by Narayanan Moosad, who claimed to be the earlier and real appointee of Nangeli. To this litigation the present plaintiff and his nephew Govindan Moosad were impleaded as defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

13. The next document, Exhibit T, is specially important. It is an order of the Tahsildar of Walluvanad for transferring the Patta for the Kotakkat Illom properties to the present plaintiff's name as being Damodaran's heir. The order shows that Government desisted from enforcing their right of escheat, as contemplated by them, because on enquiry they were satisfied that the plaintiff succeeded to the Kotakkat properties as attalatakam heir.

14. The foregoing will show the acceptance by Government and other third parties of the rights of the plaintiff as heir to the Kotakkat Illom properties of Damodaran Moosad. Exhibit XI shows that the present contesting defendants were well aware of the rights claimed by the plaintiff in the litigation evidenced by Exhibits X series and XIII. Until now they have never thought of impugning the plaintiff's status as heir and this conduct on their part attracts the importance it deserves.

15. On a general survey of the authorities dealing with the subject of adoption among Nambudiris and the facts disclosed by the evidence in this litigation, I think that the appointment of an heir by the last member of a Nambudiri illom constitutes the appointee the successor to the Illom properties but without cutting off his rights in his own family. The result would be that while he would take the properties of the Illom into which he is affiliated, he retains his position in his own Illom for purposes of succession and inheritance. In other words, while the form of the affiliation may be compared to the kritrima adoption of the Sanskrit texts, the legal status conferred by the affiliation resembles more nearly that of the dwymushyayana son. In saying so, I wish to guard myself against being supposed to attribute to the affiliation all the incidents of dwymushyayana adoption any more than all the incidents of a kritrima adoption as now understood in Mithila. The procedure by which an affiliation is effected among Nambudiris and the legal effects flowing from it are entirely matters of special usage as existing among them, and it is only in a loose or general sense that the act by which an heir is constituted can be classified and labelled under one or other of the recognised heads of adoption enumerated in the Hindu Law books.

16. My opinion on the point raised is that on the facts in evidence in this case the natural relations of an appointed heir are entitled under the customary law of Malabar to succeed to the appointee's properties.

17. 3rd Issue.—The question raised by this issue falls under the previous issue. The expression 'Ananthira Avakasham' means nothing more than the right of heirship and no special or technical significance attaches to it. This was conceded by the learned and experienced Nair Vakils on either side that argued the case in this Court. I may also refer to Logan's Manual of the Malabar District (page 245), where the word 'Ananthbravar' is rendered as 'successor' or 'heir'. The expression as occurring in Exhibit D was conceded by the learned Vakils on both sides to mean only that Damodaran was to take the properties as heir to the Illom after Nangeli. I would, therefore, find the issue in the affirmative.

18. 4th Issue.—I think the plaintiff must be considered to have acquired by prescription the right claimed by him, viz., that he is heir to whatever properties Damodaran Moosad left. For this the main piece of evidence is Exhibit XI. There was a keen dispute between the present plaintiff and the present contesting defendant No. 1 and Narayanan, Moosad already referred to and a fourth man, with regard to the properties of a Devaswom attached to the Kotakkat Illom. The contest then took the shape of rival claims to registration of name in the Revenue Register. The Special Deputy Collector's order contains the following:—
"A civil suit appears to have been instituted by Narayanan Moosad in which the Uraima question may probably be decided and all the four parties express their willingness to have the registration of titles postponed until its disposal." Although in the result the Deputy Collector ordered registration to be made in the names of all four claimants in respect of such properties as they were holding individually, the order shows that the fight as regards Damodaran Moosad's properties was considered to lie between Narayanan Moosad on the one hand and the present plaintiff on the other. The other parties, including the present contesting defendant, were content to abide by the result of the civil litigation. Narayanan Moosad's suit ended adversely to him. Thereafter the present plaintiff's claim as heir to Damodaran Moosad was not further challenged by any one. That claim was publicly put forward to the knowledge of the contesting defendants, and it was of a nature which imported all the elements of an exclusive and hostile title. It seems to me that it is too late in the day for the defendants to question the plaintiff's general right to the Kotakkat Illom properties as Damodaran Moosad's heir.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the receipt of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 964 OF 1917.

Present:—Justice Sir Ernest Fletcher, Kt., and Mr. Justice Cuming.

GOLAPJAN BIBI WIFE OF Sheikh UJIR MAMUD alias JAMIR MAMUD—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Sheikh DIL MAMUD AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

Landlord and tenant—Occupancy holding, non-transferable—Transfer by tenant in favour of heir without giving up possession—Landlord, right of re-entry of.

A tenant of a non-transferable occupancy holding purported to transfer the holding by two documents, one in favour of his wife and the other in favour of his daughter. Notwithstanding these documents, however, he remained on the holding and resided at the house erected on a portion thereof down to the date of his death. His wife and daughter were living with him and on his death became entitled to the holding as his heirs:

Held, that the possession of the widow and daughter was lawful possession as heirs and that the landlord did not acquire a right of re-entry and was not entitled to disturb their possession and that the mere fact that the tenant executed two invalid documents in their favour did not alter the character of their possession. [p. 395, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court, Mymensingh, dated the 5th of January 1917, affirming the decree of the Munsif of Iswar-gunj, dated the 10th of January 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Appellant.—The *raiya*t was in possession of a non-transferable occupancy holding. He purported to transfer it by two documents and so the landlord was entitled to claim re-entry. The landlord can have khas possession under the circumstances, in spite of the fact that the *raiya*t lived on the land up to his death. Of the aforesaid holding one portion was transferred by hiba bil ewaz and the other by sale. The learned Subordinate Judge says that the hiba-bil ewaz was not a sale but a gift for exchange. I submit it is not so and the landlord can come in. Hiba-bil ewaz is a sale. As there is a sale of the entire holding, the landlord can certainly come in. The learned Subordinate Judge says there was no transfer of the entire holding. And further as the transferees are in possession, no delivery of possession is at all necessary. The moment the *raiya*t has transferred his holding, the landlord can get khas possession. The transfer is operative between parties, but it does not bind the landlord.

Babu Kali Kinkar Chakerbutty, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—I think in this case the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court is correct, although all the reasons that he has given may not appear to be sound. The question turns on this: did the landlord acquire a right of re-entry to a non-transferable occupancy holding? The landlord's right of re-entry is supposed to have arisen by reason of Abdul, the tenant, having executed two documents, one in favour of his wife and the other in favour of his daughter. The facts found were these: That notwithstanding these two documents, Abdul remained on the holding and resided at the house erected on a portion thereof down to the date of his death. He died on this holding. At that time his wife and daughter were living with him and, therefore, immediately on Abdul's death, his wife and daughter became entitled to the property as his heirs and the mere fact that he purported to give them two invalid documents during his lifetime did not alter the character of their possession. Their possession was a lawful possession and one which the landlord was not entitled to disturb. I think the decision arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge is correct. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

CUMING, J.—I agree.

Civil revision against the decision of the Munsif, Ghazipur, dated the 26th August 1918.

Mr. K. K. Varma, for the Applicants.

Mr. S. N. Mukerjee, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that the plaintiffs-opposite party in this case brought a suit for pre-emption and on the 30th of May 1918 got a decree. According to the decree the plaintiffs were liable to pay a sum of Rs. 100, and the decree provided that in default of payment within one month from the date of the decree the suit should stand dismissed. It is also apparent that the decree awarded a sum of Rs. 9 odd to the plaintiffs by way of costs payable by the defendants. What followed was this: Within the prescribed period of one month the plaintiffs deposited a sum of Rs. 99. Why this sum was deposited is not altogether clear, but for the purpose of deciding this case it is not necessary to examine this question. Later on it was noticed that the full amount of Rs. 100 mentioned in the decree as the purchase-money had not been deposited. On the 26th of August 1918 the plaintiffs made an application to the Court praying for extension of the time in order that the deficit of one rupee might be paid into Court. The lower Court thereupon passed an ex parte order extending the time. The Court professed to act under section 151 of the Code.

This application has been filed here for the purpose of obtaining a revision of the lower Court's order. A preliminary objection was raised to the hearing of this application on the ground that the order of the first Court was appealable, but in view of the Full Bench decision reported as Suranjan Singh v. Rambahal Lal (1) this argument cannot prevail. It was there held that an order such as has been passed by the Court below in the present case was not appealable and could only be made the subject of revision. There is no bar, therefore, to the entertaining of this application. The other question is whether the order of the Court below can be disturbed in revision. It has indeed been held in various cases in this Court that, in cases where a decree for pre-emption is passed in the terms laid down in Order XX, rule 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not open to the Courts to extend the time fixed for payment. That principle was laid down in Suranjan Singh v. Ram Bahal Lal (2) and was affirmed by the Full Bench ruling to which I have already referred. It has, however, been argued here that although the plaintiffs pre-emptors deposited only a sum of Rs. 99 within the period fixed, there was nevertheless a full compliance with the direction contained in the decree, and it is sought to make good this argument by referring to the fact that under the decree the plaintiffs were entitled as against the defendants to a sum of Rs. 9 odd by way of costs. The learned Counsel for the opposite party has referred me to several cases in support of this contention. One of these is mentioned as Bechai Singh v. Shami Nath (3). It was a case decided by Mr. Justice Banerji on the 25th of April 1911. I have had the record of the case before me. It is Second Appeal No. 91 of 1911 [Bechai Singh v. Shami Nath (3)]. It was there held by Banerji, J., in accordance with other rulings of this Court that in a case like the present where the pre-emptor plaintiff was entitled to costs, he was entitled to deduct any portion of the purchase-money unpaid from the amount of costs owing to him. It follows, therefore, that this principle has been accepted and it must be held in the present case that the plaintiffs complied substantially with the terms contained in the decree. I observe that this ruling of Mr. Justice Banerji was affirmed in Letters Patent Appeal on the 27th of July 1911. I have also been referred to another ruling of a Bench of this Court to be found reported as Ali Husain v. Amin Ullah (4). There it was laid down that where a pre-emptor deposited in Court the sum he was required to pay by the decree to the vendee less the costs awarded to him, he had completely complied with the order of the Court. In this ruling the decision of Mr. Justice Banerji to which I have referred above was quoted. It seems to me, therefore, that on the authority of these cases it is not possible for me to hold in favour of the applicants here that there was a failure to comply with the terms of the decree and that being so, it is not competent to me to interfere with the order of the Court below, although it may be that the Munsif was not, as a matter of law, entitled to extend the time and pass the order which he actually passed. If it appears that there was substantial compliance with the terms of the decree, then the order ought to be allowed to stand although it may be conceded to be wrong in form. The result is that I dismiss this application with costs to the opposite party.

Application dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B. C. of 1885), s. 52—Landlord and tenant—Rent, abatement of—Tenant, whether includes one of several tenants—One of several tenants, whether can claim abatement of rent—Appeal, abatement of.

It is not open to one of many tenants to claim abatement of rent without making all the joint landlords and his co-sharers in the tenancy parties to the suit. [p. 397, col. 2.]

The expression 'tenant' in section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not include the case of a mere co-sharer tenant who has only a fractional share in the tenure: it means the tenant of the tenure and not one of many tenants. [p. 397, col. 2.]

In a suit for rent by some co-sharer landlords the tenant defendants claimed abatement of rent, and their claim was allowed by the Court of first instance. On appeal by the landlords the lower Appellate Court reversed that decree and held that the defendants were not entitled to an abatement of rent as all the landlords were not parties to the suit. Against that decision the tenant defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court during the pendency of which one of the tenants died, and his legal representatives were not brought on the record:

Held, that in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased tenant-appellant the remaining tenants were not entitled to claim abatement of rent, and that consequently the whole appeal abated. [p. 397, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 18th June 1912, reversing that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Uluberia, dated the 16th March 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Monmathanath Roy (with him Babu Jamini Ranian Mookerji), for the Appellants.—I submit that the whole case should abate, as one of the legal representatives of the defendants was not made a party to the suit though he died more than six months ago. Bhosai v. Aminuddin (1).

Babu Broja Lal Chuckerbutty, for the Respondents.—The case reported as Bhoopendra Narain Dutt v. Romon Krishna Dutt (2) was a case under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but here the claim depends upon the contract between the parties. My submission is that the appeal does not abate.

Babu Manmathanath Roy, in reply.—Here all the tenants are parties and the effect of the death of one of them has vitiated the appeal.

Bhoopendra Narain Dutt v. Romon Krishna Dutt (2) is the only authority against me but that is distinguishable.

Refers to Bhosai v. Aminuddi (1).

JUDGMENT.—One of the defendants-appellants died more than six months ago, and no application was made for the substitution of his legal representatives. That being so, the appeal abates so far as that appellant is concerned.

The question, however, is whether the whole appeal must fail by reason of the abatement of the appeal with respect to one of the appellants.

The appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent instituted by some co-sharer landlords against the tenants. The tenant defendants claimed abatement of rent. That was allowed by the Court of first instance. On appeal by the landlords, the lower Appellate Court reversed that decree and held that the defendants were not entitled to an abatement of rent as all the landlords were not parties to the suit. Against that decision of the lower Appellate Court, the present appeal was preferred.

As stated above, one of the tenants (who were the appellants) died and his legal representatives were not substituted. That being so, the question to be considered is whether the remaining tenants are entitled now to claim abatement of rent. Upon that question, we may refer to the case of Bhoopendra Narain Dutt v. Romon Krishna Dutt (2) where the learned Judges pointed out that "the expression 'tenant' in section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not include the case of a mere co-sharer tenant who has only a fractional share in the tenure, it means the tenant of the tenure and not one of many tenants". We entirely agree with the view taken in that case. If it were otherwise, it would be open to every co-sharer landlord and every co-sharer tenant to litigate the question of abatement of rent in separate suits and would result, as pointed out in that case, in "much confusion and almost endless litigation." As observed by Mr. Justice Banerjee, "there is no real hardship in the case so far as the tenant defendant is concerned. It is always open to him to bring a suit for abatement of a rent, making all the joint landlords and his co-sharers in the tenancy parties to the suit."

The learned Pleader for the appellants relied upon some observations in the case of Bhosai v. Aminuddi (1). That was not a suit for abatement of rent but a suit for recovery of rent by a co-sharer landlord under a kabuliat. The other co-sharer landlord was made a pro forma defendant. The plaintiff prayed that the pro forma defendant might be joined as plaintiff if she desired to do so and a decree might be passed for the entire rent if it was found that the rent due to her was still left unpaid on taking additional Court-fee from the plaintiff. There was no question of any excess area or of fresh adjustment of rent inconsistent with the terms of the original tenancy. The rate of rent was fixed for the whole area at the inception of the tenancy and the tenant agreed to pay rent for the entire lands on the happening of the contingency mentioned in the kabuliat. The suit was really to recover rent upon an ascertainment of the rent payable in accordance with the terms of the original letting, and it was held that the case did not come within section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but was maintainable under the general law, as the co-sharer landlord Possession, title by, nature of—Possessory title, whether heritable.

A person in possession of property, however imperfect his title may be, has good title as against the whole world, except the true owner, and such title is capable of descending by inheritance to his heirs. Until the true owner comes forward to assert a claim to the property, such heirs are entitled to continue in possession. [p. 399, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 18th May 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. Ibin-i-Ahmad, for the Appellants.—Admittedly Musammât Muhammadi Begam was in possession of the property till her death, whether she was rightful owner or not does not affect the case. Had the defendants been the real owners they would have been justified in ousting the plaintiffs and obtaining possession. It is found by the Courts below that the defendants are not real owners. That being so, they are not entitled to dispossess the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs under the circumstances are entitled to get back the possession from the defendants.

The heirs of the last person in possession of the property have got good title against the whole world except the real owner and can claim possession. It was also submitted that such title, however imperfect, was heritable and transferable. Reliance was placed on various authorities.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad (with him Mr. Mangal Prasad Bhargava), for the Respondents, submitted that it was the Revenue Court which ordered mutation of names and that the order should not be set aside. He further submitted that the purchasers from Rustam Khan were bona fide purchasers and their possession should not be disturbed. He referred to section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal, in my opinion, must prevail. The facts may be briefly stated as follows:—The dispute relates to a small parcel of Zemindari property which admittedly belonged at one time to a lady called Muhammadi Begum. She died in the year 1911.

It is now admitted that before her death, that is to say, in the year 1907, Muhammadi Begam made a gift of her property to two persons, Inayat Khan and Rustam Khan. Rustam Khan is the principal defendant-respondent in this appeal.

According to the finding of the lower Appellate Court the history of Inayat Khan and Rustam Khan is this:—They were foundlings who were discovered in the Bazar at Peshawar by the husband of this lady Muhammadi Begum. They were brought to Muhammadi Begum's house and were reared as her children, she having no children of her own. It is found, however, that there was no blood relationship between Inayat Khan and Rustam Khan.

Inayat Khan died in 1909 and at the time of his death he had become the owner by gift of the property now in dispute. Claims for mutation in respect to this property were put forward by Muhammadi Begam on the one hand and by Rustam Khan on the other hand. The Revenue Court decided in favour of Muhammadi Begam, and the property continued to be recorded in her name down till the time of her death in the year 1914. After the death of the lady there was another dispute regarding mutation. The present plaintiffs-appellants Bazmir Khan and others claimed mutation on the ground that they were legal heirs to the estate of Muhammadi Begam. Rustam Khan, the principal respondent, also claimed as an heir on the ground that he was the brother of Inayat Khan and was the true owner. The result of this dispute was that the Revenue Court awarded mutation in favour of Rustam Khan, and so we have the present suit in which the plaintiffs claiming as heirs of Muhammadi Begam came into Court and asked for recovery of possession. The BAZMIR BHAN V. RUSTAM KHAN.

Courts below have dismissed the plaintiffs' claim.

I have already referred to the fact that the story put forward by Rustam Khan that he was the brother of Inayat Khan and consequently his heir has been exploded. It is clear, therefore, that Rustam Khan has no right to this property on the ground that he is an heir of Inayat. On the other hand, it is admitted that the plaintiffs are the rightful heirs of Muhammadi Begam. The learned Judge of the Court below, however, has taken a peculiar view of the case. He says in his judgment that after the death of Inayat Khan who had acquired this property by gift, Muhammadi Begam had no right to possession of the property and consequently as she had no right and as Rustam Khan has no right to the property, it has escheated to Government; and so he says that the plaintiffs, although he finds them to be the rightful heirs of Muhammadi Begam, have no claim to be put in possession on the ground that Muhammadi Begam had no title to the property herself. It is clear that this opinion of the lower Appellate Court is wrong. While it may be the case that Muhammadi Begam had no title as heir to this property after the death of Inayat Khan, it is nevertheless clear that she was at least in possession without title and her possessory title was capable of being disposed of either by transfer or by inheritance. The law on this subject has been well settled and I need not refer to the long series of authorities. The case specially relied upon by the learned Counsel for the appellants is reported as Gobind Prasad v. Mohan Lal (1). That case followed the well known case of Asher v. Whitlock (2). Another case has been referred to in this connection, an unreported case, Second Appeal No. 1399 of 1913 decided by Sander Lal, J., on the 3rd of July 1914. There can be no doubt that at the time of her death Muhammadi Begam had a title which though perhaps imperfect was nevertheless capable of descending by inheritance to her heirs, who are the plaintiffs, and until the true owner of this property comes forward to assert a claim, the heirs of Muhammadi Begam are entitled to possession. I say nothing regarding the rights of Government in this matter. If the property has escheated to Government, it can come forward and assert its claim if so advised. All that is necessary to say here is that Rustam Khan, who has no title of any kind to the property, cannot be maintained in possession to the exclusion of the plaintiffs who are the heirs of Muhammadi Begam.

The learned Counsel for the respondents in arguing his case referred to the provisions of section 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. I take it that his intention was to suggest that the defendants in this case other than Rustam Khan were entitled to be maintained in possession notwithstanding the status of the plaintiffs as heirs of Muhammadi Begam. Their case was that they were bona fide purchasers for value from Rustam Khan whose name was entered in the khewat. That plea is no answer to the plaintiffs' case. If Rustam Khan had no title whatever to this property, he could not by sale or otherwise convey any title to this property to other defendants. As to section 41, it cannot help the case of these defendants purchasers, unless indeed they could show that there was something in the conduct of the present plaintiffs entitling them to say that their purchase could not be avoided by the plaintiffs. Section 41 covers the case of the transfer of property by an ostensible owner, that is to say, by a person who has been in ostensible possession with the consent express or implied, of the true owner. No such case can be set up here, however, for in view of the facts which have been set out before, there is nothing to suggest that the present plaintiffs ever stood aside and consented, either expressly or by implication, to Rustam Khan's holding himself out as the owner of this property. On the contrary it was shown that they fought with Rustam Khan in the mutation Court and lost their case there. No question of consent, express or implied, arises and so section 41 has no application. I have dealt now with all the points which have been raised in the course of argument and the result is that I find in favour of the plaintiffs and the suit will accordingly be decreed with costs in all the three Courts, including in this Court Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 110, 149—Appeal, dismissal of, for insufficiency of Court-fee—Affirmation of decree of lower Court—Leave to appeal to Privy Council—Substantial question of law—Refusal to allow deficiency of Court-fee to be made up, whether question of law.

A decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal on account of insufficiency of Court-fee is one affirming the decree of the 1st Court within the meaning of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

A refusal by the High Court to show any indulgence under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, and allow the deficiency in Court-fee to be made good is not a question of law within the meaning of section 110, Civil Procedure Code.

Petition, under Order XLV, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, against the judgment and decree passed on 7th April 1919 by this Court in Civil Appeal No. 285 of 1919, printed as 53 Ind. Cas. 256.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain, for the Petitioners.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., and Mr. M. L. Furi, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In this case plaintiffs' suit was dismissed by the first Court and an appeal to this Court was dismissed on the ground that the memorandum of appeal bore insufficient Court-fee, the Court-fee payable on appeal being obviously the same as in the first Court. It was held that considering the general circumstances and in view of the absence of any bona fide mistake the Court would not in its discretion under section 149, Civil Procedure Code, allow the deficiency to be made up on the day of hearing. Against this decision a petition is preferred for leave to appeal to their Lordships of the Privy Council. The petition is contested on the ground that the decree of this Court affirmed the decision of the lower Court and that the appeal did not involve any substantial question of law. Counsel for the petitioners contended in a lukewarm fashion, with no authority to support him, that the dismissal of an appeal on account of insufficiency of Court-fee did not amount to the affirmation of the decree of the first Court and that a question of law was involved in the refusal by this Court to allow any indulgence under section 149. On the other hand, Counsel for the respondents cited Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (1) and Ram Karan v. Madhukar Prasad (2) as authorities that the judgment of this Court dismissing the appeal must be considered as one affirming the decision of the Court below. Counsel for the respondents also referred to Krishnasami Panikondar v. Ramasami Chettiar (1), Muhammad Abdul Ghafur Khan v. Secretary of State for India (3) and Bhagat Singh v. Jai Ram (4) as instances in which similar petitions were held not to involve any substantial question of law. We have no hesitation in holding that the decree of this Court affirmed the decision of the lower Court, and that the appeal to the Privy Council does not involve any substantial question of law.

Counsel for the petitioners in ground 4 (c) of the petition asks for decision whether the Court fee was correctly levied in the first Court. We may note in this connection that no objections on this point were made against the order of the first Court either in that Court or in the grounds of appeal to this Court. The petition, moreover, does not even now contest the correctness of the order of the first Court. The point is clearly not one of those at issue.

For the reasons given above we dismiss the petition with costs.

Section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code is a penal section and must be construed strictly. Words ought not to be introduced into it which would extend the liability to pay compensation to any person beyond the actual complainant or person who gives the information on which the case is instituted.

Per Pratt, J. C.—"Information" in section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code is limited to the information given and entered in the cognizable register under section 154 of the Code.

Application for revision against the order of the Court of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Applicants.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

KEMP, A. J. C.—This is an application in revision against the order of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, ordering the applicants each to pay a fine of Rs. 50 to the accused under section 250, Criminal Procedure Code.

It transpired that the information report of offences under section 454 and 380, Indian Penal Code, against the accused was made by a City Police Constable No. 69, who acted on the false information of the applicants that the accused had committed the offences. The applicants gave the information to him as witnesses. The case was not instituted within the meaning of section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, upon their information to the Sub Inspector but upon the information of the Police constable. The applicants are not, therefore, the persons against whom an order of compensation under section 250 can be passed.

It is, however, contended that the information given by the applicants was information given to a person who was by law bound to transmit it to the proper authority to institute criminal proceedings against the accused, and reliance is placed upon the Full Bench case of Sessions Judge Tinnevelly v. Sivan Chetty (1) in support of that contention. It is to be noted, however, that in Sessions Judge, Tinnevelly v. Sivan Chetty (1) one of the three Judges, who constituted the Full Bench, dissented from the view there adopted, and the earlier ruling of the Madras High Court in Ohinna Ramana Gowd v. Emperor (2) was against the view adopted by the majority of the Judges constituting the Full Bench in Sessions Judge, Tinnevelly v. Sivan Chetty (1). Now section 250, Criminal Procedure Code, is a penal section and must be construed strictly. There is, therefore, no authority for introducing into it words which would extend the liability to pay compensation to any person beyond the actual complainant or person who gives the information on which the case is instituted, i. e., the Police constable in this case. I think the point is not free from doubt, but I incline to the view that the order of the learned Additional City Magistrate is wrong.

Under the circumstances, it is unnecessary to discuss the other objections that have been taken to the order. I would, therefore, reverse the order of the learned Magistrate and direct the amount, if paid, to be refunded.

PRATT, J. C.—I agree. The word 'information' in section 250 is, I think, limited to the information given and entered in the cognizable register under section 154, Criminal Procedure Code. We have held in Emperor v. Sumar (3) that a person who abets the giving of information to the Police cannot be dealt with under section 250, and similarly a person who gives information on which such information is recorded is not within the section.

As pointed out by my learned colleague, the section is a penal section and should be construed strictly. The wider construction would enable the Magistrate to order compensation to be paid by a person who Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 361—Lawful guardian, who is—Person in temporary charge, whether lawful guardian—Hindu Law—Minor—Nearest male, whether entitled to custody of minor girl.

For the purposes of the First Explanation to section 361 of the Penal Code, a person in temporary charge of a minor cannot be regarded as the lawful guardian, as against the guardian at civil law. [p. 403, col. 2.]

The fact that a person happens to be the nearest major male relative of a minor girl does not, under the Hindu Law, give him an absolute right to the custody of the girl. [p. 404, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 3rd of July 1919, convicting the appellants under section 366 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing them to three years' rigorous imprisonment.

Mr. J. M. Banerji, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

DALAL, J.—Sital Prasad, Ram Sawarath and Ram Tawakkal, Brahmans by caste, have appealed from their conviction of an offence under section 366, Indian Penal Code. The charge against them was one of kidnapping a minor girl, Musammât Rajpatia, eight years of age, from the custody of her lawful guardian, Musammât Chanderkali, in order to compel her to marry a person against her will. The willingness or otherwise of a minor Hindu girl to marry a particular person is not a matter for consideration at the time of her marriage, so it will be difficult to make a distinction between a marriage by the agency of a kidnapper and a marriage with the help of her relations so far as her own personal desire and consent are concerned. This, however, is a point of small significance, because in the event of the taking away of the girl being proved the persons found guilty of kidnapping her would be guilty of an offence under section 363, Indian Penal Code, which provides for a substantial punishment. Musammât Rajpatia is a sister of Musammât Chanderkali's deceased husband Bikarmajit, and her father and the father of Ram Tawakkal, appellant, were own brothers. The fathers of both Musammât Rajpatia and Ram Tawakkal are dead. There are two minor brothers of Musammât Rajpatia alive. The case for the prosecution was that the three appellants went to the apartment of Musammât Chanderkali on the night of the 28th of April last, picked up the minor girl Musammât Rajpatia who was sleeping by her aunt's side and ran away, that the appellants were pursued by the villagers, who caught the appellants Sital Prasad and Ram Sawarath, and that these two appellants were promptly taken to the Police Station Bamnion, where a report was made by Musammât Chanderkali at 7 A. M. on the 29th of April. It was said that Ram Tawakkal made good his escape and that the appellants put down or let go the hold of the minor girl when they were pursued and before they were caught at a short distance from the girl's house. Ram Tawakkal surrendered himself in the Magistrate's Court on the 14th of May, when he presented to the Court a written statement charging the other appellants with the crime of kidnapping. This defence he subsequently abandoned for one in line with that of the other appellants. The other appellants, who are brothers and residents of Sirauli, a village at some distance from Pariat where Ram Tawakkal, the minor girl and Musammât Chanderkali lived, have throughout the proceedings put forward a consistent story. They stated that the girl's marriage was settled to take place with their younger brother, Ram Prasad; that the agreement was entered into with Ram Tawakkal, who acted on behalf of Musammât Chanderkali, on a consideration of Rs. 200 to be paid to Musammât Chanderkali by these two appellants; that Rs. 100 had been previously paid to Musammât Chanderkali by the hand of Ram Tawakkal, and that on the 28th of April in the afternoon these appellants went to the village of Pariat to the house of Musammât Chanderkali and Ram Tawakkal with the balance of the money to fetch the minor girl by way of a dola ceremony of marriage. They added that at the house further negotiations took place between them and Musammât Chanderkali, on whose behalf the prosecution witness Ram Das was the spokesman at the time; that she demanded payment of an additional sum of Rs. 100 over and above the amount agreed upon between the parties and that on their refusal to submit to this exaction, a false charge of kidnapping was got up against them. I have read the evidence on the record and considered the circumstances of the alleged arrest of the appellants Sital Prasad and Ram Sawarath. I am satisfied that the prosecution story of the taking away of the girl is false. If the appellants had laid a plan for the carrying away of the girl, it is not likely that they would have been caught so easily after a short pursuit on a dark night. To all accounts the appellants had a good start, because the villagers first went to the house of Musammât Chanderkali, discovered from her in which direction the kidnappers had gone and then started in pursuit. The prosecution witness Jagerdeo made in the Committing Magistrate's Court an incredible statement that Sital Prasad appellant dragged the girl along as he ran, as if a small child of six could not be carried by the appellants. It must be remembered that the appellants are all men of under thirty-five years of age. The prosecution witness Sukhnandan deposed in the Court of the Committing Magistrate that Sital Prasad and Ram Sawarath appellants were caught with the girl. Obviously when the enquiry prior to commitment was proceeding, all the details of an imaginary occurrence were not settled and this conflict of testimony, subsequently removed in the Sessions Court, confirms me in my distrust of the prosecution story based on its improbability. It is probable that Ram Tawakkal may himself have desired a share in the money which was to be extorted from the other appellants. I am not concerned with that aspect of the case. What I believe is that the appellants Sital Prasad and Ram Sawarath have in the main told the truth. Musammât Chanderkali is not without friends to help her. The prosecution witness Ram Das is a partisan of hers and the girl, Musammât Rajpatia, has deposed that on the way to the Police Station they stopped at the house of a presumably influential man of the locality, Munshi Adya Saran. I hold that there was no taking away of the minor girl from the custody of Musammât Chanderkali. The charge, therefore, fails and the appellants are entitled to an acquittal. A learned Judge of this Court referred this case to a Bench on a point of law raised by the appellants' learned Counsel during argument. It was argued that Ram Tawakkal was the guardian of the girl under the law applicable to Hindus in this Province, and that, therefore, the taking away of the girl by him and his associates from the custody of Musammât Chanderkali did not amount to kidnapping as defined in section 361, Indian Penal Code. I would accept the inference of law under the Indian Penal Code, if Ram Tawakkal were proved to be the girl's guardian under the Hindu Law. The First Explanation to section 361, Indian Penal Code, which defines lawful guardian, extends the accepted definition of these words under the civil law governing the minor. The definition does not exclude the person who would be the minor's guardian under the civil law applicable to the minor. This precaution of extending the meaning of the words lawful guardian under the criminal law was taken to preclude persons other than the civil law guardian from raising the technical plea that the legal relation of ward and guardian did not exist between the minor and the person from whose actual custody the minor may happen to be taken away. The person in temporary charge of the minor cannot, however, take advantage of this definition given in the First Explanation to section 361, Indian Penal Code, as against the guardian at civil law. If I had been satisfied that Ram Tawakkal was the guardian of the minor girl Musammât Rajpatia at civil law, I would not have enquired further into this case. Such a relationship would have saved him and the other appellants from prosecution under section 363, Indian Penal

In re KARUPPIAH PILLA.

Code, even in the case of the taking away of the girl being proved. I am of opinion that Ram Tawakkal is not the guardian of Musammatt Rajpatia under the Hindu Law. "There was not, even before the passing of Act VIII of 1890, any one other than the father or mother who had an absolute right to the custody of a Hindu minor. This was decided in the case of Kristo Kissor Neoghy v. Kadermoye Dossee (1)," [Trevelyan and Stevens, JJ.], Musammatt Bhikuo Koer v. Musammatt Ohamela Koer (2)]. Under the Hindu Law Ram Tawakkal has not an absolute right to the custody of Musammatt Rajpatia on the sole ground that he happens to be the nearest major male relation of the girl. It was open to the defence to prove that Ram Tawakkal was appointed a guardian either by a Court of law or by the brotherhood or that he had actually assumed such responsibility without any objection being raised by the blood relations or by the brotherhood. If such proof had been forthcoming, it could have been presumed that Musammatt Chanderkali had custody of the girl Rajpatia in the capacity of an agent of Ram Tawakkal. There is no such proof on the record. At the trial it was abundantly proved that Musammatt Chanderkali acted and was acknowledged as the guardian of the minor girl, and not Ram Tawakkal. Ram Tawakkal is separate from the minor children of his uncle and the guardianship of the children has been undertaken by Musammatt Chanderkali the eldest and only major member of the divided family, using the word family in its general sense and not in the restricted sense of a collection of males under the Hindu Law. That such is the fact is indicated even by the nature of the defence set up by the appellants. The defence of the appellants Sital Prasad and Ram Sawarath was that the marriage negotiations were carried on between them and Musammatt Chanderkali who acted through her agent Ram Tawakkal. It was never suggested that Ram Tawakkal had consented to the marriage and that such consent was sufficient for the performance of the marriage contract. Ram Tawakkal himself, when he surrendered in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, tried to save himself by taking the part of Musammatt Chanderkali. On the facts, therefore, I would set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the three appellants.

PIEGOTT, J.—I concur generally, and more particularly with regard to the facts. The appellants were in this difficulty, that Ram Tawakkal was never frank with the Court and that Counsel on his behalf eventually took up a position, at least by way of an alternative defence in this Court, which had never been suggested in the Court below, as regards the two appellants other than Ram Tawakkal, I have no doubt that, whatever they did (and I do not believe they did precisely what the prosecution witnesses have stated), was done in the bona fide belief that the consent of Musammatt Chanderkali had been obtained to the proposed marriage of the minor girl.

Ram Tawakkal's plea that, even on the findings of fact recorded by the learned Sessions Judge, he was entitled to an acquittal, labours under this difficulty, that his own defence in the trial Court involved a virtual admission of Musammatt Chanderkali's position as the de facto guardian of the minor. I am, however, satisfied that, on the existing state of the record, it is impossible to feel sufficient confidence in the prosecution evidence to find any of the appellants guilty.

BY THE COURT.—We accept the appeals of all three appellants, set aside the conviction and sentence against them, and acquit them of the offence. As they have been released on bail, their security bonds will be discharged.

Appeal accepted.

423—Magistrate, failure of, to write proper judgment —Appeal - Procedure.

Where in an appeal to the Court of Session, the Judge finds that the Magistrate has not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of section 367 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the correct procedure is to accept the appeal and to remand the case for hearing de novo. Section 423 of the Code does not authorise the retention of an appeal on the file of the Sessions Judge when asking for a judgment which the Magistrate has failed to record. [p. 406, col. 1.]

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Sessions Judge, Madura, in Criminal Appeal No. 2 of 1919, preferred against the order of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Melur Division, in Calendar Case No. 61 of 1918, transferred from the Court of the 2nd Class Magistrate, Madura, in Calendar Case No. 171 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. T. Richmond, for the Petitioners.—The Sub-Divisional Magistrate acted contrary to law in simply passing sentence when the case was sent up to him for orders under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code. He should have written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of section 367. His functions under section 349 are not narrowed to the mere recording of sentence. He has larger powers. The whole case is open before him. It was quite open to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to find the accused not guilty or that the case was not a fit one for proceeding under section 106. He was bound to hear the accused.

The Sessions Judge, who first heard the appeal, should have quashed the conviction and remanded the case for a de novo trial. He had no powers under section 423 to retain the case on his file.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—Under section 349, Criminal Procedure Code, the Divisional Magistrate need only pass sentence. The wording of the section indicates that the writing of a separate judgment is unnecessary. In any event there is no case for interference by the High Court in revision, as Mr. Booty, the Sessions Judge, has examined the facts fully and has come to the conclusion that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was right.

ORDER.—There is something more than a mere technicality in the objection raised by Mr. Richmond in the petition. Originally the case was tried by the 2nd Class Magistrate of Madura but he, having been of opinion that the deceased should be required to execute bonds under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, sent the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Melur under section 349, Criminal Procedure Code. The reason given by the 2nd Class Magistrate for submitting the proceedings to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate are: "The accused have created serious disturbance by taking the law into their own hands and their object in forcibly entering into the temple is to establish their rights. I find the accused Nos. 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8 guilty of the offences under sections 147 and 323, Indian Penal Code. I think that the accused are likely to commit further breaches of the peace and I am of opinion that they ought to be required to execute a bond for a heavy sum under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code. I, therefore, submit proceedings with records to the Divisional Magistrate, Melur, under section 349, Criminal Procedure Code." The Sub-Divisional Magistrate on receipt of the records simply passed sentence on the accused without writing any judgment. Thereupon there was an appeal to the Sessions Judge. Mr. Coleridge, who was then the Sessions Judge, passed this order: "I think the accused are entitled to a full judgment by the lower Court and I remand the case back to the District Magistrate to direct the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to write a full judgment dealing with the facts and the law." Apparently what the Sessions Judge did was to retain the appeal on his file and to ask for a fresh judgment from the Divisional Magistrate. That is clear from the entries in the diary of the Sessions Judge. When the papers went back to the Divisional Magistrate, he wrote a long judgment. Thereupon a day was fixed by Mr. Booty, Mr. Coleridge's successor, for hearing the appeal. Mr. Booty was of opinion that the procedure adopted by Mr. Coleridge was not right. He said that the absence of the conjunctive principle in section 349, Criminal Procedure Code, which speaks of "judgment, sentence or order" is an indication that all that the KANHAIYA LAL v. EMPEROR.

Divisional Magistrate need have done was to pass a sentence and to make up his mind whether the accused were guilty or not. In that the learned Sessions Judge is clearly wrong. The only limitation upon the powers of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under section 349 is that he should not inflict a more severe punishment than he is empowered to impose under sections 32 and 33, Criminal Procedure Code. On the papers being received from the 2nd Class Magistrate the Sub-Divisional Magistrate could have come to the conclusion that the accused were not guilty, he could have come to the conclusion that the accused should have been convicted of some other offence, he could have made up his mind that it was not a fit case for requiring the accused to execute a bond, all these things were open to him and he was bound to have exercised his independent judgment in the matter. It is not necessary that he should have written a lengthy judgment, especially as he had the judgment of the Subordinate Magistrate before him, but he ought to have written a judgment which should have conformed to the requirements of section 367, Criminal Procedure Code. In our opinion Mr. Booty was wrong in that the Divisional Magistrate was not bound to do anything more than to record sentence when the records were received from the 2nd Class Magistrate. After stating this Mr. Booty proceeded to examine the facts of the case, and he has come to the conclusion that the view taken by the Divisional Magistrate was right.

In this Court it is contended that the proper procedure which Mr. Coleridge should have adopted was to reverse the appeal and remand the case for hearing de novo to the Divisional Magistrate. We think that the learned Counsel is right in this contention. There is no power under section 423, Criminal Procedure Code, to retain the case on the file when asking for a judgment which the Magistrate has failed to record. The correct procedure to have adopted was to have disposed of the appeal and to have remanded the case to the Divisional Magistrate for hearing de novo. This not having been done, we must hold that there was no appeal legally on the file of the Sessions Judge which Mr. Booty could have disposed of. Under these circumstances we think we must set aside the order of the Sessions Judge and send the whole case back to the District Magistrate, with directions to send it to some other First Class Magistrate than the Sub-Divisional Magistrate (Mr. Meenakshisundaram) who tried the case.

It is desirable to point out, having regard to what took place before Mr. Meenakshisundaram, that, on remand, the accused are entitled to be heard and to satisfy the Magistrate, if they can, that there is no case against them.

Stamp Act (II of 1899), s. 62—Dishonest intention to evade payment of stamp duty—Offence—Intention, proof of.

In order to secure a conviction under section 62 of the Stamp Act there must be a dishonest intention to evade the payment of stamp duty. Where the facts and circumstances of a case show that there was no such intention, a conviction under that section is bad in law. [p. 407, col. 1.]

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 20th September 1919.

FACTS appear from the following Order of Reference by the Sessions Judge:—

Lala Hardeo Prasad, his wife Musammat Chandrawati and his minor son Sham Behari Lal, aged 4 years, with five others have been convicted under section 62 of the Indian Stamp Act and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 each. They have come to this Court in revision under section 437, Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts giving rise to the present conviction briefly stated are as follows:—

The above eight persons arranged to start a small bank, and with that object got the memorandum of association prepared by a local legal practitioner, B. Brij Nath, B.A., LL. B. The latter, having drafted the memorandum, despatched it to the Registrar, Joint Stock Companies, Lucknow, on the 8th May last. The ordinary practice is that the memorandum of association is first drafted, printed and then submitted to the Registrar for approval, as alterations and additions are generally made. In the present case the memorandum was typed and sent with a covering letter. It may be noted that the executants of this memorandum, obviously in order to make them sure and confident of the transaction, affixed their signatures to the document. The Registrar, finding the document duly signed, impounded it as he thought that it ought to have been engrossed on a stamp paper of Rs. 40. The matter was reported to the Collector, who made it over to the Stamp Officer for a report. This latter officer reported on the 13th of June 1919 that the stamp duty of Rs. 40 plus the penalty of Rs. 120 were already paid by the executants, but that they should be prosecuted under section 62 of the Stamp Act. The District Magistrate accepted this report and prosecution was started, which resulted in the conviction of the applicants.

Babu Brij Nath, Vakil, is a respectable person, and it is inconceivable how he should have sent the document as an original one. His evidence on the record shows that by sending it to the Registrar as it was he meant to obtain his approval before getting it faired out, printed and finally submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council for a licence as provided by a Special War Enactment. Even the trying Magistrate has found that the applicants never intended to evade payment of duty. In his opinion, however, intention of evading payment was not at all necessary for the purposes of section 62. In my opinion this view is wrong. The provision attached to section 43 of the Stamp Act is very clear. It lays down that after the payment of the deficiency and the penalty, if the Collector be of opinion that the stamp duty was evaded intentionally he may order prosecution. In this case it is obvious from the District Magistrate's report and the Collector's order that the latter never ruled that there was any dishonest intention to evade payment. The lower Court has refrained from coming to a finding as to the applicants' mala fides in this matter. It only relied on the sanction given by the Collector. No sooner the applicants were informed of the deficiency than they deposited the Rs. 40 and the penalty, Rs. 120, five times. It may be a case of mere oversight on the part of the Pleader who sent the papers to the Registrar, and the applicants do not seem to be in any way liable. At any rate, the minor applicant Sham Bihari, who too has been fined Rs. 30, is not in any manner responsible, vide section 83 of the Indian Penal Code. Under the circumstances I think that the prosecution and conviction both are unwarranted by law. The exaction of Rs. 120 as penalty was quite sufficient to safeguard the interest of Government revenue. I would, therefore, recommend to the Hon'ble Court that the conviction and sentence be set aside and the fines, which have been paid, be refunded.

JUDGMENT.—I accept the reference of the learned Sessions Judge. For the reasons stated by him I set aside the convictions and sentences in this case and acquit the accused persons of the offences charged. The fines if paid will be refunded.

No riparian owner is entitled to obstruct a public river.

Revision against the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Gonda, dated the 11th January 1919.

Mr. R. F. Bahadurni, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. H. Thomas, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The order, the propriety of which is challenged here, required the applicants to remove a Band or dam constructed by them across the river Burha Rapti. The allegation of the complainant was that he held a lease of several villages down-stream and that the construction of the said dam had injured his crops. He further alleged that no such dam existed before. The applicants did not allege that the river was a private river. Their plea was that such dam used to be constructed whenever water was required for the purpose of irrigation and that the complainant had no right to have the dam removed.

The trying Magistrate came to the conclusion that the dam in question had been newly constructed, that no such dam existed there before and that its erection was tantamount to an unlawful obstruction of the river and caused damage to a large class of people. The trying Magistrate and the parties evidently treated the river as a public river, which no riparian owner was entitled to obstruct. The complainant alleged that he suffered damage by the obstruction and the trying Magistrate found that similar damage was possible to all the riparian owners down-stream. In these circumstances the order passed is thoroughly justified. The decision in Maharana Shri Jaswatsangji Fatesangji, In re (1) does not apply, because each riparian owner there claimed that the part of the stream adjoining his village was his private property. In Murad v. Emperor (2) there was a bona fide assertion on the part of one of the riparian owners of a right to divert the water, which flowed through the back-water of the river Chenab. From the finding arrived at here, namely, that the dam was new, it is difficult to say that there was a bona fide assertion of a right to obstruct the river, each riparian owner being entitled to its benefit.

The application is, therefore, rejected,

Upon an examination of the records of an insolvency proceeding the District Judge discovered that the insolvents and others had been guilty of fraudulent transfers. JUDGMENT.—The circumstances of this case are somewhat peculiar. Two persons Ramanand and Naurangi Lal applied in the Court of the District Judge of Gorakhpur to be declared insolvents as long ago as the 8th of October 1913 and were declared insolvents on the 26th of August 1914. A Receiver was appointed, who reported on the 31st of March 1915 that certain property, among others, in the possession of Mahadeo and Jagrup under the sale deed of the 1st of July 1911 was really the property of the insolvents and had been fraudulently transferred in order to defeat their creditors. The then District Judge of Gorakhpur found that the transfer was a fraudulent one, and this order was confirmed by the High Court on the 15th of May 1917 and the property was then sold by the Receiver. Some time in May 1919 it appears that the file of the insolvency case was before the present District Judge of Gorakhpur. There is a docket on the record before me, dated the 31st of May 1919, which was sent by the District Judge of Gorakhpur to the District Magistrate of Gorakhpur. It starts: "Sir, I have the honour to bring to your notice certain facts against Ramanand, son of Padarath, and Naurangi, son of Sheo Dihal, of Dhibra Police Station, Belghat, two insolvents, and Bindeshri Sahu, son of Nepal Sahu of Maghar, Ram Charan Sahu, son of Gajadhar of Manikpore, Police Station Rawanpar, District Azamgarh, Jagrup Sahu, son of Sheodihal, Mahadeo Sahu, son of Sheodihal, residents of Maghar, Police Station Khalilabad, in Basti District, transferees from them." It goes on to state various facts which apparently had come to the knowledge of the District Judge from the records of the insolvency case but which were not of course known to him personally, and it then sets out several transfers which appeared to him from the record to have been fraudulent. It goes on to say: "These fraudulent transfers, made with the intention of preventing the distribution of property according to law among the creditors of Ramanand and Naurangi, are offences under section 421, Indian Penal Code. Not more than three of these offences committed within one year can be tried at one trial. To simplify the case one transfer might be tried at one time. The strongest case is perhaps that of the transfer of July 11th 1911, whereby the shares in some seven villages were said to be transferred to Jagrup and his brother Mahadeo for Rs. 2,900, of which Rs. 800 was due under a prior book debt and Rs. 2,100 was paid before the Sub-Registrar. Ramanand and Naurangi made the transfer, and Jagrup and Mahadeo, to whom it was made, should be prosecuted for abetment." It goes on to give various other directions as to what evidence should be called and winds up as follows: "I have the honour to ask you to take proceedings against the persons named by me on charges under section 421, Indian Penal Code, and section 421/114, Indian Penal Code. The case is one of importance in the interest of commercial morality and should be enquired into or tried by an experienced Magistrate." It appears that on receipt of this document the learned District Magistrate transferred the case to the Court of the Joint Magistrate, Mr. York, who issued summons to the accused. They applied to this Court to quash the criminal proceedings and their application was admitted by a learned Judge of this Court, who ordered all proceedings to stay meanwhile. I do not understand under what section of the Criminal Procedure Code the District Judge of Gorakhpur made this report. It cannot have been made under the provisions of section 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, because that section does not apply to a charge under section 421, Indian Penal Code. Inasmuch as the learned District Magistrate seems to have regarded this as an order under section 476, I think all proceedings upto date must be quashed. But that does not end the matter. I am not prepared to hold that this document is not a "complaint" within the wide definition of the term in section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In this view of the matter it will be open to the District Magistrate to take such further action as he may be advised after having followed the procedure laid down in Chapter XVI of the Code. Let the papers be returned to the District Magistrate with a copy of my order.

MUTHU GOUNDAN v. EMPEROR.

228, 229—Sessions trial—Charge, material alteration in, at close of trial, legality of—Sessions Court, power of, exercise of—Prejudice to accused.

Where upon the trial of an accused person upon specific charges in a Court of Session, it is found at the conclusion of the trial that the charges as framed disclose no offence against the accused, it is illegal and prejudicial to the accused to alter or amend the charges and to convict him thereon without affording him an opportunity of meeting the altered or amended charges. The fact that the accused cross-examined the prosecution witnesses to prove the unsustainability of the charges as originally framed, is no ground for holding that by substantially altering the charges the accused was not prejudiced. [p. 41, col. 1.]

A Court of Session is not a Court of original jurisdiction, and, though vested with large powers of amending and adding to charges, can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal, and not with regard to matter not covered by the indictment. [p. 41, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against the order of the Court of the Sessions Judge, Salem District in Case No. 16 of the Calendar of 1919.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The Sessions Judge acted with material irregularity in altering the charges at the end of the trial. The alteration was in a material particular. The first charge framed was that the accused formed themselves into an unlawful assembly to annoy Muthu Goundan. The charge as amended was that the accused formed themselves into an unlawful assembly to beat Muthu Goundan. Similarly with respect to the other charges. The accused were certainly prejudiced by this alteration and they were given no opportunity to meet the altered charge.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—The accused knew what the real charge against them was. They cross-examined the prosecution witnesses to show that they did not take part in the assault. They were not prejudiced by the amendment. Even if the Sessions Judge acted in an irregular manner, it was not a material irregularity so as to vitiate the trial.

JUDGMENT.—We regret we are obliged to quash the entire proceedings in this case because of the procedure adopted by the learned Sessions Judge in altering the charge at the end of the trial. The prosecution case was that the deceased was returning from the field, where he had gone to do work, that he was waylaid by the accused and beaten to death and also that injuries were inflicted by the accused upon the mother and the brother of the deceased. The Committing Magistrate framed a charge in these terms:—

“That you (referring to 7 accused persons) on the 10th day of October 1918 at Kindrakola Manickam village were members of an unlawful assembly and prosecuting the common object of such assembly, viz., in waylaying and beating to death one Muthu Goundan, son of Kolandai Goundan, and causing grievous hurt to P. W. No. 1, namely, Palani Goundan son of Kolandai Goundan and causing grievous hurt to Chinna Pillai and his brother P. W. No. 2, daughter of Sengodian and thereby committed offences punishable under sections 147, 302, 325 and 145, Indian Penal Code.” Before the trial commenced the Sessions Judge split up this charge into six charges. The first is the most important of the charges. It was that, on the 10th day of October 1918, at Kondrakola Manickam “you formed yourselves into an unlawful assembly with the common object of annoying one Muthu Goundan, son of Kolandai.”

The second charge was “that at the same time and place you or some of you used force and violence to the said Muthu Goundan, his brother Palani Goundan and his brother Chinna Pillai in prosecution of the common object.” It is not necessary to refer to the other charges. The trial proceeded on these charges. At the end of the case when the defence Vakil argued that on the charges as framed no offences could be imputed to the accused, the learned Sessions Judge proceeded to alter them. The first charge was altered as follows:—

“That on the 10th day of October 1918 at Kondrakola Manickam you all formed yourselves into an unlawful assembly with the common object of beating one Muthu Goundan, son of Kolandai, and such other persons as might come to his help.” The second charge was altered as that “in the pursuance of the said common object at the same time and place you all used force and violence to the said Muthu Goundan son of Ramiah and the said Muthaya Pillai Goundan, to his brother Palani Goundan and his mother Chinnapillai.” The subsidiary charges were also altered.

The objection was taken before the Sessions Judge that these alterations were material and that the accused should not be convicted on these altered charges without
